But, says the objector, Jesus is frequently called God, not only in the Scriptures of the New Testament, but in the Book of Mormon, and if he is God, how can he have a Father who is also called God, unless there are more Gods than one? We answer, that so far as persons and substance are concerned, there are more Gods than one; but when we speak of their perfections, attributes, or nature, they are one. Jesus and the Father are two persons—two substances, but one in wisdom, one in power, one in glory. Jesus prayed that his disciples might be made one, as he and the Father are one. Now, if Jesus and the Father are one person, then if his prayer be answered, all his discipless will become one person, losing their individual identities. This would be a monstrous absurdity. Therefore, if his disciples retain their separate distinct identities, and yet are made perfect in one, even as the Father and Son are one, then it follows that the Father and Son are distinct persons as well as his disciples. If the oneness of the disciples consists, not in person, but in the nature of their power, and glory, and other perfections, then it must be in this sense alone, that the Father and Son are one; hence, there is one God, and only one, when we speak of the perfections and attributes, but there is a plurality of Gods, when we speak in reference to persons and substance.

Jesus says, they were called "Gods unto whom the word of God came;" and as there were a plurality of persons to "whom the word of God came," there must have been a plurality of Gods. Yet, all these inspired men or Gods, when they are exalted into the presence of God the Father and God the Son, will be one with them, not in person, but in glory and in concert of action, in the fulfilment of the great purposes of Jehovah. If according to the words of Jesus, inspired men, are Gods, there will be a great company of Gods redeemed from this creation, to say nothing of the countless myriads who have been redeemed from the infinity of worlds which have existed in the regions of endless space.

Both the Scriptures and the Book of Mormon represent Christ to be both the Father and Son. How, enquires the objector, can there be another person called the Father when Jesus is called Father! We reply, that Jesus is nowhere called his own Father, but he is called—"The Father,"—"The Eternal Father"—"The Everlasting Father"—The very eternal Father of heaven and of earth." There is no mystery in all these expressions, any more than there would be in calling Adam or any other man with a family, both Father and Son. Adam is truly the father of the fleshy bodies of all the human race, and he is also just as truly a son of God by creation; indeed Matthew calls Adam a "son of God." Therefore, Adam like every other man with a family, is both father and son. Because Adam was the father of the human family, this did not hinder him from being the son of another separate distinct personage called God: so likewise, because the spirit of Jesus, before he dwelt in the flesh, was the Father of the heaven and earth, by being its author and creator, this did not hinder him from having a Father of his own who was a distinct person from himself, as much so as every father and son.

The prophet Abinadi has beautifully illustrated this in a prediction relating to the first coming of Christ: he says. "God himself shall come down among the children of men, and shall redeem his people; and because he dwelleth in flesh, he shall be called the Son of God: and having subjected the flesh to the will of the Father, being the Father and the Son; the Father because he was conceived by the power of God; and the Son because of the flesh; thus becoming the Father and Son: and they are one God, yea, the very eternal Father of heaven and of earth; and thus the flesh becoming subject to the spirit, or the Son to the Father, being one God, suffereth temptations," &c. Here we have the reasons given why he was called the Father: it was "because he was conceived by the power of God" Among the great family of spirits, Jesus was "the first born of every creature." His spirit, being "conceived by the power of God" before the worlds were made, became the Father of the present heaven and earth, and afterwards came and dwelt in flesh, and became the Son. He subjected the flesh to the will of the spirit, or in other words, he subjected his own body of flesh, wherein he became the Son, to the will of the spirit that dwelt in it, which was called the Father, not the Father of himself, but the Father of Heaven and earth, by being its Author, Creator and Redeemer. The Father of this creation, in subjecting his own tabernacle of flesh to his own will, was at the same time subjecting both his body and spirit to the will of his Father who sent him. Thus, Jesus became both Father and Son, and at the same time, there was another being distinct from himself who was his Father, by whom he was conceived, and with whom he dwelt before the present order of creation existed.

He is called the "Everlasting" or "Eternal Father" because he will throughout all ages of eternity remain the Father of his own creations: hence the relationship of Father must be "everlasting" or "eternal." Though this relationship may have had a beginning—it can have no end. Many have supposed that the terms "everlasting" and "eternal" when applied to the Father, must be without beginning as well as without end, but this is not necessarily true; for our bodies of flesh and bones after the resurrection will endure forever, that is, they are everlasting and eternal bodies, yet they had a beginning; so with the New Heavens and the New Earth; they will have a beginning, but will have no end; they will be everlasting and eternal: so likewise, there was a time when the spirit of Jesus was begotten, and when he began to be the Father of this heaven and this earth, but there will never be an end to this relationship; hence it will be everlasting and eternal, having a beginning, but having no end.

Much more might be said, concerning the Father and Son, and the relation which they sustained to each other before the present worlds were made, and the relation which has since existed, and will continue to exist throughout all ages to come, but enough has been said to demonstrate beyond all successful controversy, that the Father and Son are two personages; no true believer in divine revelation, can very easily deny, these plain and pointed testimonies. With these remarks we close this brief article, praying that the word and Spirit of truth may enlighten every honest heart, that they may grow up in "the knowledge of things as they were, as they are, and as they are to come," until they are perfected and shall receive a fulness of the glory of the Father and the Son.

Never failing signs of Apostacy in this Church.

There are divers spirits abroad in the world, and it is our duty to try them by our own experience, by the word of God, and by the spirit of truth.

Among no other people will Satan appear in so many different shapes and forms to deceive as among our own. The reason is obvious. He dreads our power more than that of any other people, from the fact that his kingdom stands the most in danger from the united efforts of the Saints. He, therefore, ever has and ever will seek to divide us, that he may destroy his most potent enemy.

If he can succeed so far as to make a man believe that he has a priesthood so high and dignified that he cannot be called to an account for his course and conduct, know ye that he has gained a victory over that man that will force him to feel the weight of the Savior's words: "He that exalteth himself shall be abased." Whoever does not gather with the body and with the council, scatter abroad. It matters not how high their standing, or how responsible their calling. When you see a man that claims to have received great appointments and callings through men that are dead, and shun the instructions of the living who are duly authorized of Heaven and Earth to instruct, you see a sectarian who believes in the authority of dead apostles, but rejects the authority of living ones. When you see a man in high authority in the church that claims he is one with the Council, and does not meet with them, except when forced or constrained to do it, you may know that that man is a hypocrite, and speaks not the truth, neither the honest sentiments of his heart. When you see a man that has something wonderful to tell you, but wishes to conceal it from time to time, that he may learn more and more, and seems fearful to have his name known, know ye that that man lacks the independence of a Saint, and feels no permanent foundation within himself. Good Lord and good Devil, he knows not who will prevail, or into whose hands he may fall.

If a man has no compromise with that which is in the dark, let him shine in the full light of truth, in the councils of the Saints. If you know your neighbor's house to be on fire, will you suppress that knowledge till you get more light? Or will you raise the cry of fire at once, that the smallest spark may be extinguished before it is blown into a flame, and flies beyond your control.

The foregoing are symptoms of apostacy, and should be a warning to every honest heart to avoid all such influences.

We have men here who have been foiled, not in their attempts to do good, but in their attempts to exert an improper influence;—an influence injurious to the prosperity of the Church. These men may go to the Valley, and may think to exert an influence there that will create a rod for our back; when under other circumstance they never would have gone at all. Well, we are willing to take a few lashes for the sake of sending such persons where they can be kept within proper bounds.

There are some who would like to direct Br Hyde's pen when he writes: and they seem to feel wonderful, even if the feather of his quill happens to fan their brow. But Br. Hyde means no harm if he does say, that while he is an Editor, he will write about as his conscience directs him; with all due respect, however, for the wisdom of the wise. But when some of these very precise folks get to the Valley and lay in their complaints against Bro. Hyde, they will forget to tell what they themselves have done that caused Bro. Hyde to throw a shot ahead of them now and then, unless we remind them in season, not only to tell the truth, "but the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." But there are many true men that are going to the Valley who will tell the whole truth and that is all we ask. The person who will reap the benefits and blessings of this kingdom, will listen to and respect the advice and counsel of the authorities of the church here, and also in the Valley, without murmuring a great deal. They will do all they can to gather up and emigrate to the Salt Lake this spring and summer, and will spare no reasonable pains to consolidate the energies of the people and rally them round the lawful standard. They will not only set their faces towards Zion, but travel onward towards the city. But those whose faces and words are with the church and council, professedly, yet, like the crab, retreating backwards all the time, will soon drop into a muddy, watery hole; and will be out of sight.

The Mill-Dam Again.

Mr. Meeks feels much wronged by the loss of his mill-dam, &c. Last year there was some talk of pulling it down, and Mr. M. came to our Conference in April and wished to know the mind of the people concerning his mill and dam. He was then told that his mill-dam was not a matter that came under the jurisdiction of our conference; but so far as we were concerned as citizens, we should be pleased to have a mill there: but we could not take the responsibility of saying that he was at liberty to put one up in that section. The people residing in the immediate vicinity were the proper tribunal for him to appeal to. We were not likely to be injured by the flowing of a great quantity of land. Mr. Meeks, though not a member of our church, is a friendly and well disposed citizen and we are sure that it was out of no ill feelings towards him that his dam was torn down. The leaders and master spirits that concocted the job and executed it, were not Mormons, and we could not control their action.

However much we deplore what may be termed a mob, we cannot say that any people should suffer what they verily believe to be a cause of sickness and death in their midst, when there is no legal steps that they can take to remove the nuisance.

Our conscience will not allow us to bind such burdens upon men's shoulders that we should be unwilling to bear. If there are other causes that led to the deed, the people are less justifiable.

We heared that nothing would be done until Mr. Meeks was notified to be present. Mr. M. says that he was not notified; and that if he had been notified of their positive intention, he would have proposed some compromise.

We are sorry to see Mr. Meeks' property destroyed; for we believe him to be a worthy and good citizen. We know, at least, nothing to the contrary of him. [illegible] into our head that a mill-dam was the cause of sickness and death in our family and among our friends, we would either remove ourselves, or contrive some way to remove the dam. The people there may have been in favor of erecting the mill and dam, and even turned out, as good neighbors should do, and assisted in the work. But on experiencing the prejudicial influences that it had upon their health, they might have had just grounds and good cause to change their minds. But Mr Meeks ought to have been notified and pressed to be present before the work of destruction began, if he were not; and his terms of compromise heard.

Do You want to Sell Your Farm!

Yes! is the reply that is made by nearly all. Put it in good order then; have the fences permanent and strong, and make every thing about the premises look pleasing and prosperous. Spring is now about opening, much is depending, whether or not you sell your place on its being in good condition and nicely ornamented with growing crops of all kinds needed for man and beast. The holydays are over, and now the jolly lads may sing their song at the plow handles, and the merry maids may begin to make their butter and cheese—plant their flower gardens—perform the general duties of the domestic circle; and may take daily lessons on the old fashioned piano, too much despised in these genteel and fashionable times: We mean the spinning wheel. Animation, industry and reasonable perseverance in laudable and honorable pursuits tend to promote our health, prolong our days and to sweeten the cup of our earthly bliss. We may create the comforts of life around us, and be able to dispense a favor, now and then, to the worthy and honest poor, who, in turn, will bless our name and memory, and stamp success upon our future exertions. Nature seldom fails to reward those who lend a hand to aid her in her enterprises. Her productions exhale an odor which proves to be the essence of life and health to those who delight in her employment.

Tithing.

We wish it distinctly understood that we have been appointed agent by the Church in the Valley to collect and receive tithing; and we also have our instructions how to lay it out. It is not unfrequently the case that men are prevailed upon to lend their money, or to part with it on some principle to unauthorized persons. Your money is your own, and of course you are at liberty to dispose of it as you will: but if you wish to benefit the Church by tithing or by a donation, keep your money in your own hands till you come to this place and see the books and the documents for yourselves. It is expected that every man who emigrates to this place, and all that are here, who have hearts and purses that will allow them, to pay their tithing and to make their donations to the agent that is duly authorized to act in the premises.

The reason of our being thus particular is, because there are men running about borrowing and begging money here and there under the pretence of helping the poor and relieving the Church: when the truth is, they wish often to vest it in some wild and foolish or fanciful speculation that will do no good to themselves nor to any one else. We had sufficient experience in these matters, in the dissolution of the "English and American Joint Stock Company." That system made gluttons of the few and skeletons of the many; yet it was for the blessed poo:——to support the idle in luxury and extravagance.

Don't count the chickens too soon. Eggs may be hatched; but to count the chickens before they are hatched, is rather an ill omen, and portends disappointment and chagrin, according to the position of the stars in our horoscope. Never mind, it is a satisfaction to some men to learn that fire will burn their fingers if they only handle it; and to tax the industrous to support the idle is the way of the world. If men are too penurious to sacrifice to God, the devil then comes along with a scheme of speculation completely coated over with butter and honey, and the greedy and simple swallow it down at sight; but soon after complain of pain in the stomach. Look out for a "pig to be shaved" next, or somebody else equally wise.

Humbuggery, gullibility, and deception are so much the order of the day, that it is almost enough to make an honest man run crazy—a wise man to become a hermit, a philanthropist a misanthrope; and to create in the heart, of a true christian a desire to go hence. If men would wait until they get counsel from the proper source, they might often have less cause to complain of being minus in their financial resources.

MILITARY PREPARATIONS.—A bill has been introduced into the Georgia Legislature, by a Mr. Jones, "to strenghten the military arm of the State, and to enable the Governor to provide for the defence of the people," &c. It authorizes the appropriation of $200,000 to the arming and equipping of 30,000 soldiers, and directs the Governor to ascertain what means are in the possession of the State for casting cannon, making muskets, swords, &c.

Valley Coin.

The following from the St. Louis Intelligencer we copy for the benefit of all concerned. The St. Louis folks should have done as we have here. We have taken that coin at no definite value; but have agreed to allow for it whatever it was worth at the mint. We are satisfied, from our own observation, that the twenty dollar pieces are worth more than $17; but if that is all that is given at the mint; it will tend to establish their value throughout the country. We believe that these twenty dollar pieces contain more pure gold than two ten dollar pieces of United States' coin. Yet we do not profess to be overwise in the knowledge of the value of metals; but we will venture to say that Iron is of more real value than gold. The Intelligencer says the Mormons are a fast people." They are! Mobocracy would never let them be slow. Moreover it requires a fast people to keep up with these electrical times. Perhaps it may be said again in a time to come by some that are not so fast as the Mormons, that they are a "fast people," when they are nicely entered the celestial port, and the gate closed against the more tardy: but we trust that the Intelligencer man will not be among those who come afterwards and say open to us—while the Mormons inside, put their thumb to their nose and significantly say, "you can't come it."

SALT LAKE GOLD COIN.—We were shown a telegraphic dispatch received by Messrs. E. W. Clark & Bros., from Philadelphia, which states that this coin has recently been tested at the mint, and that it is worth only $17, and not $20, as it imports on the face. We understand that a large amount of this coin has recently been brought to this city, and in receiving it, our citizens had better take care that they do not [illegible] This coin is gotten up by the Mormons at the Great Salt Lake, and as we said the other day, they are a "fast" people.

A failure to give notice of a wish to discontinue the paper at the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be considered as an engagement for the next year; and no subscription will be discontinued until all arrearages are paid up, except at the discretion of the proprietor.

Advertisements not marked on the copy for a definite period, or a distinct number of insertions, will be continued until ordered out, and payment exacted accordingly.

It is expected that such as may wish to discontinue will send in notice before their term expires, that we may be apprized of the fact in season to stop their paper before commencing on a second term, otherwise they will be considered bound for the next year.

Cows and Work Oxen.

There will evidently be a scarcity of the above kind of stock in this section to meet the demand this coming Spring for the emigration. We would advise every one to bring all the good work steers, milch cows and young stock that he can. Mules are dear and not so profitable to go to the Salt Lake as five and six year old steers. Mules would be best to cross the Plains and Mountains, provided the emigrant goes to the Mines or to the Pacific Coast. Ponies, good horses and indifferent ones will sell here for what they are worth.

Prime work oxen are worth from	-	$50 to $70
do. cows do	do -	$12 to $15
do horses, do	do -	$65, $80 and $100
Common horses do	do -	$40 to $55

Young Cattle are as good property as can be brought here, or as can be taken to the mountains. The above kinds of stock are perfectly good here to buy farms and improvements. We presume that every claim in Pottawatamie county might be bought with cows, oxen, horses, and young cattle, only bring enough of them.

Washington.

By private letters from Washington, we learn that the slavery question is likely to trammel and fetter Congress so completely that it will not be able to do any business that may touch, directly or remotely, this exciting subject. New States and Territories will stand but a poor chance to gain admission into the Union before the Union itself may be dissolved.

We could hope for better things; but the leading politicians in the North and in the South appear to have taken a firm stand. The South is full of fire and smoke and the North full of firmness and decision upon this subject; and both parties possess the elements of separation. Is there not a master spirit that will volunteer his influence to pull up the stakes of both parties by modifying and tempering things down to a proper medium and consistency? But the frequency of this question only seems to excite ridicule and contempt. So we will content ourself with the faith that it will be right, turn which way it will. What we cannot prevent, we must say will work for good.

Agency at this Office for the Sale of Land Claims.

Emigrants from abroad coming to this place, and wishing to avail themselves of splendid chances to purchase themselves homes at low prices, will do well to call and examine the books of this agency, as a full description of the most valuable claims in the County may be found in said books. No charge for examination.

Such as wish to advertise their property for sale, through this Agency, had better come forward at as early a period as consistent, and have it attended to

D. MACKINTOSH, Agent.

Devil.

For the information of some enquiring minds, we would say that "our devil" is a printer's errand boy. But as to Cain's wife, we cannot trace her pedigree; but if the Methodist minister said she was an Ourang Outang, we should believe him, if we have that "charity that believeth all things.". There was probably a town in the land of Nod, inhabited by ourang outangs: and perhaps Cain paid his addresses to one of the fair who in turn rewarded him with her paw. If we may judge from appearances in the world, their union has had a singular influence upon the human race.

Citizens of Fremont County.

Agents for emigrating companies are already arriving in this town. Horses, Mules, Cows and Oxen will be wanted here. Also, Bacon and Flour, and many other articles that you may have, and likewise, wish to sell. This town will be the Emigrants' Rendezvous. Now suppose you advertise your property in the Guardian, at least, such as you know emigrants will want, that we may all know exactly where it can be had. It will cost you but little in comparison to the benefits that may accrue to you; and while you may throw some few five dollars in our way, we may throw some few five hundred dollars in your way.

A Veto on the reported Arrest of Gen. Wilson by the Citizens of Salt Lake.

The following letter from the Hon. Truman Smith, Senator from Connecticut, our native State, addressed to Doctor John M. Bernhisel, agent at Washington City, from Deseret, and published in the WASHINGTON GLOBE, fully confirms our opinion of the great cry about the arrest of Gen. Wilson and Mr. Pomeroy by the citizens of the Valley.

We trust that it will be the pride and ambition of the citizens of Salt Lake to Honor and support the good name under all circumstances, which Gen. Wilson has given them. We feel confident in assuring our friends in the the Valley that the spirit of old '76 is still at head quarters in Washington, though the spirit of a Nero and of a Caligula may have predominated in portions of Missouri and Illinois. Let the past slide into the ocean of eternity and there come in contact with elements powerful enough to cut asunder and dissolve in liquid fire every unholy combination against us from whose murderous hands the earth has drank the blood of our best and dearest friends.

WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 19, 1849.

DEAR SIR: In conformity with the wish expressed in your late note, I subjoin an extract from a letter which I have recently received from General John Wilson, of Missouri, dated at the City of the Great Salt Lake, September 6, 1849; he being on his way to California, in the public service, if I mistake not, as Indian agent, or sub-agent. General Wilson is a gentleman of mature years and of the first respectability. Implicite reliance can therefore be placed in the accuracy of his statements. I will add that it gives me much satisfaction to [illegible] you this means of repelling injurious statements recently put afloat, and also to learn, as I do, from a source so trustworthy, the good conduct, order, and happiness of your people in the Great Salt Lake country. And as they are in the interior of this continent, separated by vast deserts and mountains from the scenes of disorder and confusion, in which they were so long involved in Missouri and Illinois, it is my desire that they should become a great, prosperous and truly Christian community. With sentiments of true respect, I am faithfully yours.

TRUMAN SMITH.

For Dr. J. M. Bernhisel, Agent at Washington from the Salt Lake country. Extract from the letter referred to in the above note:

"A more orderly, earnest, industrious, and civil people I have never been among than these, (meaning the inhabitants of Great Salt Lake City) and it is incredible how much they have done in the wilderness in so short a time. In this city, which contains now, as I believe, about from four to five thousand inhabitants, I have not met in a citizen a single idler, or any person who looks like a loafer. Their prospects for crops are fair, and there is a spirit and energy in all that you see that cannot be equalled in any city of any size that I have ever been in, and I will add, not even in "Old Connecticut."

Olive Oil.

We have constantly on hand at this office, for sale, a superior quality of the above article, in baskets containing one dozen each, or by the single bottle.

Speculation.

By recent accounts, half the men of Upper Missouri are going to the Gold Mines; and we hear they are selling off their stock, young cattle, &c. There is a chance for making money by buying their young stock and giving it a chance to grow. We say to every body in this country, raise all the stock you can, for it is always in good demand here.

The Cuba Expedition Started Again—Rendezvousing out of the United States.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.

News has been received here, for some days past, by the administration, that the Cuba revolutionists are again at work—that they have raised large sums of money—that their expedition is again pretty well under way—that they have plenty of arms, munitions of war &c., &c., but that now they will act according to law—that they will not concentrate their forces here, in the United State—nor rendezvous here—nor organize here—but assemble altogether at a fixed time, say at the Isthmus of Darien, or it may be in Yucatan, or it may be on some island, the pocus in quo, if agreed upon, not yet being known.

The head-quarters of these revolutionists is at one of the hotels in this city, from whence they are carrying on operations upon a grand scale. One of the largest theatres of their operation is in New York city.

In the Senate, on the 31st ult., Mr. Felch, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill granting additional compensation to certain Land Officers for locating Military Land Warrants.

Mr. Douglass offered the following resolution, which lies over:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing, on the usual emigrant line from the Missouri River to the South Pass of the Rocky mountains, a sufficient military movable force to protect all emigrants to Oregon and California.

Mr. Mason presented a bill, drawn by an eminent lawyer, relative to the recapture and surrender of fugitive slaves, which was supposed to be a more acceptable one than that reported to the Judiciary Committee. Laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Cheap Postage.

The "Cheap Postage Association" of New York, are doing all they can to effect a postal reform, and as all parties seem to fall in with their recommendation, to have all prepaid letters of half an ounce reduced to a uniform payment of two cents, we cannot see any obstacle in the way of accomplishing so desirable a reform. Such a reform would quadruple the number of letter writers in the U. States. That, and the abrogation of all charge on newspapers within fifty miles of their place of publication, together with the annihilation of the franking privilege, would mark their consummation as an era worthy of a government whose mission evidently is to sow the seeds of intelligence and the true science of self government broadcast throughout our own and other lands.

For the Frontier Guardian.

Mill Dam.

Whereas, an article has appeared in the Guardian of the 6th of February, from a responsible person residing on Musquito creek, in the vicinity of Mr. Meek's mill, which states that he (Meek,) had no encouragement to build the dam. This is, therefore, to certify that any such statement is utterly false, which I am able to prove to a demonstration by many witnesses. It is well known that encouragement was given by the citizens offering to assist in building the dam free of cost, also by a general turn out to raise the mill. It is believed that the deed was perpetrated through an unlawful, selfish, wicked malice which was manifested by cutting away the forebay and headgates, several rods from the creek.

It is well known that sickness prevailed to greater extent above and below, than in the vicinity of the mill; and it is believed by scientific men, that the dam had no tendency to create disease, because ponds of dead water are interspersed all along the Missouri Bottoms.

The Iowa Contested Seat.

The Gazette of yesterday discourses pretty largely on an article which it extracts from the Missouri Republican, in reference to Dan. F. Miller's claims to a seat in Congress. That article states that "Mr. Miller claims that he received 6,591 votes and Mr. [illegible]son 6,471 votes; and that he has a majority of 120 votes." Mr. Thompson endeavors to neutralise this majority and thus retain his seat, by declaring the vote of Kanesville illegal, and asks for longer time to procure evidence. Mr. Miller, to avoid such delay, proposes that the committee lay all the papers before the House, accompanied by a resolution that the election be referred back to the people.

This plea for delay on the part of Mr. Thompson, comes in too late, in our opinion, notwithstanding we know that the Committee on Elections has granted his request. He knew more than a year ago, that Mr. Miller would contest the seat, and he was fully apprised of the grounds on which that contest would be sustained by Mr. Miller. He has had ample time to collect all the information he now proposes to collect, and in taking this course he cannot drive the idea out of the people's minds, that all he now wants is to retain his seat just as long as he possibly can, and that he has taken this method to accomplish his object.

We are surprised that the Gazette—claiming as it does the largest kind of liberty, and a most wondrous love for the dear people—should go against submitting the dicision of this question to that same people. Hear what the editors says on the subject:

"The proposition of Mr. Miller, to refer the election back to the people, is just what was anticipated of him. He knows very well that an investigation of the facts of the committee on elections will show that Mr. Thompson is entitled to the seat, and he is desirous of avoiding the issue. Despairing of making out such a case as will convince Congress of the justness of his claim, his next best chance, he concludes, is to bring the contest again before the people."

When the editor penned the above, he was not aware of the fact, probably, that the committee on elections had UNANIMOUSLY declared Mr. Miller to be entitled to the seat. This, however, is the fact, and now what becomes of the Gazette's argument! A fair Congress would have, immediately on such a report, awarded the seat to Mr. Miller; but no,—they permit Thompson to keep the seat warm for himself, for ninety days more, to go through a farce which was performed more than a year ago. But we must hasten to give the news as we find it in the correspondence of the Missouri Republican of last Saturday. Here it is:—

Iowa Election.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21, 1850.

The Committee on Elections in the House to-day, decided, that D. F. Miller, Esq., of Iowa, who contests Wm. Thompson's seat (the first Congressional District,) was, from the evidence before them, entitled to his seat, having a majority of 120 votes. They were unanimous.

What action the House will take, remains to be seen. Thompson has put in a plea that the majority of the votes were illegal, and those of aliens and minors. The Locofocos having the majority, may send them back, Miller proffered to have it sent back to-day, but Thompson still says no.

The House will, of course, give him his seat, or send them both back. Don't his constituents (Thompson's,) think themselves complimented in being called foreigners and illegal voters? But so goes Locofocoism.

[Later intelligence advises us, that the House has allowed further time—ninety days—to take testimony in Iowa, in relation to the election. Meanwhile, Thompson will by this means keep his seat.]

We wonder what the Gazette thinks of its former chucklings and asseveration, in relation to this case. It has heretofore sneered at the idea of the possibility of Mr. Miller's being awarded the seat; but now a committee of five loco focos and four whigs, unanimously declare Mr. Miller entitled to the seat! What does Mrs. Grundy say to this?

A Letter dated Salt Lake City, Oct. 18, say:

The Mormons from California brought in much gold. All kinds of merchandize high. Only two small store in the Valley, which contains fifteen thousand persons. There was snow on the mountains and all around the Valley, and at the south pass it was four feet deep.

There was a rumor prevailing that the Missouri emigrants had killed some squaws of Snake Indians, and the tribe were consequently hostile. A battle was fought between the emigrants and Indians.

Livingston and Kinkade, traders at Salt Lake, have cleared $20,000 in two months, have sold out their entire stock in that short time. Another trader by the name of Reese, from New York, has sold four thousand dollars worth in four days.

The grain crop was good and the country prosperous.—[Keokuk Whig & Register.

Who will not take goods there this spring, and buy up the immense quantities of gold brought in from the mines last fall? There are about five thousand more emigrants going to the Valley this spring; and they also will want many goods. Fine chance for speculation this!!

We have received some valuable public documents from Hon. FITZ HENRY WARREN, of Washington city. He will please accept our thanks for this favor.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 6, 1850.

Steamer St. Joseph Destroyed.

The St. Joseph left New Orleans on Saturday, the 19th instant, with a fair freight and number of passengers. On Wednesday, the 23d, at half past six A. M., when just above Choctaw Island and about 40 miles below the Arkansas, and while in company with the steamer South America—both boats being under full headway and nearly side by side—the larboard boiler of the St. Joseph exploded, killing several persons instantly, and scalding and otherwise injuring between 25 and 30 others. The explosion caused a portion of the upper deck to come in contact with the heated boilers and furnaces below, and in a very few moments the boat was on fire.

In this condition she floated a short distance, and struck against the shore. The South America, which was alongside at the moment of the explosion, was rounded to, and the officers and crew went immediately to the assistance of the burning boat. At one time the flames were nearly subdued, but from the confusion which prevailed, and for want of buckets and hose, they broke out again, in order to save as much of the cargo as possible, it was deemed advisable to scuttle the boat, which, after considerable difficulty and risk, was done. She finally burnt to the water's edge.

Our informant was on the lower deck, and near the boilers at the time, and was thrown to a considerable distance in the river, and after floating four or five miles was rescued by a yawl. He received a severe contusion in the head, and was slightly scalded, but with a comforter thrown from the boat he managed to fasten himself to a piece of timber, and in this manner saved himself until picked up. He was insensible, or nearly so for several hours, and does not know what occurred during the burning of the boat, nor does he know the exact number, or the names, of those lost or injured.

When he returned to the vicinity of the wreck, the boat had sunk, and every thing was comparatively quiet. The books and papers were burnt, and the clerk (Mr. Scott,) was unable to state who or how many persons were lost; but from his recollection he made the total number 18 or 20. Six or seven were instantly killed, among whom were three cabin passengers—(names not recollected by our informant.) A fireman, John Burns; the second cook; pantry boy; and Samuel Staley, third engineer, or striker.

One person was killed by the falling of the iron safe, and the second clerk narrowly escaped, having fallen from the boiler deck with it. The second engineer, who was on duty at the time, was severely scalded, but it is thought will recover. The greatest loss of life was among the deck passengers, some twenty or thirty of whom jumped overboard, and it is supposed that eight or ten were drowned. A number were slightly scalded and bruised. Mr. Baker estimates the whole number of killed and missing at twenty, and the wounded—only two or three of whom are severely so—at thirty.

Nothing of consequence was saved from the wreck, and the officers, passengers and crew lost all their clothes, baggage, &c. The iron safe belonging to the boat, with about $1,700 of the boat's money, and between two and three hundred deposited by passengers, was gotten out, and the money saved. St. Louis Republican.

NEW YORK, Feb. 4th.

A letter dated Cape Haytien, Jan. 16th says a new Tariff has been declared, removing the monopoly in Copper, giving purchasers the privilege to buy whatever they please, at whatever price they can at Port au Prince.

An explosion occurred in Taylor's machine Shop and Printing Press Manufactory on Hager st., near Pearl. It took place early this morning. The engine was in the cellar. St. John, Burr & Co., Hat manufacturers occupied the first floor. The second and third floor was occupied by Taylors. Six heavy power presses and other heavy articles were in the fourth story. Altogether about 150 persons employed in the building. It is supposed that no less than 100 were killed. Instantaneously with the explosion the whole building was raised six feet from the foundation and fell with a terrible crash. Thirty dead bodies were taken from the ruins up to noon. Sixty or seventy bodies are still buried. Various opinions are expressed as to the cause. The general impression seems to be that the boiler was imperfect. A man rescued from the ruins said it was an old steamboat boiler patched up. The proprietors say it was a new one and that the explosion was owing to the frost last night. Great numbers have been drowned, as floods of water have been poured into the building since 8 o'clock this morning. Had the explosion occurred one hour later, the loss of life would have been greater.

DEFICIENCY IN THE COFFEE CROP.— A letter dated Rio, Nov. 24, says:

The favorable advices from Europe, and large arrivals of vessels in ballast from Europe and the United States, for coffee, caused larged purchases to be made from the 1st to the 5th instant, at advancing rates, reducing the stock in first hands to 25,000 bags; since then the chief purchases have been made for Europe, (about 10,000 bags) at 4.550 a 4.650 for good first qualities, or 9 1-2 cents per pound on board. Superiors are held from 4$809 to 5$.

The holders are very firm, seeing so many American vessels in port, and the arrivals of coffee from the interior every day diminishing. Many are of opinion that after the 1st of January very little will remain to come forward.

After estimating the deficiency in the crops of 1848-'7, at 725,000 bags, or 116,000,000 barrels, the writer adds:

We cannot, therefore, look for any decline in prices, although still much above European or American quotations, but rather anticipate higher ones, as the deficiency is more apparent, especially as there are many unlimited orders, and an unusually large number of American and European vessels, expressly for coffee, that must be loaded, and many others will have to leave in ballast only.

Congressional.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29, 6 P. M.

SENATE.—Mr. Clay submitted a proposition to settle the whole question of Slavery. He is now speaking. He proposes to admit California, reduce the boundaries of Texas, and establish a territorial government over all the Territories.

Mr. Clay hoped the resolutions which he had offered would be adopted. He had reflected with great care upon the subject, and knew that they had been conceived in the spirit of harmony and concession.

First, he thought that California with suitable boundaries had a right to be admitted into the Union, as the State of California had more reason for the course she has pursued than Michigan, for what she has done. There had been irregularities but they should be overlooked.

Second. That as slavery does not exist in California, or is not likely to be introduced there, it is inexpedient for Congress to impose slavery restrictions.

Mr. Clay said, I must say from all I have heard or read, from all the witnesses that I have seen, and conversed with, from all that has transpired and is transpiring, I do believe that not on one foot of the territory acquired from Mexico, will slavery ever be planted, and I believe it could not be done by force and the power of public authority.

MR. CLAY'S RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, it being desirable for the peace, concord and harmony of the Union of these States to settle and adjust, amicably, all questions of controversy between them, arising, out of the institution of slavery, upon a fair, equitable and just basis therefore,

Resolved—That California, with suitable boundaries, upon her application should be admitted as one of the States of this Union, without the imposition by Congress of any restrictions in respect to the exclusion or the introduction of slavery within these boundaries.

Resolved—That as slavery does not exist by law, and is not likely to be introduced into any of the territories acquired by the United States from the Republic of Mexico, it is inexpedient for Congress to provide by law, either for its introduction into or its exclusion from any part of the said territory; and that appropriate territorial governments ought to be established by Congress in all of said territories not assigned as boundaries of the proposed State, or California, without abolition of any restriction or condition of subjection of slavery.

Resolved—That the western boundary of the State of Texas ought to be fixed on the Rio del Norte, commencing on a marine League from its mouth, and ending with that river at the southern line of New Mexico, and thence with that line eastwardly and so continuing on the same direction to the line as established between the United States and Spain.

Resolved—That it be proposed to the State of Texas, that the United States will provide for the payment of all that portion of legitimate and bona fide public debts of that State contracted prior to its annexation to the United States and for which duties of foreign imports were pledged by said State to its creditors, not exceeding the sum of—— dollars, in consideration of the duties as pledged having been no longer applicable to that object after said annexation, but having henceforward become payable to the U. S., and upon the condition also that said States shall by some solemn and authentic act of her Legislature or of a Convention, relinquish to the United States any claim which it has to any part of New Mexico.

Resolved—That it is expedient to abolish Slavery in the District of Columbia, whilst that institution continues to exist in the State of Maryland, without the consent of that State, or without the consent of the people of the District, and without just compensation to owners of the slaves within the District.

Resolved—That it is expedient to prohibit within the District the Slave trade in Slaves brought into it from the States or places beyond its limits to be sold therein as merchandize or to be transported to other markets without the District of Columbia.

Resolved—That more effectual provision ought to be made by law or resolution for the delivery of persons bound to service or labor in any State, who may escape into any other State or Territory of the Union.

Resolved—That Congress has no power to prohibit or obstruct the trade of slaves between slaveholding States; and that the admission or exclusion of slaves brought from one into another of them depends exclusively upon their own particular law.

These resolutions, said Mr Clay, involve no sacrifice of any principle. They were founded upon a basis of mutual forbearance and concession, not of principle but of matters of feeling merely. He concluded with a most eloquent appeal in behalf of harmony, peace, and mutual forbearance for the sake of the Union.

HOUSE—Nothing of interest. Whole day taken up in discussing the mileage question.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31.

Mr. Baily's revenue bill is two hundred and fifty thousand dollars more than any other scheme; it gives all the security asked and two thousand dollars over.

Ex-Governor N. S. Brown, of Tennessee, has not been re-nominated for Russia.

Col. Benton has not been in the Senate for three days.

The Treasury Department has issued orders for the discharge of sixteen more clerks in the Department of the Custom House. Orders to the same effect have been transmitted to Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Norfolk.

It is stated that orders were in concoction for the dismissal of all the officers of the revenue marine, and the future abandonment of the service.

In the Senate, Mr. Douglass presented a petition in favor of the free navigation of the St. Lawrence.

In the House, Mr. Wood announced the death of Mr. R. Dickenson, when the usual resolutions were passed, and the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5—5 P. M.

SENATE—The Compromise Resolutions were called up. Mr. Clay proceeded to remark that he did not propose this measure with any expectation that it would be adopted precisely as he introduced it. If it was susceptable of amendment or modification so as to make it more acceptable, he hoped the change would be made.

His object would be secured if by any means the great question might be settled, and the integrity of the Union preserved. This question must be discussed in a spirit of conciliation, and settled in the spirit of compromise. His object had been to present a measure which would afford a platform upon which both sections might unite.

The question of slavery in his opinion presented two entirely distinct grounds—Slavery within the States.

Congress has no right to interfere with slavery within the States, and if the time should arrive when Congress attempted to so interfere with the institution, then his voice would be for war, then he would feel that the South was bound to resist so unconstitutional and aggressive a measure with all the means which God and nature had placed in her hands. He then pictured the evils of the result of war arising from such a state of things.

WASHINGTON, FEB. 9th.

In the Senate the Vice President stated that the first business in order was the petition from Maryland and Delaware, asking the peaceable dissolution of the Union.

Mr. Chase spoke in favor of the right of petition, declared that the Senate was bound to receive every petition, no matter what its character; Congress should express its disapprobation by subsequent action; he had no objection to whatever action was taken on this and similar petitions.

Mr. Dayton acknowledged the right of petition, but would vote against this, because it was disrespectful and treasonable in its nature.

WASHINGTON, FEB. 11, 3 P. M.

Mr. Holmes' motion, made a few days ago, to lay on the table a petition from the citizens of Ohio, asking the establishment of a peace Congress, was decided in the negative 64 to 100; objection arising the question goes over—the House went into Committee of the whole, and resumed the bill limiting the expenses for collecting the revenue; the subject is now being discussed.

Second Despatch

WASHINGTON,—5, P. M.

Various amendments to the revenue bill were offered, after a long discussion, the House adjourned without coming to any conclusion.

In the Senate, after a further discussion on the Maryland and Delaware petitions, in which Messrs, Cass, Webster, Seward and others participated, the question was taken on receiving the petition—yeas 3, nays 50. Messrs. Hale, Chase, Seward and others voted affirmatively.

Mr. Berrien made a speech on the slavery question, contending that the north was wrong and south right—that a crisis was at hand which should be met in a spirit of conciliation. At 3 o'clock Mr Berrien gave way, and the further consideration of the question was postponed until to-morrow.

After an Executive session, the Senate adjourned.

Russia and Turkey.

It is said that a complete reconciliation had taken place between Russia and Turkey, the latter having consented that all the subjects of Russia, who were concerned in the Hungarian Movement, shall be obliged to leave the Turkish dominions. A similar arrangement is on the point of being entered into between Austria and Turkey.

The Russian list of persons proscribed, contains the names of Bem and twelve others. That of Austria begins with Kossuth, and contains thirty-two names.

It is announced that Madame Kossuth has joined her husband, she having escaped from Hungary in the disguise of a mendicant.

The English Consul at Vienna, has discovered a diabolical attempt, instigated by the Austrian Government, to murder Kossuth.

The Russians have resumed diplomatic relations with the Porte. It is expected that Austria will not be slow to follow.

Austria is occupied with the numberless constitutions of her provinces.

Prussia.

The threatened dissolution of the Cabinet has been prevented by some compromise. The King is now disposed to take the oath prescribed by the constitution.

The Erfurth Parliament appears to be an imperious political necessity for Prussia.

In Wirtemburg there appears to be a change of opinion favorable to Russian Influence. The Hanoverian Chamber refuses to acknowledge the Central Commission of Austria and Prussia. A constitution is recommended for Germany.

Rome.

It is said that want of money prevents the Pope from returning to the Capital. France, it is reported, has offered funds to his Holiness.

The Chamber of Deputies has approved the treaty of peace concluded at Milan between the Piedmontese and Austrians. It is supposed that the Senate will also approve it. At Berlin, negociations for a treaty of peace with Denmark have been resumed.

Nearest, Best and Healthiest route to the Salt Lake and California.

THE

OLD ORIGINAL MORMON CROSSING AT KANESVILLE,

Council Bluffs, Missouri River,

Twenty-five miles above the Mouth of the PLATTE RIVER.

It has been proven beyond question that the NORTHERN ROUTE, crossing the Missouri river at Kanesville, 25 miles above the mouth of the Platte river, is the

NEAREST, BEST, & HEALTHIEST ROAD TO SALT LAKE AND CALIFORNIA.

The difficulties of crossing the Horn and Loup Fork of the Platte, have been entirely removed by the subscribers placing upon each of those streams large and substantial flat boats.

Heretofore emigrants have had to lose several days in constructing rafts which at last made it rather a hazardous undertaking. Besides these considerations it is an undeniable fact that hundreds of persons who went up on the South side of the Platte fell victims to the dreadful pestilence while nearly all those who took the north side escaped unharmed. This is the Mormon trail and it is a subject of remark that so few of those people have suffered from disease while on the route. Another thing the emigrant must have in view, and that is their feed and camping places; the routes from Independence, Kansas, Weston, St. Joseph, and all other places below the Platte before going one hundred and fifty miles emerge into one road consequently when there is such an immense amount of travel, grass and wood become scarce. This too is the very end of the road where it is most needed, because emigrants expect to leave early and it is necessary that both "man and beast" should fare well in the beginning. The above is a very important advantage to those who take the north side and is a consideration compared with which all others sink into insignificance for grass is the only subsistence for stock on the plains.

In addition to these facts emigrants will avoid crossing the dangerous streams of the Saline, the South Fork of the Great Platte, and the Great Platte itself.

To sum up the whole in a very few words, the subscribers would respectfully say to the public generally, and all those who contemplate taking this route, particularly, that at the Kanesville Ferry on the Missouri river, they will find two good boats, each capable of crossing one wagon and team.

At the Ferry on the Horn they have one large and substantial boat capable of crossing a wagon and team every five minutes.

At the Ferry on the Loup Fork of the Platte we will have one excellent boat, which, with the men we will have in charge will ensure to all a safe and speedy crossing.

Emigrants who wish plenty of grass for their stock, and camping places for themselves, besides the best chance of escaping all epidemics will find this route far preferable over all others.

Our boats with competent hands will be at their places on the 1st of April; and all may rest assured that what we have said may be relied on with the utmost confidence.

In the Kanesville Market, Emigrants will find every thing necessary for their outfits at as reasonable rates as can be procured in the Western country

STOVES! STOVES!!

MR. DUSTIN AMY, of this town, would respectfully notify the citizens of this county, and particularly that portion of them that expect to emigrate to the Salt Lake, that he intends to have, by the first boat this spring, a heavy and well selected assortment of Cast Iron Cooking Stoves, which he proposes to sell on very favorable terms for ready cash.

As Mr. A. is a tinner by trade, he will fit up the stoves with furniture according to order, and on the shortest notice. He keeps constantly on hand a good assortment of tin ware, and a good supply of all vessels usually called for by Emigrants. He has secured sufficient help to execute almost any job that may be required in his line on very short notice. The experience that he has had in traveling in the West, and also in fitting out emigrants for the last two or three years to journey over the Plains from this place, enable him to anticipate, correctly, the present wants of emigrants; and he has and will, therefore, prepare his stock and articles for sale to suit this frontier Market.

POETRY.

From the Millennial Star.

The Millennial Morn.

BY H. L. BIRCH.

Softly beams the sacred dawning,
Of the great Millennial morn,
And to Saints gives welcome warning,
That the day is hasting on.

Splendid rising o'er the mountains,
Glowing with celestial cheer,
Streaming from eternal fountains,
Rays of living light appear.

Swiftly flee the clouds of darkness,
Speedily the mists retire;
Nature's universal blackness,
Is consum'd by heavenly fire.

Yes the fair Sabattic era,
When the world will be at rest,
Rapidly is drawing nearer,
Then all Israel will be blest.

Odors sweet, the air perfuming,
Verdure of the purest green;
In primeval beauty blooming,
Will our native earth be seen.

At the resurrection morning,
We shall all appear as one;
O! what robes of bright adorning
Will the righteous then put on.

Eyes not seen the untold treasures,
Which the Father hath in store,
Teeming with surpassing pleasures,
Even life for evermore.

Mourn no longer, Saints beloved,
Brave the dangers, no retreat;
Neither let your hearts be moved,
Scorn the trials you may meet.

Kossuth.

BY GEORGE LUNT.

Kossuth! the world's great soul
Has kindled at thy name;
Once more her blazoned scroll
Unfolds Eternal Fame,—
Points to her starry hand,
The few and quickly told,
And stamps with a perpetual hand,
Thine mid the names of old.

What though the field be lost,
Where bleeding Freedom lies,
And cowards deem the cost
But sanctioned by the prize;
Thy nobler heart can feel,
(Its manly duty done,)
Alike the wreath, the reel, the steel,—
From battles lost or won.

Enough, that once again
Goes forth the rallying word,
And in man's heart and brain
The stagnant pool is stirred;
From out his soul divine
Has shot a newer gleam,
The paling despot sees it shine,
The serf beholds the beam.

No! Freedom dead shall rise!
By heaven and earth, and main,
By the lone dungeon's cries,
By scourge, and rack, and chain;
By the bright kindred souls—
By them, the dead, the free,
Once more the voice of Ages rolls
Kossuth! and calls for thee!

MISCELLANY.

The Escape.

A LEGEND OF THE WAR OF 1812.

The breaking out of the war of 1812, found me on the island of St. Christopher, or as it is more familiarly called St. Kitts, ill with a fever, the effects of which kept me confined to my room for many months. Upon my recovery, the difficulty of getting away from the multitude of English cruisers, induced me to enter into business there which detained me until the war had ceased. While residing there, the scene related below, occurred, which if you deem worthy a place, is at your service. It has little to recommend it but the truth. At the time of its occurrence it made a deep impression upon my mind, and even now the whole scene is before me, fresh in all its particulars as the day it happened, but the pen of man would fail to do it justice.

The Island, you will recollect, is one of the group to which the general name of West Indies is attached, and is owned and governed by the French. The principal harbor defended by a strong battery, is in the form of a huge bowl, with two outlets to the ocean, the one broad and deep the other narrow, intricate and shallow.

It was during the time that a hollow truce was patched up between France and England, that an American privateer appeared off the harbor, which played the very deuce with the English merchantmen which frequented St. Kitts. She was a long, narrow Baltimore built clipper, and one of the fastest sailors I ever saw. She seemed when in pursuit to fly before the wind, and for the luckless merchantmen in sight, there seemed to safety, except in running into the harbor, or getting under the guns of an occasional man-of-war. So great an annoyance did this little privateer prove, that on complaint being made to the English Admiralty, a fine frigate, and one of the fastest sailors, was despatched to St. Kitts, to cruise off the harbor, with orders at all hazards to capture the privateer.

A week or two before the time of which I speak, the inhabitants of the town were awakened by the sound of cannon at sea, and as day broke the privateer with every sail set, was dashing in towards the harbor, in sail of a fine large English merchant vessel. Just as the latter entered the channel, leading into the harbor, the privateer was by her side, and the cry of her captain "boarders away!" sent a crowd of gallant spirits into the English vessel, and after a short, but fierce and desperate struggle, the vessel was a prize, and immediately left the harbor in company with her captor.

The vessel was taken within the harbor—within a port owned by a neutral power, which should have offered protection, and the British Consul made formal complaint to the Governor, of this breach of the laws of nations. The Governor excused himself as best he could. The scene of the struggle was beyond the reach of the guns of the fort, and besides there was no French vessels of war in the harbor at the time, to prevent capture. With this explanation the Consul was forced to be satisfied.

The British frigate in the meantime arrived, and for several days nought was seen of the saucy little privateer, though every vessel that cam into port, spoke of being overhauled by her to see if the French flag which they bore did not cover an English vessel. Reports too, reached us of rich prizes being taken, and the Americans at St. Kitts taunted the English citizens with the abortive efforts to capture what we called the "Flying American," in imitation of the "Flying Dutchman," whose powers of ubiquity the privateer seemed to possess.

One morning, a bright cloudless Sunday morning in May, which had brought the entire population of the city to the hill side overlooking the town and harbor—another distant firing was heard at sea, and those who had glasses saw two vessels, with crowded canvass, making towards the mouth of the harbor. The hindmost vessel would occasionally yaw round for the purpose of pouring in a broadside, while the other with her stern guns kept up an occasional cannonade on the pursuing vessel. Nearer they approached, and soon were perceptible to the naked eye, and the words passed from man to man, "it is the English frigate and the American privateer." They entered the harbor, the privateer near a mile in advance of the frigate, and both anchored side by side under the guns of the fort.

The frigate finding every effort to take the privateer abortive, had, while in port, so disguised her appearance as to pass for a large merchantman. The morning of which I speak, a sail was seen, and soon the privateer was making headway towards her. To carry on the deception the frigate attempted to escape, but a sail which had been drawn under her so impeded her progress, that the privateer made two knots to the frigate's one, and off St. Kitts, she overhauled her, and found she was about catching a tartar, just in time to prevent boarding. Finding the privateer making off, the captain of the frigate opened a fire upon the little vessel, now crowding sail for St. Kitts. Fortunately her rigging remained uninjured, and the vessels as I before said, came into the harbor, the frigate closely pursuing the privateer, and both anchored under the walls of the fort.

In a few moments a boat was seen leaving the shore with the British Consul on board. The boat soon returned with both the Captain of the frigate and the Consul, and the two proceeded to the residence of the Governor, where they remained for an hour. When they left the Governor's house, both seemed delighted, and on arriving at the water's edge, the British captain remarked, that he would send the privateer to England next day, with despatches.

Soon the news was hinted about that the Governor had ordered the privateer to leave the port within twelve hours, or its neutrality should be no protection, and this decision was based upon its violation by the captain of the privateer, in invading its neutrality, by capturing a merchantman within the harbor, some weeks previous. The excitement among the American residents upon the reception of the news was intense, and even the French citizens, whose feelings were ever against the English, whom they regard as their natural enemy, and in favor of the Americans, whom they regard as natural allies against England, the feeling of indignation was freely expressed, while the English residents were loud in their exultation.

All eyes were turned to the doomed vessel. Her captain had been duly notified of the determination of the Governor, but no movement was seen by which her course of conduct could be foreshadowed.

At length the order was given to weigh anchor, and the same moment the same order was given on board the frigate, and both vessels, side by side, steered for the mouth of the harbor, the privateer with but sufficient canvass to carry her out, the frigate with sails so set as to move neither faster nor slower than did her anticipated prize. The Americans on shore were loud in their indignation. If the privateer was to be taken, they preferred that she should be boarded and captured under the guns of the fort, that the question of right of the Governor, to refuse protection, might be made a national affair.

Slowly the vessels sailed towards the mouth of the harbor. In the commencement of this description I said the harbor had two outlets; the one broad and deep, the other shallow, narrow, and dangerous. The latter was used by fishermen in going to sea, for it cut off near one mile in getting to the ocean; the other was used as an outlet, and the only one, for vessels of war and merchantmen.

As the two vessels were nearing the lesser outlet, the privateer was at once, as if by magic, covered with sail—every stitch of canvass that she could bear being placed upon her. At once she dashed into the narrow outlet and a cry of horror rose from the old fishermen on shore, for none supposed that she could pass through it, but must founder on the rocks with which it abounded. With the speed of an arrow shot from a cross bow the gallant vessel sped on, as obedient to the pilot as though possessed of human reason. The frigate, too, crowded all sail for the deeper channel. On shore the excitement was intense—scarce a sound was heard, so deep and absorbing was the race, that men seemed almost afraid to breathe. On swept the glorious privateer, and on went the frigate, each strained to the utmost, like two gallant horses contending for the prize. The one was flying from captivity—the other for the honor and for the emolument of the capture. The privateer had gained two-thirds of the distance, but the most dangerous passage lay before her, yet still did her taper masts bend beneath the weight of canvass—still her keel was untouched by rock or bar, and on she sped. Soon the crooked windings of the channel were all passed, the last sunken rock was left behind, while the frigate was within the distance of half a mile, had near two miles to run ere she could gain the open sea. The deep "thank God!" of those on shore, told that all danger was passed, and as the keel of the privateer touched the ocean, a ball was seen for a moment suspended at her masthead, which soon unwinding itself, that little piece of bunting—"the Star Spangled Banner"—which had before been hoisted, opened to view, as the saucy little privateer, in defiance, opened a fire on the frigate, which being still within the harbor could not return it. The shout which then rose from the shore—from Americans, Frenchmen and from the men of all nations, save the English, seemed to shake the very heavens, so loud and deafening was it, and the cheers were resumed again and again, as when the frigate dashed out of the harbor it was seen that the privateer, then running before her best wind, was already hull down at sea, and was soon lost to the eye in the rotundity of the ocean.

The frigate after pursuing the chase for a short distance, gave it up, and returned that night to the harbor.

She remained not long in the station, for the very boys in the streets would talk of the chase, when the officers of the frigate were passing, for the purpose of taunting them, and the affair getting wind, the people of the other islands took it up, and the captain was soon glad to leave for another cruising ground.

Though half the time allotted to man has passed since from the hill side of St. Kitts I viewed that chase, yet are its incidents deeply graven on my memory. They have never yet found their way into the papers, and to give your readers a sketch of a scene, even the recollection of which excites a thrill of pleasure, I have in my rude way transcribed it.

A Pleasant Surprize.

A young man of eighteen or twenty, a student in a university, took a walk one day with a professor, who was commonly called the student' friend, such was his kindness to the young man whom it was his duty to instruct.

While they were now walking together, and the professor was seeking to lead the conversation to grave subjects, they saw a pair of old shoes lying in the path, which they supposed belonged to a poor man who was at work in the field close by, and who had nearly finished his day's work.

The young student turned to the professor, saying, "let us play the man a trick; we will hide his shoes and conceal ourselves behind those bushes, and watch to see him perplexed when he cannot find them."

"My friend, "answered the professor, "we must never amuse ourselves at the expense of the poor. But you are rich, and you may give yourself a much greater pleasure by means of this poor man. Put a dollar in each shoe, and then we will hide ourselves."

The student did so, and then placed himself with the professor behind the bushes through which they could easily watch the laborer, and see whatever joy he might express.

The poor man soon finished his work, and came across the field to the path, where he had left his coat and shoes. While he put on the coat, he slipped one foot into one of is shis shoes; but feeling something hard he stooped down and found the dollar. Astonishment and wonder were seen upon his countenance; he gazed upon the dollar, turned it around and looked around on all sides, but could see no one. Now he put on the other shoe; but how great was his astonishment when he found the other dollar! His feelings overcame him; he fell upon his knees, looked up to heaven, and uttered aloud a fervent thanksgiving, in which he spoke of his wife, sick and helpless, and his children without bread, whom this timely bounty from some unknown hand would save from perishing.

The young man stood there deeply affected and tears filled his eyes.

"Now," said the professor, "are you not much better pleased than if you had played your intended trick?"

"Oh, dearest sir," answered the youth, "you have taught me a lesson that I will never forget. I feel now the truth of the words which I never before understood, 'it is better to give than to receive.'"

We should never approach the poor but with the wish to do them good.

He who gives for the sake of thanks knows not the pleasure of giving.

Does any one despise thee, let him; be thine the care to do nothing worthy of despite. Does any one hate thee, what is that to thee, thou needs't not hate in return; but free from reproach, and, like Phocion, with unaffected patience, point out his error. Let it be seen, as before God, that thou art one whom nothing frets, nothing annoys. Receive what Providence awards, thou who art framed to common weal.—[N. Y. Spirit of the Age.

The Love of Gold.

The following remarks upon the California emigration are from the London times. The hope that the world will become wiser, to any practical effect, from experience in California, we believe is likely to be disappointed, though it is to be feared many unfortunate emigrants are destined to endure much suffering when it is too late to derive benefit from their experiment:

"Our age is steadily advancing towards good in much, but in one thing it shamefully goes astray. In its humanity, it is grand; in its lust of gold, most pitiful, most mean. With us the great social sin is poverty, the great incentive to crime the possession of wealth. As a stimulus to this modern vice the discovery of California threatens to be disastrous to the higher morality of society; and it is with much the same sorrow as we feel in reading the statistics of pestilence that we hear of tens of thousands flocking out to dig for gold rather than gain their bread in manlier and nobler ways. For there is much yet to be done in the world. There are vast regions of untrodden waste, which, with industry, could be made fruitful fields; and this conquest of man over nature, instead of perplexing the world with fears for the "currency" and misgivings about the "depreciation of the circulating medium," would give food to the famishing and labor to the unemployed. When such extravagant prices are given for the most ordinary necessaries at San Francisco, we cannot but think how much better it would have been if all the money that has been taken out to California to amass more, had been applied to useful purposes at home. As it is, we see but little promise of general advantage in this California fascination; and we only hope that men may bring more wisdom thence than they carry thither, and that others may learn from experience that gold is not the one Good Thing."

OH YES!
The Old Pioneer on the Track Again!
MR. HENRY W. MILLER, well known in this region, as one of the first western men, has joined me as partner; and we have removed our large stock of English Goods,
Imported Direct from Liverpool,
to our new store opposite our late stand; and in addition to the largest and Best Stock of Hardware and Smallwares
in Kanesville, we have selected some superior lots of
Dry Goods, Iron, Steel, Springs, Axles, Axes and Holloware,
In the St. Louis Market, expressly for the WINTER TRADE, and the necessities of this community.
We have re-marked all our goods and have agreed to sell off our stock—superior in quality though it be—at prices sufficiently low to induce a continuation and increase of our trade; and to remove an influence existing, not altogether without foundation, that some of the goods of the late firm—Brown & Barham were too high,; in a word, we only want to live among you and desire not to enrich ourselves, at your cost, we wish "to spend and be spent," for the good of the cause, which is to us, as to you the greatest and best. Our motto in business, is and shall be
"Small Profits and Quick Returns."
The truthfulness of which you cannot prove unless you come, see and trade with
BROWN & MILLER.
N. B. All accounts due to the late firm—Brown & Barham, will be received, settled and accounted for by THOMAS D. BROWN, at Brown & Millers store.

HORSE AND OX SHOEING.
WILLIAM F. CARTER,
OF this town, would avail himself of this opportunity to tender his thanks to the citizens of this county, and also to the traveling community, for the liberal patronage with which they have favored him heretofore; and having enlarged his shop and obtained a heavy stock of iron and steel of all kinds, he hopes, by strict attention to business, to merit a continuation of public favor.
He is prepared to shoe horses and oxen on the shortest notice, having every facility for these branches that can be had any where. He will also have on hand a good supply of his superior Steel Plated Hoes. Emigrants would do well to purchase this article here instead of purchasing elsewhere, as has been proven by the last three years experience. He will also execute with neatness and despatch any jobs in the general line of BLACKSMITHING.
Shop at the Old Stand Opposite the Log Tabernacle.
N. B. Mr. C. has an excellent Lathe, for turning iron, connected with his establishment.

From the Millennial Star.

A Letter to the Rev. Mr. Osborne, Minister of Darlington Street Chapel, Wolverhampton.

BY JAMES BELL.

An Elder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

WOLVERHAMPTON, June, 1849.

Reverend Sir.—It is from the purest of motives, and with the greatest respect, that I take in hand to address to you a few lines, which I trust will be received in the same spirit as that by which they are penned. Think not that I do so from any captious spirit of dictation, or from blind bigotry, but give me credit for a kindlier motive while you read my epistle, and while you candidly consider the interrogatives I shall finally propose.

I was induced to write to you from the fact of my having heard you lift up your voice in reprehension of the principles and doctrines of the Latter-day Saints, and too hastily join in the popular cry of "delusion," "false prophets," "heresy," and so forth. My determination was the more fully matured by a consideration of your popular character as a practical Christian, and my own impressions of your personal piety, aided by a remembrance of the old proverb, "Good men may be mistaken." I was truly sorry that you should so readily trust in flying rumors, newspaper reports, and that uncertain rule, popular opinion; when you must be aware of the fact that malice may conceive, the press bring forth, and popular opinion exaggerate the lie, which, by their joint agency, is thus palmed upon the public.

I am, alas! too sensible of the fact that there have been, and still may be, some among us who are a disgrace to any people; but remember, the conduct, or rather misconduct of Judas, Ananias, or Saphira, was not the result of the system they had embraced, but of their own cupidity and carnal minds: as it was then, so it is now; evil men will creep in, and stay with us until their deeds are manifest, and excommunication becomes absolutely necessary. Be it known, we neither protect nor patronise crime; on the contrary, if, after due warning, the offence is not removed, the offender himself is cut off from our society. In conclusion of my epistle, I would just observe, that the conduct of an individual is not always the characteristic of the community. I would also be bold enough to affirm that the Latter-day Saints generally are a people who can be advantageously compared with any or all religious bodies extant, for consistency of faith and conduct.

I will now propose a series of questions, arranged in such order as shall give you some idea of the constitution, &c., of our Church.

1.—Did Jesus and the apostles teach the true gospel? and have we a sufficiently correct account of the same in the New Testament?

2.—Is the true gospel a perfect law of liberty?

3.—Is a godlike and perfect law capable of any human improvement?

4.—Is the church or kingdom of God unchangeable in its priesthood, powers, doctrines and blessings?

5.—If so, where is the apostleship now? with its Prophets, Elders, Priests, &c., and where is the power to bind and loose, to cast out devils and heal the sick? and how many of the multitudinous doctrines now extant are the pure, unadulterated principles of truth? and what has become of the Savior's promise of divine gifts?

6.—Did Jesus set these officers, powers, and gifts in the church, for the work of the ministry, for the perfecting of the saints, and for the edifying of the body of Christ, until we all come in the unity of the faith! &c.?

7.—Has the work of the ministry come to an end! are we all perfected? have we all come in the unity of the faith?

8.—If not, what is the reason that these officers and powers have ceased, and other forms of godliness devoid of power substituted in their stead?

9.—Is it not the result of apostacy on the one hand, and persecution on the other, both of which began while the church was yet in its infancy, and continued until it was driven into the wilderness, and the priesthood was caught up unto God who gave it, there to remain until the time of restitution, when righteousness should look down from heaven, and truth should spring out of the earth?

10.—In other words, did the Gentile church continue in the goodness of God? or did it eventually fall away and become corrupt, until at last it was united to the state, and thus became the great "Whore of Babylon," because it had committed fornication with the Kings of the Earth?

11.—If the latter be the case, is not any human improvement or reformation like putting "new cloth on an old garment," or new wine into old bottles?

12.—If it took divine power, and immediate revelation to institute the gospel in the first instance, are they not needed to perpetuate the same?

13.—If the Everlasting Covenant has been broken, and the "prophets and seers covered," until darkness and doubt, dissent and heresy, and all other kinds of abominations have overspread the earth "and all has become as the words of a sealed book," can it be renewed without an express revelation from God? or will it be maintained that human agency alone will suffice to reform the errors of the age, to combat the impetuosity of crime, or stay the principle of moral evil?

14.—Are we living in a day rife with the consequences of this great apostacy, such as is foretold in the 24th and 59th Isaiah, and 24th Matthew?

15.—If so, may we not expect that "other labourers" would be sent into the vineyard at this the eleventh hour, just before the day of God's wrath upon Babylon, and the pouring out of the latter-day judgments, announcing that the kingdom of Heaven is again at hand, and crying with a mighty voice,—"Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him!" And will they not be informed of his near approach by an holy angel, who shall restore the gospel in these last days; and will not the dispensation thus committed be the dispensation of the fulness of times, and the kingdom thus announced, the one spoken of by Daniel?

16.—Has any one a right to teach, preach, or administer in the ordinances of the gospel without divine authority; or will the administrations of unauthorized persons be considered legal in the sight of God?

17.—In what manner was divine authority given and communicated in any age of the world when God had a church upon the earth?

18.—Was it by one person assuming the authority given to another who had preceded him through reading an account of the commission given to this his predecessor, as is done in these days with the commission given to the apostles?

19.—Or was it by being either called of God in a direct manner, as in the cases of Moses and Samuel, or indirectly through the medium of one who already holds the priesthood and authority of God, as in the cases of Joshua, Timothy, and others? and when so called is not the laying on of authorized hands the scriptural mode of communicating the power and priesthood unto the person called?

20.—Is not assumed authority illegal? and will not those who assume it be punished, sooner or later?

21.—Is not an active, living faith, the only true faith?

22.—Are not the Godhead, their attributes, and the gospel the objects on which our faith should be fixed?

23.—If there be but one true and genuine faith, will it not always be characterized by these objects, and sealed and certified by the effects flowing from it; namely, such as are promised by the Savior and such as are enumerated by St. Paul? Did not the ancients by faith obtain promises, work righteousness, turn to flight the armies of the aliens, and stop the mouths of lions? Did not Moses by faith divide the sea, and smite the flinty rock? And shall we now say that the nature, objects, and power of faith have in any way changed or ceased? May we not rather say,—that men have ceased to worship the true God, in the right way, and have thus lost the spirit which is the source of these blessings?

24.—Is not this the ancient faith? And are we not bound to "contend for that faith which was once delivered unto the Saints?

25.—Is not sincere repentance a principle of the gospel?

26.—Is not baptism by immersion a principle of the gospel?

27.—Is it not "for the remission of sins?"

28.—Is it not mockery in the sight of God to baptize infants, seeing they have never sinned?

29.—Are they not saved by reason of the atonement, and is not this atonement efficacious?

30.—Instead of baptising them, should we not "take them in our arms and bless them?

31.—Is not baptism for those only who have become actual transgressors?

32.—Is there a single command, precept, or example of infant baptism?

33.—Is there a single command, precept, or example of sprinkling as a baptism?

34.—Is not the laying on of authorized hands the scriptural mode of coming in possession of the gift of the Holy Ghost?

35.—After obeying these first principles, are we not required to go on unto perfection, so that our path may be as that of the just, shining more and more unto the perfect day; and to observe all things whatsoever he hath commanded us, such as the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper?

36.—If we be sick, and nigh unto death, should we not send for the elders to annoint us, and to pray that the Lord may raise us up? And if we have sinned, can we not be forgiven, inasmuch as we are penitent?

37.—Since there is so great a resemblance between our church and that of former days, are not the honest among men bound to join us?

The Jews, Judea, and Christianity.

BY JUDGE NOAH.

Within the last twenty-five years great revolutions have occurred in the east, affecting in a peculiar manner the future destiny of the followers of Mohammed, and distinctly marking the gradual advancement of the christian power. Turkey has been deprived of Greece, after a fearful and sanguinary struggle, and the land of warriors and sages has become sovereign and independent. Egypt conquered and occupied Syria, and her fierce Pacha had thrown off allegiance to the Sultan. Menaced, however, by the superior power of the Ottoman Porte, Mehemet Ali was compelled to submit to the commander of the faithful, reconveying Syria to Turkey, and was content to accept the hereditary possession of Egypt.

Russia has assailed the wandering hordes of Caucasus. England has had various contests with the native princes of India, and has waged war with China. The issue of these contests in Asia has been marked with singular success, and evidently indicate the progressive power of the Christian governments in that interesting quarter of the globe. France has carried its victorious arms through the north of Africa. Russia, with a steady glance and firm step, approaches Turkey in Europe, and when her railroads are completed to the Black Sea, will pour in her Cossacks from the Don and the Vistula, and Constantinople will be occupied by the descendants of the Tartar dynasty, and all Turkey in Europe, united to Greece, will constitute either an independent empire, or be occupied by Russia, who, with one arm on the Mediterranean, and the other on the North Sea, will nearly embrace all Europe. The counterbalance of this gigantic power will be a firm and liberal union of Austria with all Italy and the Roman States, down to the borders of Gaul: but the revolution will not end here. England must possess Egypt, as affording the only secure route to her possessions in India through the Red Sea; then Palestine, thus placed between the Russian possessions and Egypt, reverts to its legitimate proprietors, and for the safety of the surrounding nations, a powerful, wealthy, independent, and enterprising people are placed there, by and with the consent of the Christian powers, and with their aid and agency the land of Israel passes once more into the possession of the descendants of Abraham. The ports of the Mediterranean will be again open to the busy hum of commerce; the fields will again bear the fruitful harvest; and Christian and Jew will together on Mount Zion raise their voices in praise of Him whose covenant with Abraham was to endure forever, and in whose seed all the nations of the earth are to be blessed. This is our destiny. Every attempt to colonise the Jews in other countries has failed; their eye has steadily rested on their own beloved Jerusalem, and they have said, "The time will come, the promise will be fulfilled."

The Jews are in a most favorable position to repossess themselves of the promised land, and organise a free and liberal government; they are at this time zealously and strenuously engaged in advancing the cause of education. In Poland, Moldavia, Wallachia, on the Rhine and Danube, and wherever the liberality of the governments have not interposed obstacles, they are practical farmers. Agriculture was once their only natural employment; the land is now desolate, according to the prediction of the prophets, but it is full of hope and promise. The soil is rich, loamy, and everywhere indicates fruitfulness, and the magnificent cedars of Lebanon shew the strength of the soil on the highest elevations; the climate is mild and salubrious, and double crops in the lowlands may be annually anticipated. Everything is produced in the greatest variety. Wheat, barley, rye, corn, oats, and the cotton plant in great abundance. The sugar-cane is cultivated with success; tobacco grows plentifully on the mountains; indigo is produced in abuudance on the banks of the Jordan; olives and olive-oil are everywhere found; the mulberry almost grows wild, out of which the most beautiful silk is made; grapes of the largest kind flourish everywhere; cochineal is produced in abundance on the coast, and can be most profitably cultivated; the coffee-tree grows almost spontaneously; and oranges, figs, dates, pomegranates, peaches, apples, plums, nectarines, pine-apples, and all the tropical fruits known to us flourish everywhere throughout Syria. The several ports in the Mediterranean, which formerly carried on a most valuable commerce, can be advantageously re-occupied. Manufacturers of wool, cotton, and silk, could furnish all the Levant and the islands of the Mediterranean with useful fabrics. In a circumference within twenty days' travel of the holy city, two millions of Jews reside. Of the two and a half tribes which removed east of the trans-Jordanic cities, Judah and Benjamin, and half Manasseh, I compute the number in every part of the world as exceeding six millions. Of the missing nine and a half tribes, part of which are in Turkey, China, Hindoostan, Persia, and on this continent, it is impossible to ascertain their numerical force. Many retain only the strict observance of the Mosaic laws, rejecting the Talmud and Commentaries. Others, in Syria, Egypt, and Turkey, are rigid observers of all the ceremonies. Reforms are in progress which correspond with the enlightened character of the age, without invading any of the cardinal principles of the religion. The whole sect are therefore in a position, as far as intelligence, education, industry, undivided enterprise, variety of pursuits, science, a love of the arts, political economy, and wealth could desire, to adopt the initiatory steps for the organisation of a free government in Syria, as I have before said, by and with the consent and under the protection of the Christian powers. I propose, therefore, for all the Christian societies who take an interest in the fate of Israel, to assist in their restoration by aiding to colonise the Jews in Judea; the progress may be slow, but the result will be certain. The tree must be planted, and it will not want liberal and pious hands to water it, and in time it may flourish and produce fruit of hope and blessing.

From the Millennial Star.

Truth.

BY JANE MASON.

What is thB, with meteor blaze,
Fills the nations with amaze?
As to earth she bends her way,
Turning darkness into day.

'Tis a form, majestic bright,
From the upper realms of light;
Faith and Hope upon her brow,
Rob'd in love as white as snow.

In her joyful hands she brings
Present hopes of future things;
Cheers our long benighted way
With a bright millennial ray.

Hail! thou Heavenly Messenger,
Thee we long have waited for;
Glad our longing, aching eyes,
Turn from earth to Paradise.

Welcome, stranger, come and rest,
Dwell in every honest breast;
These, thy work, have understood,
Hail'd thee from the throne of God.

What! though some may think thee changed,
'Tis themselves who are estrang'd
Far from truth's simplicity,
Wrapt in Babel's mystery.

Come, ye sons of mental night,
Fearlessly behold the light;
Why, so mad, your dross prefer
To the gold she would confer.

Hark! she speaks, ye sects give ear;
You're condemn'd if you forbear:
Let your broken cisterns go,
Come where living waters flow.

See! she stands with open arms;
Calls you, with unequalled charms:
Cast your empty husks to swine,
Come taste her milk and wine!

Gospel truth's this seraph's name;
Still unalter'd she's the same:
When all creeds and systems fail,
Truth eternal will prevail.

Plain Talk.

Mrs. Swisshelm, of the Pittsburgh Saturday Visitor, goes for horse whipping drunkards to reform them, and in answer to those who charge her for the want of the womanly sympathy, quotes the passage, "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." Of the tippling shops and their victims, she speaks after this fashion:

"If we were a man—if we were a voter—we would vote down the doggeries. As we are a woman, if we had a husband, father or a brother, who was likely to become a victim to the serpent of the still, we would take the disease in time—in the first stages—and warn the dramseller within our reach, not to encroach on our hearth; and if they persisted, we would burn down their groceries with as clear a conscience as we would make a fire to burn June-bugs and save our plums.

"This will be called incendiary doctrine; but desperate diseases want desperate remedies: and when our happiness, and the life, and soul, and honor, of one dear to us, are at stake, it would not be well for the man that stood between us and his salvation; if we had concluded salvation; possible. We would never advise any other to such a remedy; for the remedy would be imprisonment for life; but we would consider this a positive blessing compared to loathing the bespotted face of one we had loved. To us, there is no object on earth so loathsome, so hateful, so abominable as a drunkard. We would not live near one, for we should die of a sick stomach. It may be very angelic for a pure-minded, virtuous woman to love and caress a great drunken beast, but for our part, we have not the slightest pretensions to being an angel. And the coil of an anaconda would be quite as pleasant a corsage, as the entwining of a drunkard's arm. From the smell they have on the street, one would imagine that the angel that staid near them long would require to be pretty strongly scented with brimstone. Evil communications corrupt good manners, and people are forbidden to be unequally yoked! We can think of no yoke so unequal as that which would bind a decent woman to a drunkard; and we most firmly believe that so far from its being the duty of a wife to live with a drunken husband, it is a violation of the laws of God, and the dictates of common sense and common decency. A woman who would persist in living with such a man, should be shut up in a lunatic asylum. Grant it that she has a right to dispose of herself as she pleases! Has she any right to furnish the state with paupers and criminals? Has the drunkard any right to hand down his vices and their consequences to posterity!"

The Contented Man.

The contented man is the richest man, and also the happiest man. In earthly things he wishes no more than nature; he can frame his thoughts to his estates, that when he hath heart he cannot want, because he is as free from desire as superfluity. He has seasonably broken the headstrong restiveness of prosperity, and can manage it at pleasure.

WHAT'S A GENTLEMAN!—We are constantly reading cards of thanks to the gentlemanly captain, the gentlemanly steward, the gentlemanly clerk, the gentlemanly barkeeper, et cetera, et cetera, and we have often asked ourselves what constitutes a gentleman of the present age. In old times it was fortune, living without labor, and with ease and comfort, now it appears to be a title only conferred in return for some favor, and indiscriminately bestowed. Thus, the captain of a ship is termed gentlemanly if he treats his passengers with courtesy; the clerk of a steamboat who hands the printers some newspapers, is gentlemanly; and the steward who pops you some champagne is called gentlemanly. We are the nation of all others for titles, and we confound them all. When we talk with Dr. Francis he always calls us doctor; when the recorder is speaking to us he calls us judge; the lawyer calls us counseller, the general never fails to call us major; the countryman addresses us as "captain," and the downeaster as "stranger." The title least heard among us is mister. We were once dining with our consul at Falmouth, Mr. Fox, and were quite startled at a sweet Quaker girl asking us, quaintly and demurely, "Mordecai, what wine wilt thou drink?"—[Noah's Sunday Times.

Sir John Franklin.

The following is the message which the President sent in on Monday in regard to Sir John Franklin:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.:

I herewith submit to you copies of a correspondence with the lady of Sir John Franklin, relative to the well known expedition under his command, to the arctic regions, for the discovery of a northwest passage. On the receipt of her first letter, imploring the aid of the American Government in a search for the missing ships engaged in an enterprise which interested all civilized nations, I anxiously sought the means of affording that assistance, but was prevented from accomplishing the object I had in view in consequence of the want of vessels suitable to encounter the perils of a proper exploration, the lateness of the season, and the want of an appropriation by Congress to enable me to furnish and equip an efficient squadron for that object. All that I could do, in compliance with a request which I was deeply anxious to gratify, was to cause the advertisements of reward, promulgated by the British Government, and the best information I could obtain as to the means of finding the vessels under the command of Sir John Franklin, to be widely circulated among our whalers and sea-faring men, whose spirit of enterprise might lead them to the inhospitable regions where that heroic officer and his brave followers, who periled their lives in the cause of science and for the benefit of the world, were supposed to be imprisoned among the icebergs, or wrecked upon a desert shore.

Congress being now in session, the propriety and expediency of an appropriation for fitting out an expedition to proceed in search of the missing ships, with their officers and crews, is respectfully submitted to your consideration.

Gold Bearing Quartz.

MR. WRIGHT, one of the Representatives to Congress from Californin, brings with him a great many specimens of the Quartz found in the mountains of California. This rock is inexhaustible on the western side of the Sierra Nevada, and no one pound of it has yielded less than one dollar's worth of gold. The gold can easily be separated from the rock by quicksilver. By aid of steam power this rock is stamped in Georgia. One machine will stamp about 1000 bushels of quartz rock per day, and if the yield is fifty cents worth of gold to the bushel of quartz of 80 pounds, the profit is considered very large. What then must be the profit of the California quartz, which yields, on an average, one dollar's worth of gold to the single pound of quartz. T. Butler King has also been experimenting with this quartz, and has come to the same result. Mr. Wright has by this time placed on the Speaker's table a fragment of this quartz, weighing twelve pounds, from all parts of which the gold protrudes plainly in a state almost pure. That piece contains pure gold to the amount of six hundred dollars. The California State House ought to be built with that rock.

ENERGY.—Energy is omnipotent. The clouds that surround the houseless boy of to-day are dispersed, and is invited to a palace. It is the work of energy. The child of who is a begger this moment, in a few days to come, may stand forth the admiration of angels. Who has not seen the life giving power of energy? It makes the wilderness to bloom as the rose! whitens the ocean; navigates our rivers; levels mountains; paves with iron a highway from State to State, and sends through, with the speed of lightening, from one extremity of the land to the other. Without energy, what is man! A foolish clod.

Discovery of a Northwest Passage.

A letter in the Courier and Enquirer dated Mazatlan, Nov. 23, states that the British frigate Amphytrite, sloop-of-war Hecate, and Royal Thames yatch, club schooner Nancy Dawson, arrived on the 19th inst., from the Northern Ocean. The writer affirms that they have discovered a northwest passage in lat. 73 and lon. about 30½, having gone one degree and a half further north than any vessel had previously been. He also says that they discovered a new continent, but on account of ice could not approach nearer than fifteen miles to land. They did not find Sir John Franklin, and on account of ice were forced to leave.—[N. Y. Tribune.

Good Hit at Fashionable Life.

Mrs. Swisshelm thus hits off the representatives of a class unfortunately too numerous in all genteel society. Listen to her, young ladies and,—in spite of Fashionable Northern Finishing Schools, beware of the rocks which she so skilfully exposes.

"She is some" we assure you. Experience and observation must be the most powerful auxiliaries that aid her in giving to genteel humbugery those nice and finishing strokes.

"There are hundreds of girls in every large city who parade the streets in feathers, flowers, silk and laces, whose hands are as soft and white as uselessness can make them, whose mothers keep boarders to get a living for their idle daughters. These mothers will cook, sweep, wait on the tables carry loads of marketing, do the most menial drudgery, toil late and early, with very little clothing, while their hopeful daughters spend their mornings lounging in bed, reading some silly book, taking lessons in French, fixing finery, and the like. The evenings are devoted to dress making, and displaying their charms and accomplishments to the very best advantage, for the wonderment and admiration of the knights of the yardstick and young aspirants for professional honors—doctors without patients, lawyers without clients—who are as brainless and soulless as themselves. After a while, the piano-pounding simpleton captivates a tape-measuring, law-expounding, or pill-making simpleton. The two ninnies spend every cent that can be raised by hook or crook—get all that can be got on credit in broadcloth, satin, flowers, lace, carriages, attendance, etc.; hang their empty pockets on somebody's chair, lay their empty heads on somebody's pillow, and commence their empty life with no other prospect than living at somebody's expense—with no other purpose than living genteely and spiting their neighbors. This is a synopsis of the lives of thousands of street and ball-room belles, perhaps some of whose shining costumes you have envied from a passing glance. Thousands of women in cities dress elegantly in the streets, who have not a sufficiency of wholsome food, a comfortable bed, or fuel enough to warm their rooms.

"I once boarded in a 'genteel boarding house,' in Louisville; there were two young ladies and a piano in the house—hall and parlor handsomely furnished. The eldest young lady—the belle—wore a summer bonnet at ten dollars—a silk and blond concern that could not last more than three months—silk and satin dresses at two, three or four dollars per yard, and five dollars a piece for making them, and the entire family, women, boys and babies, nine in all, slept in one small room, with two dirty bags of pine shavings, two straw bolsters, and three dirty quilts, for bedding—no sheeting, no slips; and there on the wall hung the pea-green and white satin, the rich silk and lawn dresses. These ladies did not work, but played on the piano, accordeon and cards; and nearly broke their hearts the week we were there, because another, who, I persume, lived just as they did, called on them with a great clumsey gold chain on her neck. None of them had one; and Miss Lablinda, the belle, could eat no supper, and had a fit of the sulks to console her for the want of a chain."

Immortality of Mind.

But while the mind rests with a pleasing satisfaction on these great deductions of philosophy, it yet pants for a fuller and higher revelation. If the man of clay has been honored with such a luxurious table, may not his undying and reasonable soul count upon a spiritual palace and sigh for that intellectual repast at which the master of the feast is to disclose his secrets? In its rapid, continued expansion, the mind, conscious of its capacity for a higher sphere, feel even now that it is advancing to a goal more distant and more cheering than the tomb. Its energies increase and multiply under the incumbrances of age; and even when man's heart is turning into bone, his joints into marble, his mind can soar to its highest flight, and seize with its firmest grasp. Nor do the affections plead less eloquently for a future home. Age is their season of warmth and genial emotion. The objects long and fondly clasped to our bosom, have been removed by Him who gives, and who takes what he gives; and lingering in the valley of bleeding and of broken hearts, we yearn for that break of day which is to usher in the eternal morn—for the house of many mansions which is already prepared for us, and for the promised welcome to the threshold of the blest, where we shall meet again the loved and the lost, and devote the eternity of our being to the advice of its Almighty author.—[North British Review.

If you mean to be happy when old, be temperate when you are young.

The Washington correspondence of the New York Journal of Commerce writes:

There is great reason to believe that Mr. Clay's proposition of compromise will be favorably considered, and speedily acted upon. It is not a difficult matter, if there is a disposition towards conciliation, to reconcile the extremest claims, which the Southern Senators yesterday made, with Mr. Clay's plan of accommodation. Any one must see that no compromise act is really necessary, for the territorial question will settle itself. All that is necessary is that Congress should simply keep their hand off, and let things take their natural course.

The South will be satisfied with this—or they will take the Missouri line, or the Clayton proposition. The territorial question being settled, other matters involving slavery will give little trouble.

Things to be Remembered.

Mormon officers in Pottawatamie County are judged incompotent, by a portion of the Loco Foco representation in Washington from our State, to take the depositions of their witnesses here in the matter of the contested seat of Mr. Thompson, in the House of Representatives. While we have no objection to official men doing what the law and their oath of office require them to do, whether they are citizens of our county or any other in the State, confidence reposed generally meets with a response of the same.

His Honor, Judge Kinney, soon after his arrival here, had the misfortune to lose, in a back stable yard, his gold watch, said to be valued at two hundred dollars. A poor laboring Mormon happened to discover it just as he was going to throw a board or plank upon it, or where it lay. He secured the watch when no other human being saw him, went into the Hotel, and probably being one of those dishonest voters, presented it to his Honor. The Judge must confess that if Mormon officials are too dishonest to act in accordance with Loco Foco interests, the unofficials are not dishonest enough to retain his watch, when they might have done it with impunity. It is a crime for men to be dishonest. We are proud that the watch was immediately returned to its owner.

The following is an extract from a copy of the record of Mr Thompson's answer (before the Committee on Elections) to Mr. Miller's memorial:

"The said persons who are represented to have cast their votes at the said poll at Kanesville, were not, at that time citizens of the United States, but aliens who had come from foreign nations, and had never been naturalized. They had not resided in said State six months next preceding the said election, nor within the County in which they claimed to vote twenty days: nor were they twenty-one years of age!!" Fellow citizens of Pottawatamie, what do you think of a representative in Congress that will utter such sayings concerning you? Remember that you are INDISCRIMINATELY called aliens, foreigners, and not twenty-one years of age, not an individual exception! You who fought for your Country in 1812, whose fathers fought under Gen. Washington;—you who have been citizens of Lee County Iowa for twelve years,—who have been acting magistrates in said County, and before whom the very lawyers employed by Thompson to impeach your votes, have plead scores of cases. Are you aliens? are you foreigners? are you not twenty-one years of age? Let us ask you a plain back-woods question: Do you not believe that before Mr. Thompson had fairly shed his swaddling linen, some of you who are called aliens, and foreigners, and not twenty-one years of age, had been reared to perfect manhood under the stars and strips that now float over our land? and had not many of you reaped your second harvest in this very County before you voted? Will your grey hairs bless and honor the words of a man who thus falsely accuses and misrepresents you in the Government of the nation? One who, if not an necessary before or after the fact, is the apologist of him who steals and tramples upon your sacred rights! We cannot say that no illegal votes were cast, yet we know of none. But we do know that they were not all foreigners, aliens, and minors.

Let it be remembered also, that if he who steals your property, and after being detected in the theft, or the stolen property found in his possession or upon his person shall confess his fault and promise reformation, he comes within the circle of charity and hope; but if on detection, he attempts to justify the deed or the principle, he gives the strongest proof in his power of a heart abandoned to wickedness, and shuts himself out of the pale of moral and social associations. It is a difficult matter for us to see how a man can come honorably by stolen property, and refuse to tell how he came by it. Were he, in no shape, a partner in the crime, neither did cherish a wish to screen the actual thief, why should he object to tell the whole story? If, for instance, the stealing of our poll book were no crime, and nothing wrong in it as some would have us believe why should he in whose possession it was found, refuse to give its past history so far as he knew it.

We will venture here a prediction in our own name, that the Democratic party in this State will suffer greater loss by the way they have treated our votes than they would have done if they had admitted the entire vote without opposition, though we are all reputed foreigners, aliens, minors, and without any abiding city." If Mr. Thompson had said that we were exiles instead of aliens, being forced away from our homes contrary to law by a Democratic State, he would have told the truth as it is. But when he calls us all foreigners, unnaturalized, not citizens of the United States, nor of this State, nor yet twenty-one years of age without exception, he may consider it good democratic truth; but as we are not a democrat, we cannot exactly swallow it. If every vote in Pottawatamie County was illegal, we contend that it did not justify the conduct in relation to their return. If they were illegal, it would have been in time to cast them into the street or among the refuse paper after they had undergone a proper examination, and been legally condemned. But the whole of this affair is accounted for in few words. "It was your bull that gored my ox."

Blessed is the person that will help Br. Stoddard and family to remove to the Valley this Spring. He has labored faithfully and honorably as a missionary. His health is failing, and he wants to go and wash in that warm pool in the Valley that is troubled every now and then—where the first that step in are healed of whatsoever disease they have.

A Suggestion.

The season of emigration is just about to open, and our streets will be thronged with strangers from different quarters, grog shops or doggeries will be the order of the day, and drunkenness and carousing the order of the night, unless the officers of the law are at their posts. Our county organization has been submitted to head quarters in Washington City, and sanctioned by the Government.

We would recommend to our Prosecuting Attorney to keep an eye upon those shops that deal out liquor by the drink, or by the small quantity, and let them contribute to the revenue of the county in a manner that shall stay the flood-gates of intemperance, profanity and confusion.

The dear emigrant won't die if he shall not be able to get tipsy whenever he pleases: and we do not think it essential to salvation, either temporal or spiritual, to open a place for intemperance, and for the many disgusting scenes connected therewith. We are willing to futher all the dishonor that the town may gain by not allowing doggeries to be kept in it. And as to the health of the emigrant and his future prosperity, we should be willing to insure his life and health while journeying to the mines for a less per cent. than as though he left this frontier, steeped in arden t spirits.

If, however, doggeries must be kept, the proprietors may probably think it best to attach another branch of business to their establishments, a natural appendage to that department of trade. It is about as honorable, equally lucrative, and but little in advance in preying upon the moral feelings and habits of community; and it is commonly understood, that where one is, the other is not far off. We blush with confusion at the idea of giving it a name; and it really is a house of tremendous fame, where the Sons of Bacchus may revel under the branches of the tree o f Venus until sallow and putrid disease is generated in these votaries of criminal pleasure and indulgence, by which they are hurried to the mansions of the dead; and at the bar of the Supreme Judge, the doggery keeper stands charged with enticing these ruined ones, for the sake of paltry mammon, to take the first step on the road to eternal misery and woe!

If doggery keepers think this last clause an insult upon their sublime and honorable calling, they must not blame the citizens of this town, if they generally think the business of doggery keeping an insult upon their feelings.

To sell whisky by the drink for the purpose of getting an out-fit for the Valley upon the principle that others will sell it if you do not, would be like your murdering a man for his money because you know of some one else that will do it if you do not. If others murder, it is no sign that you should covet money stained with human blood.

For liquor to be kept and sold in kegs to emigrants crossing the plains, and have it directly removed out of town, so that our streets shall not echo with the whoops and yells of the inebriate, would not be so very objectionable.

But a doggery is too contemptible for any man who has a soul more elevated than the swine to condescend to. We have never been backward in expressing our views upon this subject: But the County Commissioners will manage this business as they think proper, and we will be content, after having cleared our skirts.

Our Last Extra.

Some complaint, we hear, is made about the issuing of our extra at the particular crisis when it appeared. It is alleged to be a bar to free investigation. But we suppose the suppressing or purloining of our votes was no bar to Mr. Miller's getting his seat when it was justly his.

We speak it plainly,—the sober reflecting people here consider themselves outraged by the course taken with their votes; and an attempt to explain the propriety of throwing them into the street or carrying them off secretly or by stealth, is "adding insult to injury."

If such kind of blarney were offered as an explanation for like conduct to any other American citizens except to Mormons, we are confident that those who offered it would receive what we should be sorry to have them get in Pottawatamie county. What kind of materials can men be made of, who will indulge the expectation that a people thus outraged, will make any particular exertion to favor a cause whose advocates resort to such dishonorable means for its support. Their education must have been alloyed with a liberal share of brass through all the progressive stages of their advancement.

We know of no illegality in the conducting of the election, the result of which, made the claim of Mr. Miller to a seat in Congress, valid and good; and if we did, we should be slow to run about to hunt up a political enemy to tell it to; particularly to such as we have good reason to believe were accessories to the taking away of the last and dearest rights of freemen. There are plenty of men in this county who were never Mormons, and Democrats too, over whom our extra could exert no particular influence further than truth and justice might be expected to influence just and honorable men. There are some here, also, who have been expelled from the Church,—who, like Wm. Smith, are disaffected and owe us no allegiance or good will. These might possibly swear to your heart's content; still they are men that can feel and appreciate many wrongs that we have endured. You can have free access to them.

We have been isolated on this frontier so long, and have had but little law or government except that of the church, which has become almost second nature to us, that we hardly know how to shape a proposal to settle difficulties, except on the principle of church government. When a member of our community does wrong, we require him to confess it and promise reformation, or exclude him from our fellowship. Now just confess, frankly, that you or your party stole our poll book without any just cause or provocation; and do it with a spirit of sincere and genuine repentance, (no hypocrasy) and we will forgive you, and admit you to trial for fellowship, and political communion, provided you will covenant that you will never do the like again to us nor to any other people.

We wish it distinctly understood that our remarks in this paper concerning Democrats are not designed to extend in their application further than to that clique connected with this poll book affair. We know of many democrats throughout the country who are honorable and good men. We exchange with many valuable Democratic papers, and we should be sorry to include the whole party in this low and disgraceful affair.

Mr. Thompson's Counsel are here with D. F. Miller Esq., taking depositions concerning the contested seat in Congress before his Honor, Judge Kinney of the Supreme Court of Iowa. D. F. Miller Esq., is quite unwell of a chronic disease of the chest and stomach.

"Picciola" has our thanks for her favors, which will appear in our next. We hope to hear from her pen often.

Judge Mason.

Many of our citizens well remember that the above named gentleman, with several others, was out here last fall, running political or geographical lines through the country.

He called at our office, subscribed for our paper, and said about as follows: that although he was a Democrat, he did not justify the course of the Legislature in reference to us, and expressed a wish to do something to counteract or nullify the wrong meted out to us by his own party. He observed that the laws of Iowa were about to undergo a revision, and asked if there was any alterations that we wished out here. We thought curiously of the suggestion at the time, believing that it required the action of the legislature to effect the kind of alteration that he spoke of: But we replied that the machinery of law was not in full operation here, and we could not tell till we saw how it worked, whether we wanted it altered or not. We thanked him for the kind feelings that he expressed towards us as a people, and observed that we felt that the Legislature had denied us our just rights, yet we believed that time and patience would bring all these matters about right. He intimated that his object was to find the most valuable locations in this new country, with an eye to speculation.

While the Judge was expressing so many just and liberal feelings towards the Mormons, we were more than half inclined to believe him a sort of merciful independent Democrat; and a humane sensible man. We do not like to be very severe on him any how. But we did not know at that time that he dismissed Mr. Wm. O Clark, and Dr. John Patten from the grand jury of Lee County Court for the crime of being prominent Mormons. We must confess, also, that we did not believe him capable of concealing in his own possession, and upon his own person, our stolen poll book! Yet such appears to be the fact. But it is not improbable that that was the particular favor that he wished to do us to expiate the sin of his own party committed in their vindictive tirade against us, and to comfort us a little after passing under the castigating strokes of a Democratic Legislature whose course in relation to our affairs, he so piously and feelingly regretted.

The Mormons are frequently charged with deception, theft, and a hundred and one other things: But since the Democrats have stolen our votes and concealed our poll book under the guise of friendship, under the sanctity of honor, and in the face of the Goddess of Liberty, we feel it our duty to give them our hat.

There is a saying of King Solomon that the Judge probably did not think of at the time he consented to receive the stolen property, knowing it to be such; but he has most likely thought of it, and also, felt it since the discovery. "As dead flies cause the apothecaries ointment to send forth an ill savor, so does a little folly, him that is had in reputation."

Information Wanted.

With all due respect for every body, we ask how many converts to the truth any person has made who cherishes a wish to make money by selling whisky, or other liquor by the drink? Do the sick or afflicted call upon the grocery keepers to visit and to pray for them? Can grocery keepers have the spirit of the Lord to enable them to stand before a congregation and reprove, rebuke and exhort with confidence and with success?

The way to keep a grocery and to "keep it right," is to keep it always about 20 miles off from any place, or serve it up as a learned physician once recommended cucumbers to be served up: "Slice them up very thin, let them stand in cold water for half an hour,—then pour off the water, and add salt, pepper and vinegar to them in suitable quantities, and then throw them to the pigs and they will hurt no one." Some men are very anxious to do us good and to benefit us by selling us liquor. It has such a beneficial influence in preserving the morals of the people, in reclaiming the tippler, in promoting industry and virtuous habits, and in keeping up a healthy and high toned moral influence throughout the county, that the commissioners may not only think best to grant them lisence to do it, but even grant them a premium for their valuable services. Men who do good, ought to have pay for their labor; and if the commissioners will not pay such men, nor the magistrate, nor the prosecuting attorney, probably the mass of the people will circulate a subscription to raise a merited reward.

Beaten at their own Game.

The Commissioners of Monroe County, who organized the Kanesville precinct, we learn, were all Democrats. The clerk of their Court was also a Democrat, and likewise the Sheriff of that County. The whole matter of this precinct organization was a Democratic measure from its alpha to its omega; and a Democratic delegation was here to show a fatherly care over the Election, and to influence, if possible, its course. But lo, and Behold! When the sheep would not run into the fold which the Democrats had so generously made for them, they called us goats,—nay, worse; wolves! "Aliens! Minors, not twenty-one years of age," and had followed stealing for half a century. Disappointment and chagrin flew like wild fire through the country! The Sheriff of Monroe County hurried home with adverse tidings, and informed the clerk of that county of the desperate condition of affairs in Pottawatamie which caused him to come to the conclusion to reject the returns or poll book, even before he saw it.

Oh democracy, thou art the father of this precinct organization, and none else. Thou alone didst cause it to be done with the hope of securing the very votes which thou now laborest to prove illegal; because, forsooth, they were cast against thee. Thou art the father of this whole scheme! And now, if thou dost pronounce it an illegitimate child, thou reflectest no great honor or credit upon thy morality or virtue.

The judges and clerks of that election were Democrats, and some of them voted for Thompson if we can believe their own words.

"Necessity, the Mother of Invention."

We believe it will win. Ye legal men, what say you? The thing to be done is, to stop the retailing of ardent spirits in our town in less quantities than one gallon.

Complain before a magistrate, get a fine assessed, and then the defendant will appeal to the Circuit Court, and we have none. It will be remembered that no legal bail can be given here, because there are none that have titles to land, &c. The defendant can be required, in the absence of sufficient legal bail, to make a deposite of cash with the magistrate as security, or be put into prison for want of proper bail. The commissioners should see that the jail is completed with all consistent despatch, we think. It is not for us to direct them however, but we trust their wisdom will suggest to them the propriety of completeing this work.

From our Extra of March 13.

Stealing the Poll Books.

Another Pilgrimage to Pottawatamie!!

We understand that Judge Mason has appointed J. C. Hall, and L. E. Johnson to go to Kanesville. It is supposed that their object is to intimidate the people of that place, or to get some evidence to counteract the odium which now rests upon them in the stolen Poll Book affair. These are pretty men to send on such a mission. If we mistake not, this same Mr. Hall made a strong anti-mormon speech in Lee county, during the mob excitement, four years ago. The Mormons will hardly forget that. And then this same Mr. Johnson, we learn, who accompanies him, was the Major of the militia and called out the troops, to prevent the Mormons landing in Iowa, when driven from Nauvoo, and prevented supplies being sent them during the siege. Johnson was once a Mormon preacher, and afterwards turned renegade. The Mormons won't forget this, either. We understand that Judge Kinney, Supreme Judge and Hall's brother-in-law, accompanies Hall and Johnson, to take testimony.

If this trio can succeed in throwing dust in the eyes of the people, so that they will believe that the stealing these Poll Books was no criminal offence, they will do it. The whole of this transaction, from beginning to end is most infamous; and if the honest men in the loco foco party are prepared to justify their leaders in it, then are they ready to uphold and encourage vice in its worst form. What, connive at an act which strikes the deadliest blow at freedom? An act which destroys the elective franchise, and at one fell swoop nullifies the boasted blessing of the ballot-box.

Whatever may have been our personal respect for some of those who are implicated in this transaction, justice and love for our institutions, compel us to denounce them as traitors to the cause of freedom. If men of high standing in their party can consent to commit such a shameful moral and political robbery, for the sake of keeping that party in the majority—so hostile to all correct notions of free government—they will do no worse, it seem to us, to go a step farther, and rob men of their money as well as of their political rights.

They may set up the plea that these votes were illegal, but that does not mend the matter. They thought they were legal and they acted as if they thought so. It seems to us too late for them to try to prove these stolen papers to be valueless. The quo animo, the intent, must be looked into, and it will be. Mr. Hall, or whoever stole the papers, may have thought a cute yankee trick was being played, but every legal voter whose name is attached to that record has the right to arraign the thief and his accomplices before and after the fact, as robbers of their rights, which to them were considered more valuable than money or any other species of mere property.

The men engaged in thus robbing the ballot-box of its potency deserve to be and should be spurned from their party as deadly foes to liberty and right. If they are not, they will be dead weights to any party who may retain them. Mark that, ye loco focos, who are still inclined to hug Hall, Mason and Co. to your bosoms. Read the letter of our correspondent from Keokuk.

The foregoing is from the Burlington Hawk-Eye of Feb. 28.

As the above named persons said to be coming to Pottawatamie County, on a mission connected with the contested election, are representatives from the party who stole and secreted our votes; we trust that they will meet with that kind of letting alone which will prove to them that we have no fellowship with those who will steal our rights, nor with their representatives.

As to the Anti-Mormon speeches, or apostate Mormon renegades, we care but little about them. We should think however, that such men only, would volunteer their services on such an expedition. They will probably find out all they can, and we shall feel it our duty to help them about as much as they helped us to find our stolen poll books, so as to be even in civility and kindness.

In our public speeches, in our letters, and by every means in our power, we endeavored to forestall any illegal voter that might attempt to cast a vote; and we believe that we were successful. At least, we have no knowledge to the contrary.

If our Poll Books had not been stolen, but treated with respect and submitted to an honorable examination, we presume that every citizen here would be willing to afford every facility to this delegation to acquire information possible; but as it now is, they cannot complain if we are not the most communicative people in the world.

Communications from Judge Coleman and J. C. Hall, Esq., are crowded out this week. They will appear in our next.

We have received from the Hon. Mr. Seward, Senator from the State of New York, a pamphlet containing some remarks of his, and of other Senators touching the disposal of the public lands. We are in for the Public Lands to be given to actual settlers in suitable and reasonable quantities whether foreign or native born. If they will improve them for a few years, or long enough to give evidence of a bona fide intention of permanent settlement. We are pleased with the idea of the naturalization laws being revised—so as to enable the foreigner to become a citizen in a shorter period of time. Mr. S. has our thanks for this favor.

Back Nos. of the Guardian.

We have on hand Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 14, 17, 18, 19, 24 and 26 of Vol. 1. Also 1, 2, and 3, of Vol. 2. Numbers one and two, of Volume one, contain the best arranged argument in favor of the divine origin of our cause that we have ever examined. Persons wishing to send to their friends, proofs of the truth and authenticity of what is called Mormonism, would do well to send these numbers.

New Store.

Our old friend, Mr. Thomas E. Tootle, is back again among us with a heavy stock of goods, and lots and bags more coming on the first boat. His flag is nailed to the mast-head, and we may calculate there is no backing out on his part on account of low prices. His brother, Mr. J. W. Tootle, is associated with him, under the firm of "Tootle & Brother." See their advertisement in another column!

Our merchants that have continued with us, are honorable dealers, we believe; and we know them to be good neighbors and citizens. Mr. Tootle is also known by the greater part of this community as a gentleman and an honorable dealer; and we presume that no new comer would be more welcomly received by our citizens than he; and as he is just opening a new stock, civility would direct us to bid him and his brother welcome; and to say to them as well as to the balance of the gents of the yard stick: "Success to trade."

Mr. Samuel Coldwell, Assistant Wagon Master, from whom Mr. Robert Wilson, claimed to receive his information about the Mormons stealing government cattle at or near, Salt Lake, is we learn, a candidate for the penitentiary, for stealing two mules in Buchannan county, Mo., and selling them in Clay county to Judge Thompson. Mr. Wilson had better not be so familiar with mule or horse thieves as to give publicity to what they may say.

A Growing Evil.

We discover that liquor is being forced into the market, and retailed here to men who will get intoxicated, stab one another, and blaspheme in our streets, till the blood of a modest man will chill at the scene. We will take the responsibility to say that any man who will retail intoxicating liquor to be used as a common article, is a selfish man, an enemy to his race, a dishonor to himself and a curse to community; and at an early date, we recommend a public meeting to be called to adopt some salutary and efficient measures to check this soul and body damning traffic. "If good words and gentle means will not reclaim the wicked, they should be dealt with in a more severe manner."

Why is a doggery like a putrid carcass?

Ans. Because every unclean and hateful bird croaks around it.

To California and Salt Lake Emigrants.

Argyles Ferry on the Nichtenabotna River.

THE undersigned would most respectfully inform the traveling community, and especially those emigrating to California, and the Great Salt Lake, by the Northern route, through St. Joseph, Linden, and thence crossing the Missouri at the various ferries above the Narrows of Nichnabotna, that he is prepared with two good boats, and skillful hands to cross all who may find it to their interest and safety to patronise him. He would further state for their information that he crossed at least four-fifths of the emigrants upon this route last spring without loss or damage to the amount of a dime. It was then, as it is likely to be this spring the only practicable point of crossing on the Nichnabotna. Emigrants who design taking the North side of Platte River, and consequently crossing the Missouri above its mouth, will find a good Bluff road directly from this point to the Kanesville and other Ferries above or below the mouth of the Platte. And those who may determine to cross the Missouri at Old Fort Kearney or between that point and the Narrows, may be assured that the road from Argyles Ferry, one-fourth of which is a good Bluff route, is the best and dryest at any season of the year. WEDNESDAY, MARCH 20, 1850.

Correspondence of the Burlington Hawk-Eye.

CITY OF KEOKUK, Feb. 22d, 1850.

More of the stolen Poll Books!—The thieving exposed!—The indignation of community aroused.

J. G. EDWARDS, Esq.—SIR: It is now three days since the stolen poll books were discovered, yet the excitement occasioned by it, still continues. Go where you may, into houses of public resort, into private habitations or on the streets, the theme of conversation, is, the stolen poll books and the singular means by which they were brought to light, and it is truly gratifying to hear the sentiments of indignation expressed by the honest man of all parties against the perpetration of the theft.

Most of the citizens here, are not inclined to believe that Judge Mason was concerned in the original "taking," but they insist that as he was found in possession of the stolen property, he must, to clear himself, make an exposure of the whole affair. Judge Mason is one of Thompson's counsel and attorneys, for the purpose of impeaching a portion of Miller's votes, but it is certainly no part of his professional duties to secrete stolen goods. The attorney may defend the horse thief when indicted, without censure, but it is no part of his duties to secrete the stolen horse in his stable.

My own opinion is that Thompson had the stolen books with him at Washington City, and that when he procured one hundred days to take testimony in, he forwarded them through mail to Judge Mason for some purpose connected with his defence.

Hall, whose connection with the "taking," has been alway strongly suspected, left this place the next morning after the discovery, under circumstances of suspicion, which induce many to believe that he fled through fear lest Miller might cause him to be arrested.

The mode of discovery is soon stated. Mason had invited Miller to his office to accept the service of documents relative to the contested election. In his pantaloons pocket, (left side,) were the papers intended for Miller; and in his pantaloons pocket, (right side,) were the stolen books with other private papers. Mason, by the most unaccountable blunder, drew out the contents of the pocket on the right side, and handing the same to Miller, requested him to "acknowledge service." The rest of the story may be best told by Gen. Van Antwerp and Joseph M. Beck, Esq., who witnessed the exposure, and whose depositions Miller has taken and secured in due form of Law, to be laid before Congress.

The testimony was taken before Jesse B. Browne, Esq., a Justice of the Peace, of Keokuk, on the 21st Feb., 1850.

Joseph M. Beck being duly sworn, testifies as follows:

"Towards evening of 19th Feb. inst., I went to the office of Mason, Curtis & Rankin, for the purpose of examining some legal authority. I found there Judge Mason, Gen. Van Antwerp and Mr. Miller in conversation. I had not been there long till the subject of the contested election was spoken of. Judge Mason informed Mr. Miller that he wished him to accept the service of certain notices to take depositions to be used as evidence in the matter of said contested seat. Mr. Miller expressed his willingness to comply with the Judge's request. Judge Mason produced either from his pocket, or his desk, (he was at the time near his desk) a bundle of papers, and handed them to Mr. Miller. Mr. Miller on receiving them, exclaimed—'Judge Mason! you have made a mistake! You have given me the poll books of the Kanesville precinct, that Hall stole!' Judge Mason extended his arm as though he desired to take them back. Mr. Miller said something to this effect, 'We will examine them.' Gen. Van Antwerp and myself approached Mr. Miller and the Judge. Mr. Miller declared the papers he held in his hand, to be the poll books of the Kanesville precinct that were stolen; and asked Judge Mason where he had obtained them. The Judge replied, 'I assure you, Mr. Miller, I come by them honestly, but I am not at liberty to tell now, or of whom.' These are as near as I can recollect his exact words.

Gen. Van Antwerp, Mr. Miller and myself examined the papers. They purported to be the poll books of the Kanesville precinct. They were signed and attested by the proper officers so far as I observed. Gen Van Antwerp took them into his hand, and observed something to the effect that they were got up in good style. Mr. Miller pointed out the signatures of the election officers, and called our attention to the names of many voters that appeared on the poll books, with whom he said he was well acquainted. He likewise called our attention to the fact that there purported to be the names of five hundred and twenty-three voters recorded in the Books. I called the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the books to me had the appearance of having been wet. Mr. Miller asserted several times that the papers he held in his hand were the identical poll books of the Kanesville precinct that had been stolen. Judge Mason made no denial of the assertion of Mr. Miller," &c., &c., &c.

(Signed) JOSEPH M. BECK.

Gen. V. P. Van Antwerp being duly sworn, testified as follows:

"I was accidentally present on day before yesterday in the Law Office of Messrs Mason, Curtis & Rankin. Judge Charles Mason, a member of that firm, being present at the time, together with Daniel F. Miller, Esq. and J. M. Beck, Esq. I had been conversing with those gentlemen, and sat with my back or side towards Messrs. Mason and Miller, who had risen and gone to the back part of the room, near a desk and table, and continued conversing with each other, when I heard Mr. Miller exclaim emphatically, "This is the original poll book of the Kanesville precinct, which was stolen," or words to that effect. The emphasis with which these word were spoken by Mr. Miller attracted my attention, when I turned fully round towards them, and inquired what it was he was saying. He repeated the declaration he had made, when I rose from my seat and approached them. Mr. Miller held in his hand a written document, which he again alledged was the poll book referred to. I examined it and made some remarks to the effect that the signatures and names upon the paper were generally well written, adding that I had heard it stated that many of the persons who had voted at the Kanesville precinct were not entitled legally so to do. Mr. Miller thereupon run his finger over the list of names, pointing out a considerable number as belonging to individuals, who he stated, were personally known to him and formerly citizens of this county, who he knew to be entitled to vote. He stated, also, that he knew perfectly well the signatures of the Judge's of the Election placed upon the first page of the document, and that it was unquestionably the original Kanesville poll books. Mr. Miller enquired of Judge Mason how he come in possession of the papers? The reply of Judge Mason was, in substance (the precise language I cannot recollect,) that it came into his hands honorably, or, that there was no impropriety connected with the transaction, but he did not feel himself at liberty to state how it occurred, or when or from whom he obtained it. Mr. Miller, then handed the document to Judge Mason, accompanied by some remark which I do not recollect."

(Signed) V. P. VAN ANTWERP.

Respectfully, Yours, &c.,

P. S. — Two hours later. — Hall has been heard of since he left this place, traveling towards Burlington. He was unnecessarily frightened, as the process which Miller had procured, was not a warrant for his arrest, but simply a subpena to procure his testimony. A friend of Hall's says he will exculpate himself by showing that the books were taken by a prominent democrat of Fairfield. Yours, &c.

From the Keokuk Whig and Register.

A Glimpse of the Stolen Poll Books.

Those conversant with the history of the election for member of Congress for this District in 1848, will recollect the infamous trick of legerdemain resorted to by the Locofoco candidate, Mr. Thompson, to secure to him the election, now contested by Mr. Miller in Congress. The poll books of Kanesville precinct (giving Miller a large majority,) were stolen from the office of the Clerk of Monroe county, to which they had been returned, and by that means Mr. Thompson obtained the certificate of election. These stolen poll books a few days ago came to light. They are found at last, and in the hands of Mr. Thompson's counsel, Judge Mason, who accidently let the secret out in the following way. During an interview between Mr. Miller and Judge Mason in relation to taking depositions in the contested case, the Judge handed out for Mr. Miller's inspection some papers, and through mistake the veritable original poll books. Mr. Miller detected them at once from the signatures of the judges and clerks. He charged the fact home to the Judge, when his late Honor with some embarrassment protested that he had come by them honestly, but that he was not at liberty to state how he got them. The books were examined by several persons who happened to be present to their satisfaction, and returned to Judge Mason's custody. Those present describe the scene to have been one long to be remembered.

And now that the truth has been developed beyond the possibility of contradiction that these poll books were deliberated and feloniously stolen by the Locofoco friends of Mr. Thompson to secure his election, have we not a right to known who perpetrated the infamous deed? They are found in the hands of Mr. Thompson's counsel, and among the papers pertaining to the case of the contested seat. Will the possession be accounted for? The late Chief Justice of the Supreme Court knows the law too well to dispute the doctrine that the possessor of stolen goods must account for his possession, or rest under an imputation of guilt. Did he get them from his client, Mr. Thompson? And if so, where did he get them? From a certain would-be candidate for governor? Who is the thief that stole the poll books? And at whose instance and request was this outrage perpetrated? We call upon the Judge to exculpate himself from the imputation the known facts raise against him and his client by disclosing the real actor in that disgraceful iran action.

The disclosure of these facts show what abandoned and corrupt principles control the political action of the leaders of the Locofoco party of this State. No means are too base, no fraud are too infamous to be used by them to accomplish their end. If defeated by the votes of the people, the poll books are stolen to avoid the effect of the expressed will of the majority. With such men as leader and managers of a party, what safety have the people for their rights. The cutterizing of Harlan out of the office to which he was fairly elected, was such a fraud upon their rights as to stigmatize forever the guilty parties; but when a downright felony is resorted to for the defeat of the Whig candidate, it presents an example of political depravity unparalleled in the history of any country. Will Congress permit Mr. Thompson to hold a seat in Congress, obtained through such criminal conduct on the part of his friends? Though he may not have advised the commission of the theft he is clearly accessory after the fact. His acceptance of the certificate of election, and the tenacity with which he retains the advantage thus unrighteously gained with full knowledge of the facts, show him to be not unwilling to enjoy the fruits of this corrupt proceeding.

Congressional.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7, 1850.

The explanations of Mr. Vinton, have operated favorably upon the House.

The bill for the temporary relief of Secretary Meredith, will probably pass to-morrow.

General Houston expects to speak to-morrow, on his compromise. In the meantime, the Senate Committee on Territories, are waiting an opportunity for their project.

Mr. Clay has got the North alarmed, and that is a great point to start upon.

The plan of Mr. Douglas proposes—First, to admit California with limited boundaries. Second, to legalize the Mormon government of Deseret, as a territorial government, and to extend it over all the Great Basin, till Congress shall otherwise ordain. Third, to legalize the territorial government of the people of New Mexico, on the same terms, including the disputed territory with the consent of Texas—the land to be paid for, and the right of way secured to Texas by a line west to the Paso del Norte, (the only pass in that country, through to California) Fourth, to provide for admitting a new slave State from Texas, as an offset to the free State of California. Fifth, to appoint officers to Deseret and New Mexico, the same as to Minnesota and other territories.

It is thought that the South will agree to this, because it admits a slave State as an equivalent for California; secures to Texas the Paso del Norte, and provides governments for Deseret and New Mexico, on the basis of their own convention—and because Deseret does not exclude slavery.

Mr. Douglas, however, will wait till the temper of the Senate indicates the time for action.

We learn from Richmond, Va., the Legislature of the State have adopted strong slavery resolutions.

WASHINGTON, 25th Feb. 5 P. M.

SENATE.—After some unimportant business, on motion of Mr. Foote, the Senate took up his resolution providing, that it is the duty of Congress to form Territorial Governments for California, Deseret and New Mexico, which after some debate was postponed for the present.

The consideration of the President's California Message was postponed until to-morrow.

The Senate then took up Mr. Clay's resolutions.

Mr. Miller resumed and concluded his speech. He took broad grounds in favor of the admission of California—denied that the President had interfered in the matter—said slavery does not by law exist there, and that the interest of the South had been fully represented in California.

HOUSE.—A number of memorials and petitions were presented, one from Mr. Smith, claiming to be a brother of Joe Smith, remonstrating against the admission of Deseret, charging the people there with treason—laid over.

Mr. Giddings presented a memorial from citizens of Pennsylvania and Delaware, asking for the peaceable dissolution of the Union. Several gentlemen sprang on their feet in a moment, great excitement ensued, and finally the vote was taken on its reception. Yeas 9, nays 162—the Free Soilers voting affirmatively.

ARRIVAL OF THE AMERICA.

Fourteen days Later from Europe.

NEW YORK, Feb. 25.

The America reached Halifax on Saturday night.

Since the sailing of the last steamer, Parliament has met, the Queen's speech delivered, and in some degree the main features of the proposed policy of Ministers has been developed.

Both Houses of Parliament were opened by proxy on the 31st ult., when the Lord Chancellor delivered the speech from the throne.

The intelligence from Ireland is still more heart-rending. Cultivation seems stagnant. Traders more depressed than at the first period of her sufferings. The tide of emigration to the United States has again set in, but unfortunately for the people, this means is barely left them now to escape from loyal tyranny and destitution.

France.

Paris, since Monday, has been in a state of siege, in consequence of serious disturbances created by a mob the Rue St. Martin. The police authorities came to cut down some of the Liberty trees planted during the revolution. From facts, which, by the way, are rather conflicting, it would appear, but when the order for the destruction of this last emblem of the liberty of the French people, was issued, a large crowd was gathered around, and the police, acting under orders from the Executive, proceeded to cut them down, they were strenuously resisted by the people, who dispersed them; but a strong party of military arrived at this moment, the mob was put to flight with the loss of several wounded, while the troops were hardly molested. At the latest accounts all was quiet, and no further disturbance anticipated. The Moniteur attributes the whole affair to the desire of the President to concentrate the good of the country in his own person, beyond the means of riot. The French news, in other particulars, is not of much importance.

Rome.

It is now stated that the Pope is about to return to Rome almost immediately, and it was believed that the Spanish garrison would evacuate the city on the arrival of his Holiness.

Russia.

Accounts from the Dardanelles state that the Circassians had gained great advantages over the Russians, who had been compelled to retreat with great loss.

Turkey.

The escape of Madame Kossuth, and the fact of her having joined her exiled husband, are confirmed. The extradition is nearly settled.

Switzerland.

Austria has made demands on Switzerland for extradition of some Poles who had taken refuge there. The Swiss Government has refused to surrender the refugees, except in cases where it is clearly proved that the refugees have intrigued in politics, or otherwise misconducted themselves.

Greece.

Advices from Athens state that a serious rupture has occurred between the English and Greek Governments, and that a total suspension of relations has taken place. An English fleet has blockaded the ports; it is supposed, however, that the difficulty will be shortly and amicably adjusted.

Prussia.

All the articles of the proposed constitution except one—that of making Ministers responsible to the King—have been agreed upon by the Chambers, and the King has taken the solemn oath to observe it. There have been great rejoicings in Berlin in honor of the occasion.

Denmark and the Duchies.

The Council of State was opened by the King in person on the 30th ult. Adverting to the hostilities with the Schleswig Holstein, he says, "the war has not yet terminated; it is only suspended. I hope, however, that the negotiations in progress will lead to the desired end, provided, my misled subjects do not meet with support from greater powers."

KANESVILLE MARKET.

WEDNESDAY, March 20, 1850.

In our last, we quoted corn at 35 to 40 cents ₱ bushel, but our corn buyers complain, and feel that injustice is done to them as they were selling corn at that time for 25 cents per bushel and sacks returned. It is more than likely that wa were mistaken; yet the spirit of prophecy was upon us and we wrote according to its dictates; but the error lay in our not searching what manner of time the spirit of prophecy in us did signify when it testified beforehand that corn would be worth 35 to 40 cents ₱ bushel. We thought it meant the time then present; but upon strict enquiry and examination we have become satisfied that the true time referred to will be about the 10th of April next. Not understanding father Miller's system of computing time, we fell into this error. We hope to be pardoned for it when we now say that corn is worth 25c. ₱ bushel.

There has been but little change since our last. The market for most articles is very active, and will still be more so as the season advances. We quote

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Nearest, Best and Healthiest route to the Salt Lake and California.

THE

OLD ORIGINAL MORMON CROSSING AT KANESVILLE,

Council Bluffs, Missouri River,

Twenty-five miles above the Mouth of the PLATTE RIVER.

It has been proven beyond question that the NORTHERN ROUTE, crossing the Missouri river at Kanesville, 25 miles above the mouth of the Platte river, is the

NEAREST, BEST, & HEALTHIEST ROAD TO SALT LAKE AND CALIFORNIA.

The difficulties of crossing the Horn and Loup Fork of the Platte, have been entirely removed by the subscribers placing upon each of those streams large and substantial flat boats.

Heretofore emigrants have had to lose several days in constructing rafts which at last made it rather a hazardous undertaking. Besides these considerations it is an undeniable fact that hundreds of persons who went up on the South side of the Platte fell victims to the dreadful pestilence while nearly all those who took the north side escaped unharmed. This is the Mormon trail and it is a subject of remark that so few of those people have suffered from disease while on the route. Another thing the emigrant must have in view, and that is their feed and camping places; the routes from Independence, Kansas, Weston, St. Joseph, and all other places below the Platte before going one hundred and fifty miles emerge into one road consequantly when there is such an immense amount of travel, grass and wood become scarce. This too is the very end of the road where it is most needed, because emigrants expect to leave early and it is necessary that both "man and beast" should fare well in the beginning. The above is a very important advantage to those who take the north side and is a consideration compared with which all others sink into insignificance for grass is the only subsistence for stock on the plains.

In addition to these facts emigrants will avoid crossing the dangerous streams of the Saline, the South Fork of the Great Platte, and the Great Platte itself.

To sum up the whole in a very few words, the subscribers would respectfully say to the public generally, and all those who contemplate taking this route, particularly, that at the Kanesville Ferry on the Missouri river, they will find two good boats, each capable of crossing one wagon and team.

At the Ferry on the Horn they have one large and substantial boat capable of crossing a wagon and team every five minutes.

At the Ferry on the Loup Fork of the Platte we will have one excellent boat, which, with the men we will have in charge will ensure to all a safe and speedy crossing.

Emigrants who wish plenty of grass for their stock, and camping places for themselves, besides the best chance of escaping all epidemics will find this route far preferable over all others.

Our boats with competent hands will be at their places on the 1st of April; and all may rest assured that what we have said may be relied on with the utmost confidence.

In the Kanesville Market, Emigrants will find every thing necessary for their outfits at as reasonable rates as can be procured in the Western country

NEW FIRM.

TOOTLES & FARLEIGH,

(Successors to Smith, Bedford & Tootle.)

St. Joseph, Missouri.

Beg leave to inform their friends and customers generally, that they have purchased the entire stock of Goods of SMITH, BEDFORD & TOOTLE, and in addition, are now receiving and opening, at the old stand,

THE SIGN OF THE ELEPHANT.

One of the largest and best selected stock of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Books, Stationery, &c., &c., ever brought to this market, which we will sell at wholesale and retail, as low, if not lower, than any house in the Upper Country. Persons coming to this market to purchase goods, will find it to their interest to give us a call.

Having a large Brick Warehouse, situated near the river, we will also attend to the Receiving, Forwarding and Commission business.

Be sure, and recollect the sign of the Elephant.

TOOTLES & FARLEIGH.

St. Joseph, Oct. 17, 1849.

IMPORTANT TO FARMERS.

THE subscribers respectfully inform the Farmers of Buchanan county and adjoining country that they will put in operation at the Steam mills on Main street, one set of double wool carding machines, and will be ready to commence carding by the 20th of April.

Mr. Buell, a workman of thirty years experience, will give his personal attention, throughout the season, to the business—customers may rely on having their work well done and at short notice. The machinery will be propelled by steam, day and night all the season. Persons living at a distance may depend upon having their rolls to take home with them.

Terms—As reasonable as at any factory in the country; all damage done to rolls, will be paid for, if the wool is in good order. One pound of clean oil or lard to eight pounds of wool, will be required from those who wish to furnish their own.

DRUGS! DRUGS! DRUGS!

HATCHAFT & HOWARD,

On Main Street, at the Sign of the MAMMOTH BLUE & GOLD MORTAR.

Are receiving and opening the LARGEST and BEST assortment of Drugs, Medicines, Paints, Oils, Glass, DyeStuffs, Varnishes, Brushes, Patent Medicines, &c., &c., ever offered for sale in the Platte Country, which they offer at wholesale and retail at lower prices than any similar establishment in this part of the country. They respectfully solicit the patronage of the citizens of Kanesville and vicinity, assuring them that their articles and prices shall be such as to give general satisfaction.

N. B. We wish it distinctly understood that if any article sold by us fails to be such as recommended by us, we will refund the purchase money, or exchange it, at the option of the purchaser.

Give us a call when you come to St. Joseph and see if all these things are not true.

Remember the "Mammoth Blue and Gold Mortar."

TO EMIGRANTS.

I TAKE this opportunity to inform those that may wish to send in the spring to the Valley of the Salt Lake, Merchandize, Household goods or loading of any kind, that I am prepared to carry a few tons on the cheapest terms; therefore I wish you to consider the probability of teams and wagons being very high in the coming spring, and give me a call on Main street, a few rods west of the Bluff House. HAMILTON KEARNEY.

Kanesville, Feb. 6th, 1850.

STOVES! STOVES!!

MR. DUSTIN AMY, of this town, would respectfully notify the citizens of this county, and particularly that portion of them that expect to emigrate to the Salt Lake, that he intends to have, by the first boat this spring, a heavy and well selected assortment of Cast Iron Cooking Stoves, which he proposes to sell on very favorable terms for ready cash.

As Mr. A. is a tinner by trade, he will fit up the stoves with furniture according to order, and on the shortest notice. He keeps constantly on hand a good assortment of tin ware, and a good supply of all vessels usually called for by Emigrants. He has secured sufficient help to execute almost any job that may be required in his line on very short notice. The experience that he has had in traveling in the West, and also in fitting out emigrants for the last two or three years to journey over the Plains from this place, enable him to anticipate, correctly, the present wants of emigrants; and he has and will, therefore, prepare his stock and articles for sale to suit this frontier Market.

OH YES!

The Old Pioneer on the Track Again!

MR. HENRY W. MILLER, well known in this region, as one of the first western men, has joined me as partner; and we have removed our large stock of English Goods,

Imported Direct from Liverpool,

to our new store opposite our late stand; and in addition to the largest and

Best Stock of Hardware and Smallwares

in Kanesville, we have selected some superior lots of

Dry Goods, Iron, Steel, Springs, Axles, Axes and Hollowware,

in the St. Louis Market, expressly for the WINTER TRADE, and the necessities of this community.

We have re-marked all our goods and have agreed to sell off our stock—superior in quality though it is—at prices sufficiently low to induce a continuation and increase of our trade, and to remove an influence existing, not altogether without foundation, that some of the goods of the late firm—Brown & Barham were too high; in a word, we only want to live among you and desire not to enrich ourselves, at your cost, we wish "to spend and be spent," for the good of the cause, which is to us, as to you the greatest and best. Our motto in business, is and shall be

"Small Profits and Quick Returns."

The truthfulness of which you cannot prove unless you come, see and trade with

BROWN & MILLER.

N. B. All accounts due to the late firm—Brown & Barham, will be received, settled and accounted for by THOMAS D. BROWN, at Brown & Millers store.

POETRY.

I'm of the Band that till the Land.

I'm of the band that till the land,
And draw ftom the earth her store;
Right happy indeed's the life we lead,
While our day's are passing o'er.
Many there are, in riches far,
Surpassing the farmer's purse,
Whilst other pursuits may yield more fruits
Yet often produce much worse.

We envy not the statesman's lot,
Still clamoring for his class;
Nor his that fights for glory's rights,
At some redoubted pass.
No risk have we on boisterous sea,
Nor fears lest tempests whelm
All we possess, without redress,
While laboring at the helm.

The fruitful field its bounties yield,
A rich regard for toil;
Be ours the trade to ply the spade,
And deeply plough the soil;
We walk abroad o'er carpet sod,
And flow'rets kiss our feet,
Whose odors rise to scent the skies—
A tribute pure and meet.

To all we give the means to live,
As brother shares with brother,
And thus fulfil the holy will
That bids us love each other.
Oh! life secure from guile, and pure,
To thee my life clings ever,
With all its might in fond delight,
To change from thee, no, never.

Lines written on the death of Peter Laycock, who died of Cholera on the Missouri river, May 30, 1849, when returning home to his family.

He's left these scenes of care and strife,
And lives above, a nobler life;
His absence for a time gives pain,
Yet soon we hope to meet again.

Hope did we say? Hope only? No!
How can we hope? We surely know,
That still he lives beyond the veil,
Where death no more can him assail.

Though wife and children mourn the loss,
And friends below should feel the cross,
Yet friends above will bless the hour,
He hailed them with the priesthood's power.

The Gospel's sound to them he bears,
A sound melodious to their ears,
And by their faith they soon will be,
With works of friends below, made free.

Yet soon his mission he'll complete,
And then again we'll with him meet;
And then with those he loved and prized
He'll reign on earth celestialized.

MISCELLANY.

Catching a Whale.

A SEA SKETCH.

We were running down from Albadra Islands with a fine steady breeze. The morning was bright and clear, and the water of that peculiar color which whalemen regard as the favorable resort of whales. I had the forenoon watch below, and was just congratulating myself upon getting through with my "double altitudes," when the loud clear voice of a man at the mast-head came ringing down the forecastle.

"There she blows!" was the thrilling cry.

"That's one," shouted the captain.

"There she blows."

"That's twice, by jingo!"

"There she blows!"

"Three times! Where away, Tabor?"

"Off the weather-bow, sir, two points."

"How far?"

"A mile and a half. There she blows."

"Sperm whale! Call all hands!"

There was a general rush on deck, each man trying to get to the scuttle first. Then came a half dozen loud knocks, and a hoarse voice shouting.

"Larboard watch, ahoy! Turn out, my lads! Sperm whale in sight! Heave out! Lash and carry! Rise and chime! Bear a hand, my hearties!"

Those who had turned in rolled out as soon as possible, and buckled on their ducks, and in less than two minutes were all on deck, ready for orders. The tubs were put in the boat, and the main yard hauled back. We all perched ourselves in the rigging, and kept a sharp lookout on every side for the whale's next rising. Twenty minutes elapsed since the spout was first seen; twenty-five passed, and the captain began to get into a state of nervous anxiety. We strained our eyes in all directions to "make a spout." Half an hour flew by, and no spout was seen. It began to look like a hopeless case, when Tabor, whose visual organ appeared to have the power of ubiquity, sang out—

"There she blows!"

"Where now?" roared the captain.

"Off the weather quarter! Two large sperm whales, sir. Go it, boots!"

"Clear away the boats! Come down from the mast-head all you that don't belong there! Bear a hand! We'll take them this rising," shouted the captain, in a loud voice.

"All ready, sir."

"Lower away, then!"

The waist and larboard boats were instantly down, ready to "bend off." Captain A——, and some of the boat's crew, being too ill to man the other boat, we struck off for the whales without them. I pulled the aft-oar, as usual, and as, by this time, I was as tough and muscular as any of my comrades, the boat danced along the water in fine style. Although the larboard boat was much easier pulled, and had the oldest and stoutest of the whole crew, we contrived, by unusual exertions, to keep ahead of her, till the real "tug of war," came. Then was our mettle put to test! One of the whales was leisurely making to windward, not more than half a mile off.

"Lay back, my lads!" cried P——, pale with excitement. "Keep the larboard boat astern! Never say die! That's our whale! Oh, do spring—do spring! No noise, steady and soft's the word."

We replied to this appeal "piling up the agony" on the oars. Away sprang our boat, trembling and shivering as she darted through the waves. She really seemed to imbibe the general excitement, as she parted the clear blue water, and dashed it foaming from her bows. Onward she flew! The larboard boat was hard upon her stern; the whale rolling lazily in the trough of the sea, a few darts ahead.

"Oh, lay back!" whispered P——, trembling with eagerness not to be outdone by the mate. "Do spring, my boys, if you love life! Now's you time! Now or never! Oh, see him! see him! how quiet he lies! Put the beef on your oars, every mother's son of you! Pile it on! pile it on! That's the way to tell it! Our whale this time!"

"Stand up, Tabor!" cried P——, in a low voice.

Peaking his oar, Tabor sprang to his feet and grasped a harpoon.

"Shall I give him two irons?"

"Yes; he may be wild."

Another stroke or two and we are hard upon him. Tabor, with unerring aim, let fly his irons, and buried them to the sockets in the huge carcase of the whale.

"Stern all!" thundered P——,

"Stern all!" echoed the crew; but it was too late. Our bows were high and dry on the whale's head! Infuriated with the pain produced by the harpoon, and doubtless much astonished to find his head so roughly used, he rolled half over, lashed the sea with his flukes, and in his struggles dashed in two of the upper planks. "Boat stove, boat stove!" was the general cry.

"Silence!" thundered the second mate, as he sprang to the bow, and exchanged places with Tabor. "All safe, my hearties! stern hard! stern! stern! stern! before he gets his flukes to bear upon us."

"Stern all!" shouted we; in a moment more we were out of danger. The whale now "turned flukes," and dashed off to windward with the speed of a locomotive, towing us after him at glorious rate. We occasionally slacked line in order to give him plenty of play.

A stiff breeze had sprung up, causing a rough chopping sea; and we leaked badly at the bow. It fell to my lot to keep the water bailed out and the line clear as the others hauled in; a ticklish jog, the last; for, as the second mate said, a single turn would whip off a shin: as slick as goose-grease."

Notwithstanding the roughness of the sea, we shot ahead with incredible swiftness; and the way we walked past the larboard boat, whose crew was tugging and laboring with all their might, was surprising.

"Hoora for waist boat!" burst from every mouth. Three cheers were given, much to the annoyance of the boat's crew and mate. We exultingly took off our hats and waved them a polite "good bye," requesting them, if they had any news to send it to windward ports, to be quick about it, as it was inconvenient for us to stop just then.

I believe Solomon says it is not good to be vain-glorious. At all events, while we were skimming along so gallantly, the whale suddenly milled, and pitched the boat on her beam ends. Every one who could grasp a thwart hung on to it, and we were all fortunate enough to keep our seats. For as much as the ship's length the boat flew through the water, on her gunwale, foaming and whizzing as she dashed onward. It was rather a matter of doubt as to which side would turn uppermost, until Tabor slacked out the line, when she righted. To have a boat, with all her iron, lances, gear, and oars, piled on one's head in such a sea, was rather a startling prospect to the best swimmer.

Meanwhile the whale came to the surface to spout. The change in his course had enabled the mate's boat to come up, and we lay on our oars that Mr. D—— might lance him. He struck him in the "life" the first dart, was evident from the whale's furious dying struggle; nevertheless, in order to make sure, we hauled up and churned a lance back of his head.

I cannot conceive anything more strikingly awful than the butchery of this tremendous leviathan of the deep. Foaming and leaping and plunging from wave to wave, flinging high in the air torrents of blood and spray.

The sea around was literally a sea of blood. At one moment his head was poised in the air, the next buried in the gory sea, carrying down in his vast wake a whirlpool of foam and slime. But this respite was short. He rose again, rushing furiously on his enemies; but a slight prick of the lance drove him back with mingled fury and terror. Which ever way he turned, the barbed irons goaded him to desperation. Now and again intensity of agony would cause him to lash the water with his huge flukes, till the very ocean appeared to heave and tremble at his power. Tossing, struggling, dashing over in his agony, he spouted up the last of his heart's blood. Half an hour before, he was free as the wave, sporting in all the pride of its gigantic strength and unrivalled power. He now lay a lifeless mass; his head towards the sun, his tremendous body heaving to the swell, and his destroyers proudly cheering over their victory.—[Brown's Whaling Cruise.

Grammatical Smoking.

As smoking is an innocent amusement, and as it is customary with people of all clases to relate the news of the day with cigars in mouths, the following system recommended.

A single puff serves for a comma,
Puff puff, a semicolon;
Puff, puff, puff, a colon:
Six puffs, a period.

A pause with a cigar kept in the mouth represents a dash—a longer or shorter in continuance.

With the under lip raise the cigar almost against the nose for an exclamation! and to express great emotion, even to the shedding of tears, only raise, as before, the cigar, to the end of the nose. For an interrogation? it is only necessary to open the lips and draw the cigar round the corner of the mouth.

Taking the cigar from the mouth and shaking the ashes from the end, is a conclusion of a paragraph.

And throwing it into the fire, is a final and stylish pause.

Never begin a story with a half-smoked cigar; for to light another while conversing is a breach of politeness.

A HARD HIT.—The Albany Dutchman perpetrates the following hard hit at tobacco chewers: "A chemist in New York has just invented a substitute for tobacco, which will doubtless soon supersede the weed, as it is just as nasty and a good deal cheaper."

BED BUG SOCIETY.—At the last annual meeting of the Female Society for the Extirpation of Bed Bugs, and for ameliorating the condition of those infested with them," held on the 5th inst., at the sign of the Bugaboo, Mrs. Priscilla Pillow was called to the chair, and Miss Sally Scratch was appointed Secretary pro tem. The annual report was then read—

When, on motion of Mrs. Sackingbottom, that the Society do now proceed to the election of officers for the ensuing year, seconded by Miss Betsy Bedcord, the business was entered upon forthwith; and in counting ballots it appeared that the following officers were duly elected:

President—Mrs. Rachael Ratsbane.

Vice Presidents—Mrs. Bridget Bedpost, Miss Susan Sheets.

Recording Secretary—Miss Charity Coverlid.

Managers—Mrs. Priscilla Pillow, Mrs. Corrosive Sublimate, Mrs. Lovely Whiskey, Miss Tracy Turpentine, Miss Susan Soapit, Miss Hannah Brush, Miss Harriet Huntem, Miss Patience Pinchem, Miss Mary Mashem, Miss Prudence Stopem, Miss Ruth Rotem.

On motion of Miss Maid Mite.

Resolved, That on account of the multiplicity of business which the members have on hand, in consequence of belonging to so many useful societies, the monthly and quarterly meetings be dispensed with.

After a very desultory conversation on a very delicate subject, which it would be improper to publish; it was.

Resolved, That in order to keep peace at home, the Treasurer be authorized to offer a premium of 100 cents for the best model of a machane for darning stockings, which may render superintendance of the ladies of the family, with the old and young, unnecessary. To be decided on the next annual meetings.

Resolved, That the Society would highly approved of an Auxilliary Female Juvenile Bed-bug Society; and the President be requested to induce a few children to call a meeting for the purpose, and also to solicit the assistance of the Rev. Henry Humbug, to deliver an address on the occasion.

Resolved, That we approve of the practice of sending children from door to door, to solicit contributions, provided they do not expend more than one half their receipts in confectionary. Adjourned.

Sally Scratch, Rec. Sec.

INSINIVATING.—Will you have a daily Sun? said a news-boy to Mrs. Partington.

Will I have a daily son? You little scapegrace, how dare you insinuate against a lone woman? Have you no reference to parents, little boy? Where do people go who have no reference to parents?—to the bad place, of course. Go' way, go' way. Will I have a daily son? No indeed.

And the respectable widow went upon her way in a whirlpool of virtuous indignation.

WOMAN'S LOVE.—"Oh, how cruel to value love as a piece of common merchandise. It is the only thing upon this rounded globe that suffers no purchaser but itself. Love is the equivalent of love; the invaluable jewel that must either be freely given, or, forever unenjoyed, be buried.—Schiller.

"Industry must prosper," as the man said when holding the baby, while his wife chopped wood.

GOOD ADVICE.—Be content as long as your mouth is full and body covered—remember the poor—kiss the pretty girls—don't rob your neighbor's hen roost—never pick an editor's pocket, nor entertain the idea that he is going to treat—kick dull care to the duce—black your own boots—sew on your own buttons, and be sure to take a paper, and pay for it.

"Noah," who is one of the b'hoys, speaks as follows of the action of the Democratic General Committee of New York:

THE GENERAL COMMITTEE.—The trouble, danger, and excitement prevailing at Washington in relation to slavery, abolition, and free soil, have at length aroused the feelings and the action of the General Committee. They have expelled the Free Soilers, passed resolution in favor of the Union and against meddling with the question, and tossed Van Buren overboard with a violence which looks as if he would never again reach the deck. This looks like old bucktail times, when men were treated according to their merits, and political traitors found no favor in the wigwam.

Charade No. 1.

My first to the printer and scholar 's quite handy,
The Lawyer without me can't manage a case,
To the parson and lover, I too am the dandy;
I've no arms, legs or wheels, though oft run a race;
I'm used by the beggar, the hermit and king;
And by my fell mandate cause thousands to bleed,
The fame of the statesman and warrior I ring,
And am foremost to execute the darkest of deeds.

My second though harmless if skillfully used,
Is death if with anger or malice I'm drawn,
And to all of much service if I'm not abused,
In blood I delight, and to much carnage am given.

My first is the helm of the church and of state;
My second is kept by each housewife with care,
My whole is oft used to give my first shape,
I am long, short, crooked, straight, homely and fair.

Extract of a Letter from Paris.

"I will not dwell on the details of what is going on in France and Europe: they are too distressing. Happily, they cannot be of long duration. The public mind must be prepared for a new state of things. Universal principles and doctrines must be better understood, that a new policy may be applied. We must know what we have got to do and how we are to do it. I will continue my general observations.

In order to understand the nature and aim of human progress on earth we must have a certain knowledge of the claims of Providence.

What is good and what is evil in Nature? in Scripture? in Humanity? Are good and evil necessary laws of liberty and order in the universe?

These are interesting and important questions. We must be able to answer them before we can understand the nature and aim of human science, industry and moral progress. Good and Evil are words of common use. In the language of common sense and common practice their meaning is obvious: not so in scientific definitions. It is necessary to elevate the usual meaning and the common understanding of these words to a superior level of natural and scriptural philosophy. In the highest sense of Religion there is no evil in God; no evil in his Word; no evil in his Works. Absolutely speaking there is no evil in the universe; all is good in the creation. It is therefore, relatively speaking only, that the opposite terms of good and evil are admissible. All the hosts of Fear and Darkness in the soul and in the mind may be dispersed by this little truth. In the providence of God and the development of life evil is a perishable law of accidental or temporary necessity and inverse order; good is an imperishable law of everlasting absolute necessity and direct harmony.

Necessity, the groundwork of all truth and justice, science and stability; the first and greatest attribute of Providence, without which truth and justice could not be; for chance or hazard might destroy them. Necessity, is of a two-fold nature, absolute and relative, good and evil, eternal and temporary; whence the laws of providence and progress are of dual aspect in their action and reaction. The Word of God is of a two-fold nature, direct and inverse, love and fear and judgment and forgiveness. The Works of God are of a two-fold aspect, peaceful and ferocious animals, nutritive and poisonous plants. Healthy and unhealthy climates diversify the surface of the globe as words of hope and words of fear diversify the pages of Revelation.

In spirit, one is God, the other Satan. In word, one is truth, the other lies; or rather, one is everlasting and the other temporary truth. In action, one is good, the other evil.

This definition will be startling to many timid minds accustomed to the fear of superstition; but children love their parents just as well when they no longer dread the ghosts and goblins of the nursery romance as they did when they were under the influence of those fearful stories.

Religious people dare not think the Word of God contains some lies. Their scruples are legitimate. The word lie is not a proper one to represent my meaning. It is commonly used in a sense to low to represent so high a meaning. A rattle-snake is not a lie, nor is a tiger an untruth, in the common acceptation of these words. Both are none the less, however, inverse truths, at enmity with mild and useful animals. They are perishable incarnations of the spirit of evil, destined to live only for a time, and then to disappear from the habitations of the earth.

The Word of Judgment in the Scriptures is perishable word; the word of Love is everlasting not the less true as it is written. "Till the heavens and earth pass one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled." We can easily conceive that not one race of unclean animals will pass from the present laws of necessity until the earth is replenished and subdued; the Word fulfilled. This text of Scripture needs no explanation.

Those divines who preach the Word of Judgment are the priests of Satan; their reign is limited: those who preach the Word of Love are ministering angels; their reign will never end. Read the Scriptures with this light and they explain themselves. The Parson's occupation is then gone. Men and women then will be ministering angels to each other universally. When Satan and his kingdom have been thoroughly subdued. All the brethren of Christ on earth will then be kings and priests.

What is the us of Evil in the world? How and when is it to perish! These are eminently religious questions; conclusive answers are required to justify the ways of God to man. Hitherto man has been accused by God without being able to reply. Man accuses now the Deity; heavenly truth and love will clear away the accusation.

Evil is divine as well as human. Where is its divine utility? its relative necessity!

In Nature the ferocious and unclean animals are necessary to supply the hand of man where he is absent. The former prevent over population among peaceful animals, where nature without cultivation would not multiply sufficiently the fruits and herbs required for their nutrition; the latter prevent pestilence from the corruption of dead bodies, where the hand of man is not extended to the care and government of useful animals. When man appears on every part of his domain, the necessary unclean and ferocious animals will disappear. Their temporary usefulness will be exhausted and their forms abolished.

The noxious weeds and vermin will be totally eradicated by the progress of society, as man replenishes the earth in order to subdue it. What their present use may be I cannot say; my knowledge is too limited; but faith in God assures my conscience of their temporary usefulness and final disappearance.

In Scripture we may easily conceive the use of stern injunctions during the early ages of humanity when man, devoid of understanding, was more accessible to fear than sensitive to love. Nor is the word of law less certain than the word of liberty. The passions of humility and truth and justice must be fruitful and multiply and replenish and subdue the human heart, before the law of judgement can become unnecessary to prevent the evils of a deadly moral world. Salvation is a work of time for individuals as well as for the race; Revelation points the way to heaven, clearly for all generations, urging them to hasten out of darkness into light, out of the realms of mental night into the realms of spiritual day, that laws of relative necessity and judgment may be set aside for liberty, love and peace, the only laws of absolute necessity and everlasting time.

In History or the progression of society the inverse laws of order and authority are necessary to compel mere savages and inert races to learn habits of productive industry, and cleanliness of mind and body. To cull the fruits of natural growth and hunt the animals for food, without intelligence or habits of industrial activity, is a state which cannot last in general society. Men must be taught to study Nature's laws and cultivate the globe, or they could never multiply sufficiently to replenish the earth and subdue it.

We may cavil at the inverse laws of Providence which rule by violent and cunning passions in the first dark ages of society; but Faith and natural humility will teach us to believe these means, not only wise but indispensable for our advantage, though we cannot always see clearly the reason or the relative necessity for such a temporary law of progress. The fact is evident—the reason will become so, if we seek for light and truth with faith and due sincerity.

When science is sufficiently advanced, and habits of industrial activity are general, the time has come, it seems to me, to do away with all subversive institutions and exceptional authorities. Liberty will universalize authority and truth and science. Industry will multiply the means of physical existence; the fruits of labor will belong to those who toil for them, and not to idlers who curtail the lives of working men by famine, to increase the numbers of rich drones and unproductive armies.

This is now the vital question of society. The Revolution has no other cause. The instruments of violence and force, monopoly and privilege, believe their reign is not yet over. They dream of its being everlasting on this earth—not temporary.

"They have a right divine to rule and govern." So have the unclean and ferocious animals. Their days are numbered, notwithstanding, and the only question now is one of time.

It would be quite uncharitable to apply these odious comparisons in all their literal brutality. Such an application is far from my intention. We are all of us too far removed from absolute perfection to claim any exclusive right to one side of the parallel, and none of us, I hope, are so imperfect, as to merit being placed exclusively on the other. There is, however, such a thing as leaning more to one side than the other; men may certainly be seen with different degrees of leaning, and in opposite directions. The revolution is a tug of classes leaning in these opposite directions. The crowd is more or less enveloped by a mental fog; some cry for darkness, some for light. The friends of darkness will succumb, I hope, and those of light will triumph.

God will provide for all his creatures; none will absolutely perish, though they relatively disappear. Lucifer will be transformed into an angel of light; the souls of wicked men will be redeemed, and it is not absurd in my opinion to suppose that unclean animals may be transformed by psychogenic influence, into creatures of another nature, and succeed the present race upon our globe, as these have superseded fossil races, now extinct. That is merely a hypothesis. It merits no particuly attention. Suggestion is my object in these letters; not dogmatism. It may be argued speculatively, however, not without utility, that, if animals have souls, as well as man, and there can be no reasonable doubt of the fact, the spirits of the unclean animals extinct upon this globe, will not be lost to all existence. They will live as other dumb spirits do, in the invisible worlds, and probably be transformed in nature, to become again incarnate in superior forms, to serve another and higher purpose upon earth as men themselves must be transformed in nature, and be "born again," before they are deemed fit for higher destinies in heaven and in earth. It is evident our business in co-operation with Divine Providence, to replenish the earth and subdue it, and thereby to destroy the unclean animals and vermin of our globe. The rest belongs to God alone.

It is our duty to subdue the evil passions of humanity, and multiply the good.

Come to Zion.

Come to Zion ye Saints of the Lord,
Lo! the banner of truth is unfurl'd
And the watchmen are sounding the warning abroad;
Come ye Saints gather out from the world.

Soon the nations of earth, one and all,
From dominion and rule shall be hurl'd;
See! the judgements of God are beginning to fall;
Come ye Saints gather out from the world.

Lest ye share in the plagues and the wars,
Famine, death—all the judgements foretold—
Lest the crown of rejoicing in Zion you loose;
Come ye Saints gather out from the world.

To the cities of Joseph repair,
On the land of his blessing of old,
Where the children of Zion may safely dwell there;
Come ye Saints gather out from the world.

The millennial morn dawns amain,
When the Savior his face shall reveal,
With the faithful in power and glory to reign;
Come ye Saints gather out from the world.

Gather up with your cattle and grain,
And your riches in silver and gold,
While the Lord is restoring his kingdom again;
Come ye Saints gather out from the world.

In the valleys and mountains ere long,
Shall the freedom of Zion be told,
Then with music and dancing we'll sing a new song,
Of deliverance out of the world.

The Burning of Moscow.

BY CHATEAUBRIAND.

A violent east wind drives the sparks and flaming brands upon the roof of the Kremlin; within its walls was contained a powder magazine; a park of artillery had been left beneath the very windows of Bonaparte. Our soldiers are driven from one quarter to another by the effluvia of the volcano. Gorgons and Medusas, with torches in their hands, are to be seen wandering through the livid streets of this earthly hell; others rekindle the expiring flame with lances of wood steeped with pitch. Bonaparte, in the halls of this new Pergamus, hastens to the window, and looking out upon the fearful scene, exclaims—"What an extraordinary resolution!—What men! These are Scythians!" The rumor spreads that the Kremlin is mined; servants are suddenly taken ill; officers resign themselves to their fate. The mouths of the raging furnaces which surround the building on all sides spread wider and wider, and approach one another every hour more closely, until they form one vast blaze. The tower of the Arsenal, like a lofty taper, burns in the midst of a flaming sanctuary. The Kremlin stands forth like some dark island, against which the waves of a fiery sky are breaking furiously. The sky reflecting the illumination, seems as though it were lighted up by the varying brightness of the aurora borealis.

The third night was closing in; the air was so loaded with suffocating vapor that men breathed with difficulty; matches were twice applied to the building which Napoleon occupied. How was he to fly? The concentrated flames blocked up the gates of the citadel. After search on all sides, a little postern was discovered, opening upon the Moskowa. The conqueror, accompanied by his guard, makes his escape through this little wicket of safety. On every side of him the vaulted roofs are falling in with a crash; clock towers, from whence flow forth torrents of liquid metal, bend, totter, and thunder to the ground. Timbers, beams, roofs, crackling, creaking, crumbling, sink down into a Phlegethon; bursting flakes and millions of golden spangles dash onwards. Bonaparte only escapes across the cooling cinders of a quarter already reduced to ashes, and reaches Petrowsky, a villa of the Czars.

Adversity overcome is the brightest glory, and willingly undergone, the greatest virtue. Sufferings are but the trials of valiant spirits.

Little things should not be despised. Many threads will bind an elephant. Many drops may, make a river.

Good counsel is cast away upon the arrogant, the self conceited, or the stupid, who are either too proud to take it, or too heavy to understand it.

A Singular Story.

The Washington correspondent of Mr. Lippard's paper, the "Quaker City," communicates the following curious account of a recent remarkable dream of Mr. Calhoun's. We have not much faith in supernatural appearances, or in Washington correspondents, but if any thing could lead the ghost of the "Father of his Country" to re-visit the realms beneath the moon, it would be the thought that his beloved country was in danger of Disunion, which is but another name for Civil War. We give the story for what it is worth:

Washington, D. C., Jan. 12, '50.

Mr. Editor—The other morning, at the Breakfast table, our friend, the Hon. John C. Calhoun, seemed very much troubled and out of spirits. You know he is altogether a venerable man, with a hard, stern, Scotch-Irish face, softened in its expression around the mouth by a sort of sad smile, which wins the hearts of all who converse with him. His hair is snow-white. He is tall, thin, and angular. He reminds you very much of Old Hickory. That he is honest, no one doubts; he has sacrificed to his Fatalism the brightest hopes of political advancement—has offered up on the shrine of that iron Necessity which he worships, all that can excite ambition—even the Presidency of the United States.

But to my story. The other morning, at the breakfast table, where I, an unobserved spectator, happened to be present, Calhoun was observed to gaze frequently at his right hand, and brush it with his left, in a nervous and hurried manner. He did this so often that it excited attention. At length one of the persons composing the breakfast party—his name I think is Toombs, and he is a member of Congress from Georgia—took upon himself to ask the occasion of Mr. Calhoun's disquietude.

"Does your hand pain you?" he asked.

To this Calhoun replied in rather a flurried manner—"Pshaw! It is nothing! Only a dream, which I had last night, and which makes me see perpetually a large black spot—like an ink blotch—upon the back of my right hand. An optical delusion, I suppose."

Of course, these words excited the curiosity of the company, but no one ventured to beg the details of this singular dream, until Toombs asked quietly—

"What was your dream like? I'm not very superstitious about dreams; but sometimes they have a good deal of truth in them."

"But this was such a peculiarly absurd dream," said Mr. Calhoun, again brushing the back of his right hand—"however, if it does not too much intrude upon the time of our friends, I will relate it."

Of course, the company were profuse in their expressions of anxiety to know all about the dream. In his singularly sweet voice, Mr. Calhoun related it:

"At a late hour last night, as I was sitting in my room, engaged in writing, I was astonished by the entrance of a visitor who entered, and without a word, took a seat opposite me, at my table. This surprised me, as I had given particular orders to the servant, that I should on no account be disturbed. The manner in which the intruder, so perfectly self-possessed, taking his seat opposite me, without a word, as though my room, and all within it, belonged to him, excited in me, as much surprise as indignation. As I raised my head to look into his features, over the top of my shaded lamp, I discovered that he was wrapped in a thin cloak, which effectually concealed his face and features from my view. And as I raised my head he spoke—

"'What are you writing, Senator from South Carolina?" he said.

I did not think of his impertinence at first, but answered him involuntarily—

"'I am writing a plan for the Dissolution of the American Union, (you know, gentlemen, that I am expected to produce a plan of Dissolution in the event of certain contingencies?)'

"To this the intruder replied, in the coolest manner possible:

"'Senator from South Carolina, will you allow me to look at your hand, your right hand."

"He rose, the cloak fell, and I beheld his face. Gentlemen, the sight of that face struck me like a thunder clap. It was the face of a dead man, whom extraordinary events have called back to life. The features were those of George Washington, yes gentlemen, the intruder was none other than George Washington. He was dressed in the Revolutionary costume, such as you see preserved in thd Patent Office—"

Here Mr. Calhoun paused, apparently much agitated. His agitation, I need not tell you, was shared by the company. Toombs at length broke the embarrassing pause. "Well, w-e-l-l, what was the issue of this scene?" Mr. Calhoun resumed:

"This intruder I have said, rose and asked to look at my right hand. As though I had not the power to refuse, I extended it. The truth is, I felt a strange chill pervade me at his touch; he grasped it, and held it near the light, thus affording me full time to examine every feature of his face. It was the face of Washington. Gentlemen, I shudder as I beheld the horribly dead-alive look of that visage. After holding my hand for a moment, He looked at me steadily, and said in a quiet way—

"'And with his right hand, Senator from Carolina, you would sign your name to a paper, declaring the Union dissolved!'

"I answered in the affirmative. 'Yes!' said I, 'if a certain contingency arises I will sign my name to the Declaration of Dissolution.' But at that moment, a black blotch appeared on the back of my hand, an inky blotch, which I seem to see even now. 'What is that!' cried I, alarmed I know not why, at the blotch upon my hand.

"'That,' said He, dropping my hand, 'That is the mark by which Benedict Arnold is known in the next world.'

"He said no more, gentlemen, but drew from beneath his cloak an object which he placed upon the table—placed it upon the very paper on which I was writing. That object, gentlemen, was a skeleton.

"'There,' said He, 'there are the bones of Isaac Hayne, who was hung in Charleston by the British. He gave his life, in order to establish the Union. When you put your name to a Declaration of Dissolution, why you may as well have the bones of Isaac Hayne before you. He was a South Carolinian, and so are you! But there was no blotch upon his right hand—'

"With these words the intruder left the room. I started back from the contact with the dead man's bones and—awoke. Overworn by labor, I had fallen asleep and been dreaming. Was it not a singular dream"?

All the company answered in the affirmative. Toombs muttered, "singular, very singular!" at the same time looking rather curiously at the back of his right hand—and Mr. Calhoun, placing his head between his hands, seemed buried in thought.

Communication from J. C. Hall, Esq.

KANESVILLE, March 15, 1850.

Editor of the Frontier Guardian:

I deem it due to myself and the cause of truth to present the following statement in relation to the Poll Books of the Election in this place of August, 1848.

It is well known that the vote given at that time was under a supposed organization from Munroe County, and the return was made to the Clerk of the Board of Commissioners at Albia, in that county, where that return was made, I was present and publicly advised the clerk not to receive the return, but to treat the whole matter as a nullity. Whether the clerk was influenced by that advice I do not know, but he did refuse to receive the return, and totally and emphatically refused to have any official or unofficial connection with the paper returned. When I was informed of this fact, and also that the Clerk would not either consent or dissent from any person taking it, I advised the friends of Mr. Thompson to take it and preserve it, so that it could be had in case of a contest of the Election. This was done, and the Poll Books, (or what purported to be them,) were procured by the friends of Mr. Thompson. Who went and got them I do not know. They came to my possession subsequent to that time and I gave them to Mr. Thompson. During the summer of 1849, I met Mr. Miller, (Thompsons competitor,) and in a conversation with him, I told him that the Poll Books were safe, and if he wanted them he could undoubtedly have them. He replied that he did not want them as he had a sworn copy of the original Poll Books deposited at Kanesville. In September last I had another conversation with Mr. Miller, in which I stated in substance the same thing to him. When the House of Representatives of the United States authorized the taking of evidence, the Poll Books were presented, and they have been brought to this County and fully identified as being "full and complete" as returned, by the evidence of James Sloan, who acted as clerk of the election, and was the returning officer, and were attached to his deposition and will be forwarded to Washington City, as part of the evidence of the case. These are all of the facts of the case. The Clerk refusing to act as a private agent or public officer to keep those Poll Books they necessarily had to be lost or fall into the possession of others. I thought that Mr. Thompson's friends had better take care of them. They have done so. They have been safely and securely preserved, as Mr. Sloan testifies. I believed then, and now, that the vote was illegal, and if counted would illegally deprive Mr. Thompson of his seat in Congress. This is the question which is about to be tried, and for which I am here as Mr. Thompson's counsel, to procure and send to Washington the evidence. With the decision I shall be content. For myself I have no doubt of the result, I believe Congress will decide that it was right not to count that vote, and that public opinion will justify me in causing the Poll Books to be preserved, so that they could be received as evidence in the question of contest. If the truth can be told, and the public advised of the real facts, I shall rest content. I am confident that the candid and truthful portion of community will fully acquit me of wrong. Their opinion I respect and their decision I desire, with others, I care nothing—epithets and supercillious denunciation I do not deal in, coming from others I have nothing but contempt.

Yours, J. C. HALL,

Marriage Customs among various Nations.

IN CHINA.

In the Chinese Empire, the wife is sold at her marriage, and is not permitted to raise her voice in a matter, which to her, of all others, is most important. She is sold by her parents or guardians to the highest bidder, as cattle are sold at action or vendue. The cold-hearted purchaser, often-times, knows as little of her physical and moral qualities, as our western land speculators do of their locations five hundred miles in the wilderness. He buys her as he would a horse, on the recommendation of the seller, with the privilege of annulling the contract if she does not answer the description. After the bargain is concluded, she is packed into a closed carriage and "forwarded on" to the residence of the purchaser or vendue, and the key of the carriage is given to him for the purpose of enabling him to open it, as he would the cage of some wild animal, or a trunk that contained a few articles of clothing. On opening the door, should he fancy that he had cause for dissatisfaction, with his purchase, he can post her back in disgrace to her friends—but, singular indeed, he forfeits the purchase-money.

IN MALABAR.

On the coast of Malabar, in the west of Hindostan, is a class of people who practice the most unnatural and revolting custom of one woman's having a plurality of husbands. They are a martial people, and possess a good deal of the spirit of knight errantry; insomuch, that their tournaments frequently end in blood. Each woman has as many husbands as suits her disposition; they are not exactly tenants in common in regard to her favor; but each enjoys her attentions exclusively at stated periods, or at her pleasure; and no one is allowed to enter her apartment while the arms of a copartner in domestic affairs are over the door.

IN ABYSSINIA.

The Abyssinian nation is one of the most barbarous on earth, and probably places the slightest estimation of any upon the matrimonial relations. The contract is broken by either party at pleasure. Indeed, so utterly destitute are they of any proper notions regarding this institution, that one traveler considers marriage as scarcely existing at all among them, so great is the ease with which the contract may be formed and dissolved. The lover consults only the parents of the bride, and having obtained their favor to the enterprise, forcibly seizes her and carries her home on his shoulders, as a butcher would a shank of mutton. Sometimes, a little more formality is observed; the parties attending church for two or three weeks, and partaking of the sacrament together. One traveler relates that he met a lady of aristocratic rank at Gondar, in company with six men, who had successively been her husbands. Nothing is more common than polygamy in Abyssinia; though a great pre-eminence is allowed to one wife.

IN THE BARBARY STATES.

In Barbary, a man can have four wives, and as many concubines as suits his inclination. He can divorce a wife for various causes, and she enjoys the same privilege, if he does not provide for her, or if he curses her more than twice. Pure affection has but little influence in the formation of their matrimonial engagements. The preliminary negociations are conducted wholly by the parents, and very often the parties do not see each other until they are married. The husband makes a sort of marriage settlement upon the wife, and if she brings property to his use at the time of marriage, he is not at liberty to squander it for his own benefit; a humane and liberal provision, which is sometimes found of consequence among more enlightened nations. Several days, previous to the celebration of the conjugal rites, are devoted by both parties to festivity and mirth, without seeing each other. On the wedding day, the bride is carried to the husband's house attended with music, torches and the firing of musketry. When she enters the door, she exercises extraordinary caution not to touch the threshold. She covers her eyes with her hands: he is now introduced to her and speaks to her, perhaps for the first time in his life. Their friends then indulge for several days in feasts and entertainments, corresponding to their rank and wealth. Many of the females, according to the invariable Mahometan custom, are strictly excluded from general society, and must see none of the male sex except their husbands; they are immured like slaves in the apartments of the harem.

IN DAHOMY.

In the kingdom of Dahomy, where it is said the religion consists of an indescribable mass of superstition, we behold the same melancholy and sickening picture. The female is degraded to a level with the brutes of the field, and performs all or nearly all the manual labor; while her more than brutal husband, whose chief delight should be to protect and defend her, is usually yawning upon "the donwy bed of ease." Here, however, her approbation is usually sought before she is led to the matrimonial altar. She may be divorced at pleasure, but she also enjoys the liberty of leaving her lord at any time and taking another husband. The wife is considered so far beneath her husband, that she must never eat in his august presence! She must kneel whenever she presents him with anything, and rise only with his most sovereign permission. The legal allowance of wives for the king, is somewhere in the neighborhood of three thousand, selected from the fairest damsels in all his dominions. They are mere slaves, and on any capricious disgust, are treated with the most painful cruelty, and are often put to death! All the female sex is considered at his obsolute disposal, and an annual assemblage of all the beautiful of the land take place, from which he makes his selection and distributes the refuse among his grandees, who are bound to receive them with the humblest gratitude. This demon incarnate ornaments the favorite apartments of his palaces and temples, with human skulls—most beautiful trappings with which to amuse a delicate and acusitive young lady! —[Fowler on Marriage.

The Glory of a Good Man is the testimony of a good conscience; have that, and you will have inward peace in the midst of troubles.

There are looking glasses for the face, but none for the mind. That defect then must be supplied by a serious reflection upon one's self.—[Grant.

J. C. Hall, Esq.

This gentleman, with several others, recently visited our County, as counsel for Mr. Thompson in procuring evidence relative to the contested election. He is unquestionably a man of talent, possessing much firmness and determination in maintaining any position that he may take. We should consider him the brond axe to cut away the knots and rough scorings to make way for the plain and sand paper.

The dust and smoke kicked up about that poll book affair seems to gather so densly around him that it almost obstructs his vision and causes him apparently to choke and hem to the fog. He wishes us to blow it away from him, and to clear up his atmosphere a little. He behaved very gentlemanly while here, and we are free to acknowledge that as a man and fellow, we have none but good feelings towards him: yet we have not quite wind enough to blow away all that poll book dust and smoke that so naturally collect in his immediate atmosphere. He seems to think that his motives and intentions were good and correct in whatever agency he had in advising the said poll book to be ramequatulated: But for the correctness or incorrectness of his motives, it is not necessary for us to vouch:—the action is the visible object that commands decision. He appeared so sociable and friendly while here that some of our folks, instead of thinking him such a bitter anti-mormon as was hinted at, suggested the probability of his being on the eve of embracing the faith; because, say they, he can have no expectation of getting our votes here if he should even be a candidate for Governor, from the fact that he has taken the position that our votes are illegal, and therefore it must be our religion and not our politics that makes him thus kind and good.

By his affidavit, it appears that Gen. Dodge, Gov. Clark and others were first and foremost in concocting the plan to supress or reject the returns of the election from this county, and himself only the agent to execute their counsel and advice. (Remember that "it was according to counsel" for the poll book to be taken.) Since the explosion, Mr. H. claims that his former friends and advisers are hauling off and leaving him to father the dishonor and screen themselves. This should admonish him never again to become an instrument in the hands of such dishonorable men. "Poor tray was caught in bad company," and Mr. Hall should "never again associate with the wretch who in the hour of danger will forsake his friend:"

In our last number we expressed our views concerning this affair, and took our position; the justice and truth of which become more and more established in our own mind. We can make no admissions, for the accommodation of any man, that tend to justify the act of taking from us our just and constitutional rights—none that will have the least tendency or bearing, directly or indirectly, to render powerless our voice in the halls of legislation.

As we have said before, we say again; that if every vote cast here in 1848, were illegal, the way those votes were treated, was ungenerous and dishonorable. The citizens here voted in good faith—the judges and officers of the election were honest men, and did their duty according to their best ability; and their acts, legal or illegal, were entitled to more consideration and respect than they received, because they were done in good faith, and under color of law; and we believe, lawfully done. We cannot, therefore, consent to become the apologist of any agent or adviser who seeks to gag or stifle our voice in the councils of the nation.

Fixin.—We feel confident that Messrs. Hall & Johnson did not find so many "heads and horns" in the conducting and managing of the election here in August '48 as they verily expected. We think that they will do us the justice to say that they found no intentional fraud committed by the citizens here in relation to that election—that they were not foreigners, not minors, not aliens, neither fools; and having reared ten grist mills, and many saw-mills, besides opening numerous large and valuable farms, they cannot look upon us as traveling gipsies, without an abiding place. As well might we object to Messrs. Hall & Thomps on voting in the State of Iowa because they expect to emigrate to heaven, as they can object to our voting because we expect to emigrate to the Salt Lake, and they may even leave for their destination before we do for ours, though their present prospects may not be quite so hopeful. We wish them no ill; yet they have put themselves in such an eligible position to receive a "raking fire" that we could hardly summons self government enough to prevent us from applying the match. We feel more like having a little sport at their expense, than we do like cherishing any vindictive feeling towards them. As we feel willing to dismiss this subject, we begin and end this article with Finis.

Perpetual Fund System.

This is a wise and generous move of the friends in the Valley to aid the poor to go from this place to the Salt Lake Country. Prest. Young was the originator of it. Let no one be jealous because he cannot be helped now, but be thankful that any one can be helped, and if you do right, perhaps you will be helped next time. Patience and perseverance are bound to draw the prize sooner or later. Whoever can throw in an ox, a cow, a horse, a mule, or a pair of each, can have the gratification and honor of doing so. Cash will not be refused. Bishop Hunter is now here. He is the agent of the fund, and will receive and disburse the same among the poor according to his judgment and discretion.

Obtaining Goods and money by False Pretences.

The above has become a very fashionable operation among such only as are too lazy and dishonest to get a living by honorable industry and perseverance.

Our ears are sometimes saluted with complaints, that men belonging to the Church are guilty of obtaining goods and money upon false pretences. There are some renegades and scape graces, who only profess to be Mormons, that they may be the better able to gull the unsuspecting and innocent. Let it be a standard maxim among you, that when any person asks you for your money upon any terms or conditions, or for your goods or property for any benevolent object wherein the Church is claimed to be in any respect benefitted; ask for the authority of that person, and ascertain whether he has any right, or whether he has been duly appointed by the Council here to collect funds for any purpose. If men are sent to collect funds, we invariably give them credentials to that effect, and we are willing to countersign or endorse any authority that comes from the Valley, if the agent sent remains in the line of his duty.

There is no kind of need or necessity of any being deceived if they will listen to what is told them from the proper source.

There are men who claim the right to make contracts, borrow money and enter into various speculations and say that it is no body's business but their own if they do. As men, it is their right, we grant. But when an advantage is taken by a certain religious influence upon the credulity of the unguarded to effect that which could not be effected on common or ordinary principles, and then a failure to perform according to agreement, in that case the individual is not the only one to suffer the dishonor, but it is the cause at large; and complaints are made to us of dishonesty and fraud, by which we are tormented, and the guilty party is out of sight and out of hearing, leaving honest men to suffer, and men who despise such operations, in the stench of their careless and fraudulent transactions. When men are sent on missions to preach the Gospel, they should live by the Gospel, and not by speculation. If they live by speculation, they will not effect the object for which they were sent; neither will they prosper in any thing long. If men are appointed to travel and preach the Gospel in Pottawatamie County, they will not do well if they run away with a wild notion of speculation in new inventions, forsaking the spirit of their calling, and though they may succeed in borrowing the last hundred dollars a poor man has, to further such wild speculations, and then fail in every effort to redeem. Be it remembered, if these poor men curse you, you will be cursed indeed, and nothing you can do can prosper, and you will wither like a dried reed.

If you sell property to a person who has not seen it, be sure and not represent it any better or any different from what it really is. If you vary at all, let it prove to the buyer a little better than you have represented it, then there is an agreeable feeling left, confidence is inspired and begotten, and this principle will hold society together, and is the great bond of our union. Those who do differently from this are not honest or honorable men in our view. We have now cleared our garments, and we hope that none will come about us and whine that he has been cheated or defraud in any way; for we feel that it is the worst form in which the old cloven footed monster can possibly appear to us; a whining murmuring person. If you will subscribe for the Guardian and pay for it in advance, you will save yourselves from the bite of many a shark that gets into the net. And you may set it down for granted as a general thing, that those are sharks who are passing through the country, and are about among the Saints at home and abroad trying to raise money without authority; honest and good men generally stay at home and work with their hands, unless they are sent away by the Presiding Officer of the Church where they live. The Church has crouched under the burdens which these worthless renegades have imposed upon her long enough. She has allowed her honor and credit to suffer by such characters until forbearance has long since ceased to be a virtue. They have shaken the confidence of good men, damped the zeal of the upright, and prostrated the faith of the unsuspecting, until truth and justice demand that the spell be broken, and the perpetrators of such acts be held up to the scorn and contempt which their works entitle them to receive.

Henceforth, such characters, may expect to see their names conspicuously inserted in the Guardian whenever we know of such transactions, and none need think to be screened who are guilty.

Reported for the Guardian.

When Judge Kinney was at Kanesville, he admitted Mr. Orson Hyde, Editor of the Guardian, as an Attorney and Counsellor at law, to practice in the several courts of Iowa. Hon. D. F. Miller, soon after meeting him said: Elder Hyde, I intend to report you to the Council at the Salt Lake; for the Scriptures say: "Woe unto you lawyers!" To which the Elder replied; "I thought I would join the profession, knowing it to be under divine censure, and raise it, if possible, to an elevation above the woe, and contribute to its numbers that we might be strong and respectable enough to plead successfully our own cause.

Receipts.—We publish in every issue of the Guardian, the receipt of monies forwarded to us on subscription, our reason for adopting this plan, is to avoid the unnecessary trouble, and expense incurred through acknowledging by letter.

Stolen.

A valuable set of harness for two horses, (brass mounted,) was stolen from the yard of Mr. Robert Calwell, near Carterville, on the night of the 27th ult., belonging to Col. Lockwood Smith, from Cedar county in this State, who is on his way to the mines in California. He is satisfied that no resident of this county took it, but believes it to have been taken by an emigrant whose displeasure he had particularly incurred. We should be most horribly mortified if any citizen of this county should be guilty of any such meanness and crime.

If the said harness is safely returned to its owner forth-with, or placed where he will find it, either by day or by night, well and good; but if not, let him who stole it be served as he serves the harness. If he destroys the harness, let destruction come upon him,—if he return the harness unharmed, or place it where the owner can get it, let him proceed on his journey and prosper; or remain here and do the same; but if not, let him prove the strength of a Mormon prophecy: "he shall become blind, and a child shall lead him." Let every man beware how he steals in this quarter, lest confusion speedily come upon him. We say to the thief, return the harness to its owner! We are not trifling with you.

"Straining at a Gnat."

We are unable to discover the object which Mr. Thompson's Counsel had in trying to prove that some who voted in the Kanesville precinct at the August election of 1848, resided north or south of any county lines run subsequently to the time of their voting.

By an act of the Legislature, approved February 24, 1847. The entire country embraced within the limits of what is called Pottawatamie Purchase, on the waters of the Missouri River in this State, was called Pottawatamie County, extending from the Northern line of the State of Missouri, Northward to the "Big Sioux," the northern line of the State of Iowa. The provisions of an act approved Feb. 17, 1843. (four years previous) Sec. 12, had never been carried into effect: and the voters here in 1848, voted in good faith, and under color of law, to say the least of it: and inasmuch as no special county lines were then run, the citizens felt that they were not particularly restricted by any geographical lines, so long as they kept within the limits of the Pottawatamie purchase. They considered, and that justly, in our view that it mattered not in what particular section they voted so long as they were in the Pottawatamie purchase, or any other portion of the first Congressional district most convenient for them.

By another act of the Legislature approved Feb 22, 1847; an act to divide the State into two Congressional districts, all that country lying South of a line from the Northwest corner of Polk County, running west to the Missouri River, is included in the first Congressional district; and what injustice could Mr. Thompson suffer in consequence of the legal voters casting their votes at any election precinct in the said district? If it were a county election only, then it would be right to confine the votes within the limits thereof.

If the Kanesville precinct was organized by the commissioners of Monroe County, by what law could the Clerk of their Court reject the poll book returned from that said precinct? Ans: By the same law that a man refuses to cash his own paper. He chose to sacrifice his honor rather than the interests of his party. But unfortunately, by that act, he sacrificed both.

The Kanesville precinct was understood to lie west of Monroe County at the time of its organization, and believed to be west of it by both whigs and democrats at the time of the election. None then expressed neither entertained any doubts of it. Consequently, all voted in good faith; and we cannot think that Congress is going to split hairs over this question to deprive honest men of their right to the ballot box.

Corn and Hay.

Now is the time for farmers to bring their corn, oats, and spring wheat to market. There is plenty of good prairie hay in the country, and notice should be given here where it is.

California Emigrants are coming in quite freely, and it is hoped that our friends will accommodate them with houses and shelter as far as it may be in their power. Bring on your grain and let them have it at fair and reasonable prices, and go to and raise more next summer, and Heavon will bless your labors. They are strangers among us. Make them as comfortable as you can, and remember that we have been strangers in strange lands.

Wheat is very good to feed to horses, and if corn should be found scarce, wheat in small quantities will sustain horses remarkably well. Give them plenty of hay which is good and cheap.

Ferrying.

From present appearances, there will be three or four Ferries across the Missouri river in the vicinity of this place. One at the Old Mormon crossing, about twelve miles above this place, one at Traders' Point, and one, and possibly two at the mouth of the Great Platte river, some sixteen miles below this place.

The columns of the Guardian are open and free to any proprietor or proprietors of Ferries across the Missouri, who have advertised their business: They shall have the privilege of speaking through the Guardian without charge, provided their communications are not too lengthy.

Now set forth your claims, your conveniences, your advantages, and put your best foot forward. Free trade and sailors' rights on this frontier; "and the longest poll sweeps the perclammons."

We do not wish to have any company say that we have used partiality; but we give all a chance to tell their story in their own way, and let the Emigrants judge for themselves.

Pilot to the Salt Lake.

Mr. Rosewell Stevens, who has been to the Salt Lake and back again,—acquainted with Western life, and with the Indian character—with mountain ranges and defiles, and is a hardy, staunch built man, proposes to pilot a company as far as Salt Lake City for five dollars per man, payable in advance, and the other half at the end of the route, provided a company of one hundred men can be raised. He will furnish his own animals and provisions.

We can say of Mr. Stevens, that he is just the man that can take a company through and no mistake. He is one of that kind of men that can act efficiently in almost any emergency, particularly in any such as would be likely to arise on this trip We can recommend him with confidence—as a suitable and proper person.

Concert of Sacred Music.

On Saturday, the 6th day of April, at 6 o'clock, P. M., a GRAND CONCERT, of Vocal and Instrumental Music will be given by the Choir and Band at the Music Hall in Kanesville.

Who will not trent himself and family with the pleasure and edification which sacred melody affords, particularly on this frontier, so lately a wilderness, and the home of the red man?

Emigrants who are just arriving from a long journey, and about to embark upon another, suppose you treat yourselves to a musical feast before you launch forth upon the lonely and toilsome plains?

The proceeds of this Concert are to be appropriated for defraying the expenses of the Choir while practicing and improving in the science of Music; such as Hall, lights, fuel and tuition.

Tickets may be had at the door on the evening of the Concert, or at the office of the Guardian at any time previous. Price 25 cents.

Secure your tickets beforehand if possible, as a limited number only will be issued, corresponding with the space in the Hall.

Those men who had a mule stolen and hid, should follow up the person from the description given of him. Here is a magistrate, and all the facilities; and though they have recovered the mule, we should like to know if J. T. are the first letters of the thiefs name. Curse the thief, and let a mule kick him to death.

Conference.

The Annual Conference of the Church, will commence on Saturday, the 6th inst., at 10 o'clock, A. M., in the Valley, a little South of Kanesville, on the new road running between the former place and Cartersville, if the weather permit. A liberal turn out is desired and expected.

Br. Joseph Young is desired to deliver the opening address, followed by Br. Benj. L. Clapp and Thos S. Johnson. The business will be transacted at a time when the greatest number is present, and will continue from day to day until all the business of the Church which properly belongs to the Conference is completed.

Weather.

At the time of going to press, April showers have begun in earnest. It is warm and rainy, and a good prospect for a wet Conference, as usual. Should Saturday next prove to be a wet day, the Conference will only be organized in the Hall, and adjourn until the first fair Saturday after that time, to meet on the ground selected for the same near this place. If it is very wet on Saturday evening, the Concert will be posponed also until further notice. But if not stromy, no postponement.

Who can Bent This!

Dr. Luke Johnson, of this County, has brought us the butter made from one cow during one week. It was ten pounds and ten ounces. The cow had a calf at the same time, and the milk of the cow when skimmed was the calf's support. Whoever can go ahead of this, let him come on with his butter, and we will give him double price for it.

Question.

Who will furnish us a few yoke of oxen and some cows and wagons on tithing, to be forwarded on to the Salt Lake with the poor? It is time now to think seriously about tithing, and prompt attention to the perpetual fund for the removal of the poor. Bring in all your tithes and offerings, and prove yourselves before the Lord, and a blessing will crown your labors. We await the answer.

Corn Planters.

Let every body that remains in Pottawatamie begin to plant corn the latter part of this month, and continue to plant it until the middle of June, and see if there cannot be enough raised for all the gold diggers that may pass this way. Plant corn, plant corn! and then take care of it, not forgetting oats and Spring wheat neither potatoes; and repair the fences.

Politeness.

Mr. Beck, the proprietor of the Bluff House, politely sent a message to the County Court on Monday last, that he would sell all the whisky that he pleased, lisence or no lisence. We had some sympathy for him when he fled here from Trading Point a few weeks ago, and applied to us for a house, saying that he could not stay there for Messrs. Wheeling & Hawes, applied the hickory or their fists to him so violently a short time before, that he had to leave. But his recent impudence too clearly shows that he gave the folks of Trading Point just provocation to apply the hickory.

Keg Creek Mills.

We visited the establishment of Joseph W. Coolidge & Co., the other day on Keg Creek, and to behold such improvements in a new country was most agreeably surprizing. A good grist mill, and excellent saw mill in successful operation, and a healthy country around—plenty of good timber, fine prairie and excellent water, were, to us, sure indications of coming prosperity, consideration and importance to that section. The best location that we have seen on this Frontier.

California Emigrants.

A fine lot of men, hale and robust appearing, have already arrived here bound for the mines. Their teams look remarkably well, and we should judge the majority of the men to rank considerably above the medium. Multitudes more are on their way. Success to them!

Houses and Farms for Sale.

Here are many valuable farms and houses for sale cheap for cash, cattle, goods, wares and merchandize: apply to the agency at this office.

Fire in St. Louis.

We learn from our St. Louis exchanges, that the Planter's Tobacco Warehouse, on Second street has been burned down. There was a large amount of property in the warehouse, belonging to different parties, which is estimated will swell the entire amount of loss to be about $100,000 the greater part of which was probably insured. The fire originated near the steps leading to the counting room of Houseman & Lowry, and is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary, as it is reported that no person was in the building at the time

We are informed that Oliver Cowdry, Esq., died at Richmond, Ray County, Missouri, on the 3d day of March last, of Consumption.

A communication from J. C. Hall, Esq., on the missing Poll Book, will be found on our first page

Cholera.—We learn from some of our exchanges, that this dreadful disease is again making its appearance in New York, and Alabama, and that several cases have lately occurred on the steamboats running from New Orleans to St. Louis.

The Chinese spend annually, £90,000,000 for incence to burn before their idols; or about $435,000,000. Equal to five shillings or one dollar and sixteen cents to every man, woman and child in their whole empire.

Highly Important.

Two or three unsuccessful attempts, we learn, have been recently made to steal horses. No camp of emigrants should go to sleep without leaving a good guard well armed, to take care of their horses and mules. There has been scarcely a case of stealing in our county for the last year. There are men who followed up the Emigrants last year to this place to steal from them on our credit, and we have good reason to believe they are doing so this year. Emigrants must learn to watch as well as pray; for in the crowd, it is hard to tell who is who. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Watch your horses and shoot a thief if necessary.

For the Frontier Guardian.

Kanesville.

BY PICCIOLA.

Not two years old, is Kanesville now,
And yet to her, my muse shall bow;
Her matchless deeds, I will proclaim,
For thus I love, to sing her fame.

A dozen stores, are now her boast—
You startle—'tis not Hamlets Ghost!!!
Dwellings by hundreds now you see—
Streets fill'd with men of industry.

First most important, for good of society,
A Free Press! she has, and books in variety,
Pens, paper, and motto's—ink in the bargain;
These found in the office of the Frontier Guardian!!

And next on the list—Big A, number 1!!
A store with every thing under the sun,
From a hogshead of sugar to a pair of kid gloves;
Log chains—teas—ribbons, and fine cooking stoves.

The north-eastern corner, best goods you'll find,
There's variety, style, and cheapness combined.
Dry goods and hardware, pork, butter and eggs;
Glassware and crockery—rakes, spades and kegs.

The Western Emporium!! Frame building forsooth,
Of magnitude great, although in its youth,
Pills—Sarsaparilla and Eau de Cologne,
Pies, cakes and oil paints, together have shone.

Here too, there's trunks, saddles and bridles so fine—
Here's all kind of fancy goods kept in the line;
And Daguerrian pictures they'll make in a trice,
Toys, posies and trinkets, and every thing nice.

Right opposite there, the bees are to work,
A peep in their hive, gives the spasmodic jerk!!
Such beautiful goods, for ladies so fair,
Shawls, bonnets and slips, you'll find them quite rare.

Look o'er the way a bit further down;
You'll find that the Miller has turn'd to Brown.
The cashmeres and linens, from England you know,
Domestics and prints, to suit high and low.

The Elephant!!! The Elephant of the West!!!
Come see it, a Tootle, from London at best,
For Fashion and style, and goodness depend,
There's none to compare, believe me my friend.

Children and youths, I'd call your attention,
And studious men—of boasted retention;
Books suited to each, and still many more,
In the office of Guardian, refered to before.

Ensign of the West!! for auctions commended;
Goods at your own price, promised forehand'd;
Admittance to see, and children half price,
Free-gratis for nothing—pray take a slice!

Ah, my! do you want a good coffee pot;
Look up in the heav'ns, you can get it, why not.
And underneath, there lives a good tinner;
Opposite friend Gooch's who'll give a good dinner.

There's taverns plenty—bells ring thrice a day,
Tin—gun—and blacksmithing in every way.
Painters and jewelers—watches mended the best;
Boots, shoes and slips, of morocco well dress'd.

O Kanesville! what art you? What be you? do tell!
You're own'd by the Mormons, driven from hell?
So thought wicked men, when out of Nauvoo!
With gun, handspike and ball, they drove them through.

I thank you my muse, you and I, now will part,
For Kanesville I love from the depth of my heart,
The yell of the savage, their cunning and stealth,
Is now changed for industry beauty, and wealth.
Kanesville, March 14, 1850.

List of California Emigrants that have arrived on this Frontier.

They are all apparently in good health and spirits, and eager for the mines. Persons receiving this number who are not regular subscribers to the paper, will please run over this list of names, and they will probably find their husband's name, the name of a son or brother, cousin, friend or old acquaintance. There are many emigrants who have arrived here whose names are not in this list. They can all have their names registered in the next number of the Guardian if they wish, and a copy sent back to any friend, for one dime each.

MARRIED.

On Tuesday evening, 26th ult., by Elder Lyman Stoddard, Mr. THOMAS MENDENHALL, of Rockyford, to Miss CATHERINE BARTON, formerly of Northumberland County, Pa., both of this county.

The Champagne was excellent; and our wish is, that this happy couple lately admitted into the union, may richly reap and enjoy the constitutional blessings pertaining to the said State; and that a dissolution of the Union may never be effected.

DIED,

On Musquito Creek, in this County, on Tuesday, March 26th, LYMAN E. CORY, of inflamation of the lungs, aged 41 years.

STOP THE THIEF!
$25 REWAED.

THERE is reason to believe that a thief is lurking in the vicinity of Kanesville, or the settlements above. He stole a horse belonging to J. P. Burnes, from the premises of Mr. Robert Russell, of this county. He was pursued and arrested on the Desmoine, and brought back to this county, and escaped the same day. He was seen making his way towards Kanesville. The above reward will be given for the apprehension and delivery of the thief to me at Austin, or the constable of this county.

Description—His name is Samuel Martin, aged about 21 years, 6 feet one inch high, light hair and rather swarthy complexion; had on when he escaped a blue blanket coat, dark cassimere pants, coarse shoes, and a glazed cap.

J. P. BURNES.

The Frontier Guardian.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 3, 1850.

For the Frontier Guardian.

WAPELLO, Feb. 12th, 1850.

Rev. O. Hyde—

Dear Sir:—Since I had the gratification to read your polite and courteous answer to the contents of my letter of the 4th of March, 1848, an influx of emigration has been flowing to the Great West, hitherto unexampled in the settlement of any part of the globe. The predictions which I then made in regard to your western settlement in the Valley have been more than realized.

The prosperity which, under your sagacious direction, has followed that bold enterprise, is truly gratifying—presenting, as it does, a spectacle, showing an energy, under adversity without a parallel.

That little band of adventurers, who, comparatively, but as yesterday, were houseless, and homeless, have weathered the storm and are now enjoying the comforts of life, "with their latch strings out," to greet the weary emigrants who are pressing onward in quest of the rich mineral treasures in California.

These people have formed a Constitution, and are now knocking at the door of Congress for admission as a State, but in view of the sparseness of their population, it is possible that a Territorial Government may be substituted, which should not be matter of regret; as it would tend, greatly, to relieve them from the burdens of a heavy taxation incident to a State Government: should this be the result, the present constitution will prove abortive.

In view of the sentiments which you entertain as expressed in a late number of the Guardian, in regard to restricting the sale of spirituous liquors in the Valley; should a new Constitution be formed at some sub-equent period, with your influence exerted in its behalf, you can have a proviso incorporated prohibiting the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors in the State of Deseret. Finding no such precedent in any of the State Constitutions; you may hesitate—let not this defect in the fundamental law of other States deter you, it is a proviso which should have been inserted in them all, one which would conduce, more to the physical and mental energies of the disorderly, for whom laws are most needed, than any other which could be adopted. By presenting this new principle and carrying it out successfully, you will acquire for yourself a world wide renown; good men of all parties, and of all denominations will sustain you in it.

Were I in your stead, nothing would deter me from making the effort; there is nothing to be feared from controversy upon this new phase—God and nature lies at the foundation of the principle, and will sustain you in defending it. All inferior animals feed upon the grains and fruits of the earth in their primitive state, including the fowls of the air, and the fishes of the sea; while, by various modes of preparation in the culinary arts, man's appetite for food is gratified, and nature sustained in its full vigor. After undergoing the process of fermentation and distillation, nutrition is destroyed, and the poison which is generated by this process, and extracted, is rejected by every species of animal, man only excepted; he will drink the final poison, although he knows that death is in the cup, this fact alone speaks volumes in favor of prohibiting its use. A proviso for restricting African Slavery, has been a hobby for years, and continued to be the great exciting topic of the day; while the slavery to spirituous liquors which bind, in iron fetters, a class, otherwise free, far more numerous, is overlooked. Let the proviso here suggested, be adopted in the new State of Deseret, and she will stand as a proud example of moral grandeur for others to behold, and pattern after in this respect.

I have made the foregoing suggestion in good faith, under a due sense of its importance, and of its practicability under your system. The subject is one in which I feel a deep interest, and which I have no doubt, from your editorial remarks has received your attentive consideration. Standing as you do at the head, or at one of the heads of a great and increasing community—as one of the guiding stars to pilot them safely through their pilgrimage here on earth, and to direct them to the haven of rest above, this great and growing evil could not escaped your notice; here is a remedy proposed, which, in my judgment, is worthy of all due consideration.

Very respectfully,
Your ob't. serv't.
JNO. M. COLEMAN.

Congressional.

WASHINGTON, March 7th.

SENATE.—The ladies filled every available position on the floor and every avenue was crowded to overflowing.

The Vice President stated that the first business in order, was Mr. Clay's resolutions:

Mr. Walker being entitled to the floor, briefly stated that the vast assembly which filled the Senate Chamber had evidently come to hear the Senator from Massachusetts, and he would cheerfully give way to Mr. Webster.

Mr. Webster then rose—After expressing his obligations, he proceeded to address the Senate, not, he said, as a Southern man, nor Northern man, but as an American, and he desired to do his duty with fidelity, with the hope that the storm which was now raging in the land, would be lulled; he spoke of the preservation of the Union with an anxious heart, for the restoration of that quiet and harmony so necessary to the prosperity and happiness of our country. These were his objects, and if he would do ever so little to attain these, his end would be accomplished; he proceeded to consider the events which led to the present difficulties, commencing with a review of the war with Mexico, its battles, triumphs, and results. Prior to these negotiations, the people of California, assisted perhaps by officers and the people of the United States, revolted against the government of Mexico and ran up the independent flag, the result was a tide of emigration set towards San Francisco from every country of the world—rich and apparently inexhaustible gold mines in California were subsequently discovered and emigration increased to those far distant shores.

He referred next to the failure of Congress to provide a Territorial Government for the people of this new Territory. He said that in this state of things, those people had taken measures to establish a local Government; had elected Senators and Representatives, and had sent them here with their constitution to ask for immediate admission into the Union. This constitution there adopted contained a clause prohibiting slavery in the new state, which provision had given rise to the opposition now made to her admission. Whatever was believed to be the object or the manner of the war with Mexico, the territory was acquired, but the expectation that it would be a slave Territory was disappointed by the action of the people of the Territory itself. He then went into a historical consideration of the institution of slavery from the earliest ages to the present time. He alluded, at some length, to the feelings of a large portion of the community, arising from a conscientious belief that slavery is a sin, and incompatible with the christian sentiments of brotherly kindness. The question in the early days of the Government was, how the evil should be dealt with. It was thought its days would be shortened by preventing the importation of slaves, and a proposition was introduced to prohibit such importation. He alluded to the ordinance prohibiting slavery in the N. West Territory. Mr. Calhoun had said that this was the first of a series of measures calculated to awaken the South. He desired to say that the ordinance was passed with the unanimous consent of the South, there being but one vote against it, and that one a representative from the North. Since that time there had been a great change of opinion; there had been continually growing opinion in the North against slavery, and a growing opinion in the South in its favor. This state of things resulted from causes which would always produce like effects. The change of opinion in the South had resulted, in a great measure, from the growth and increase of cotton raising. It is well known that the value of the cotton exported from the United States did not exceed $50,000, while now, perhaps, under favorable circumstances, its value was $100,000,000 per annum. Indeed, he was told that when Mr. Jefferson was negotiating the treaty of 1794 with England, he did not know that cotton was raised in this country.

Mr. Webster, in reply to Mr. Calhoun's objection, that the operations of the Government had been against the South, and calculated to weaken her, contended that the contrary was the fact. Referring to the Texas question, he had always been opposed to its annexation, because he knew that whoever possessed Texas, it would be a slave Territory, and he was unwilling to extend that institution. He had time and again expressed himself strongly in opposition to the introduction of any new slave state, or to the acquisition of slave territory.

Upon that point he knew no change in his sentiments—he had expressed his belief in the Spartan maxim, "improve and adorn what you have, and seek no farther." Texas had been admitted with all her territory, and with the institution of slavery. He wished it to be distinctly understood that he considered this government solemnly bound by law to create new states out of Texas when she shall contain a sufficient population.

Slavery was excluded from California and New Mexico by the law of nature, which had erected an impassable barrier to its introduction there; this he considered a fixed fact. He alluded to the difficulty arising from the failure of the North to give proper aid in the capture of fugitive slaves—he thought the North in the wrong, and the South in the right—it was the cause of great complaint on the part of the South, and one which the North ought to remove. Concerning the agitation in the North, complained of by the South, he observed that he had no doubt but that during the last twenty years, money enough had been subscribed in the North for the support of abolition papers, societies and lecturers, to purchase the freedom of every slave in the land. Mr. Webster, in conclusion, delivered a most impressive and eloquent tribute to the value of the Union.

Mr. Calhoun replied to the suggestions of Mr. Webster. The Senate then adjourned.

WASHINGTON, March 11th.

SENATE—Mr. Seward ably reviewed the whole question of the admission of California, and gave his reasons at length why she ought to be admitted. The perpetual unity of this empire, he said, appeared to him to hang upon the decision of this day and hour. California was already a complete State, and could never again be less than that; nothing prevents her admission, but want of agreement among ourselves. It was insisted that the admission of California should be attended by a compromise of the slavery question. He was opposed to any such compromise; legislative compromises were all radically wrong. In conclusion, he would vote for the admission of California, directly, without condition, and without qualification or compromise.

HOUSE—After some unimportant business, the House went into committee of the whole on the President's California message, Mr. Stanton, of Kentucky, having the floor. He contended that the Wilmot proviso was in direct opposition to the Constitution; that citizens have a right to take their slaves to new territories; he would vote for the admission of California, with suitable boundaries, provided a provision be made for the balance of States to be admitted.

Mr. Fowler was in favor of admitting California with her present constitution.

WASHINGTON, March 13.

HOUSE — An unsuccessful attempt was made to introduce the credentials of Messrs. Wright and Gilbert, Representatives from California, together with her constitution and memorial asking for admission.

Mr. Preston King offered a resolution, that all debate on the California Message should cease on Wednesday next. Laid on the table.

SENATE.—Mr. Douglas presented the credentials of Messrs. Fremont and Gwynn, Senators from California, and a memorial asking admission. Laid on the table and ordered to be printed. A number of petitions were presented against the extension of slavery and admitting slave States. An exciting debate ensued, when finally a motion to lay them on the table prevailed.

WASHINGTON, March 14

SENATE—Mr. Baldwin accepted Mr. Webster's modification. He thought no practical results could be had from any series of resolutions; he was satisfied that the only proper course would be to keep the question of the admission of California distinct and seperate; he was prepared to vote for her admission just as she came.

Mr. Cass coincided with Mr. Clay's opinion of a select committee, and looked upon it as one more chance for a settlement of the question, although he had but little hope of such a result. He complimented Mr. Foote, and said he had given an exhibition of moral courage almost unequalled, when he had disarmed the position taken by Mr. Calhoun in his speech. He observed that it was well ascertained that no Wilmot Proviso could pass the Senate. He thought the fugitive slave bill ought to be taken up and adjusted, so as to be satisfactory to the majority, and passed. The passage of that bill would do much towards a better feeling on the part of the South.

Mr. Calhoun replied to Mr. Cass, and observed that the only way to settle the matter would be to amend the Constitution as he had indicated. He held himself prepared, if the Union should be dissolved, to show that Mr. Cass had a full share in producing that result.

After some further remarks the consideration of the subject was postponed till tomorrow.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of the California message. Mr. Douglas spoke till the adjournment.

From California.

Gen. John Wilson, who was supposed to have been lost in the mountains, has reached San Francisco. He and his lady write to their friends in Glasgow, under date of December 24th, and 31st, and from their letters we make the following extracts. We copy from the Glasgow Times:

Gen. W. writes that the health of his family was much improved by the trip. He says, "that the gold is entirely inexhaustible, is beyond all doubt or cavil; besides all the vast deposites of which you have heard in the soil, and these have not been overrated, the immense quarries of quartz rock that are every where on the slopes of the west side of the Sierra Nevada to be seen, contains particles of gold, to the amount of three and four dollars in value, when pulverized and the metal collected with quick silver. Of the truth of this I have the most creditable assurances. This being so the country can have no parallel for making money." After advising the relative to whom he writes, to come to that country, he says, "To all my friends, however, who are not entirely, and conclusively sure they can, and will, resist all temptation to drink and gamble, I say stay away from this country. To the man who does, and will continue to refuse to touch either of these, will go ahead. There are hundreds of men here, who reached here two months ago, with less than $100 in their pockets, who are now actually worth, and can pocket, in cash, in a month, at from 10 to 50,000!

Gen. W. writes that he believes it would be greatly to the interest of several families, (relatives) to come to that country although the want of society, and the opportunities to educate children are bad; yet the prospect of accumulating wealth, and the certainty of these conveniences being at hand in a few years, he thinks sufficient inducement. He speaks very unfavorably of the climate, from extremes of wet and dry, which prevail. He advises the shipment of houses, bedding, &c., and the overland route for families, as he considers it beneficial to health. Ninety days is sufficient for the trip, if equipped according to his directions, as follows:

"Get a light two horse wagon, heavily ironed, all of the very best materials; put to it six good mules, and 1200 pounds of freight and no more; bring nothing but provisions, a few bed cloths, sending all the rest by ship; and start by the first or fifteenth of May, but not later."

"Mrs. Wilson writes much more at length than the General. She gives a detailed account of their mishaps and sufferings, on the latter part of the route. Three days before reaching the settlements, the Indians stole most of their mules, and the rest died thus forcing them to complete the trip on foot, having left and lost every thing but their clothing and a blanket apiece.

An express was sent to the nearest settlement for mules and having returned with six or seven, reported it impossible for the carriage to proceed further, and it was abandoned. Mrs. W. says:

"So we packed what few clothes we had in the carriage on one of the mules, and on the rest we mounted, on men's saddles, as far as we could; the first day we got out of the snow. Strange to tell, we that day passed over snow three feet deep, on the mountains, and by the time we got down it had disappeared, or had not fallen; but commenced raining and we traveled all day in rain, the animals often mired to the girths in the mud. That night—memorable night!—we sat up all night in our wet clothes, and next morning at day light started. I said if life was spared me I would reach the settlements. We had to walk all that day, as several of the mules had mired and could not be gotten out. So strange is the structure of the earth that we could scarcely keep from miring ourselves. This mirey ground is on high rock mountains, as well as in the valley of the Sacramento. It was amusing to see ladies that said they could never before wet their feet with cold water walking in this mud and mire, with their little children sewed up in blankets, and put across a mule, with their heads out; the mules plunging in mire, and jumping up and down rocks, where the road was just wide enough for a foot path, with precipices on each side, where I was really afraid to walk. We got to the settlements late that night, much fatigued, as you can well imagine."

Mrs. W. does not advise any female to undertake the trip, or settle in that country—as yet. She says, "we have been here three weeks, and have seen the sun shine but two whole days. I have not made the acquaintance of a single lady," and that she "would not take the trip again for all the gold in California."

Boarding! Boarding!!

Good people all, both great and small,
Attend unto this call,
I've just commenced a boarding house
Now open for you all.

I've just commenced a boarding house,
Or something in that line,
Hot coffee, tea and good strong beer
Is ready all the time.

With crackers, cake and good light bread,
My table shall be spread;
With good fat beef and turkey too,
My boarders shall be fed.

Now gentlemen give me a call,
Your bills shall not be heavy;
My name is Mack the Irishman,
I live down on the Levee.

I say to friends pray call and see,
Stop in as you pass by,
And if you do not like my house,
Just call on Mr. Dye.

Now Mr. Types if you will make
This public to the boys,
When politics shall call them out
You'll hear Mc. make a noise.

And if your paper will come out
And advocate my views,
I will subscribe and pay a mite
To circulate the news.

To California and Salt Lake Emigrants.

Argyles Ferry on the Nichtenabotna River.

THE undersigned would most respectfully inform the traveling community, and especially those emigrating to California, and the Great Salt Lake, by the Northern route, through St. Joseph, Linden, and thence crossing the Missouri at the various ferries above the Narrows of Nichnabotna, that he is prepared with two good boats, and skillful hands to cross all who may find it to their interest and safety to patronise him. He would further state for their information that he crossed at least four-fifths of the emigrants upon this route last spring without loss or damage to the amount of a dime. It was then, as it is likely to be this spring the only practicable point of crossing on the Nichnabotna. Emigrants who design taking the North side of Platte River, and consequently crossing the Missouri above its mouth, will find a good Bluff road directly from this point to the Kanesville and other Ferries above or below the mouth of the Platte. And those who may determine to cross the Missouri at Old Fort Kearney or between that point and the Narrows, may be assured that the road from Argyles Ferry, one-fourth of which is a good Bluff route, is the best and dryest at any season of the year. POETRY.

All for the Best.

All's for the best; be sanguine and cheerful,
Trouble and sorrow are friends in disguise;
Nothing but folly goes faithless and fearful;
Courage forever is happy and wise;
All for the best—if a man would but know it;
Providence wishes us all to be blest;
This is no dream of the pundit or poet;
Heaven is gracious, and—all's for the best.

All for the best! set this on your standard,
Soldier of sadness, or pilgrim of love,
Who to the shores of despair may have wandered,
Away, wearied swallows, or heart-striken dove;
All for the best! be a man but confiding,
Providence tenderly governs the rest,
And the frail bark of his creature is guiding,
Wisely and warily—all's for the best.

All for the best—then fling away terrors,
Meet all your fears and your foes in the van,
And in the midst of your dangers or errors
Trust like a child, while you strive like a man;
All's for the best—unbiased, undoubted,
Providence reigns from the East to the West,
And by both wisdom and mercy surrounded,
Hope and be happy that—all's for the best.

MISCELLANY.

Some one sends the following to the Des Moine Gazette as original. We have seen it going the rounds of the papers six or eight years.—[Iowa Republican.

A Dangerous Fellow to be at Large.

There is a terrible fellow somewhere down east, or somewhere else, who ought not to be allowed to run at large. He threatens to play the very deuce break things all in consequence of a faithless gal, who has broken her troth with him and married some one else. If he should put his threats into execution, the Lord have mercy on us. Hear him:

"I'll grasp the loud thunder,
And with lightning I'll play,
I'll rend the earth asunder,
And kick it away!"

Now, that's attempting considerable for one man; however, if he is willing to assume the responsibility and pay damages, why, let him smash away, we're not afraid. He next says:

"the rainbow I'll straddle,
And ride to the moon;
On the Ocean I'll paddle,
In the bowl of a spoon."

Well, that won't hurt anybody. Go ahead, old chap: we like to encourage a laudable spirit of adventure.

"I'll set fire to the fountain,
And swallow up the rill,
I'll eat up the mountain,
And be hungry still."

Good gracious! what a destructive and voracious animal he is! Is there no way to appease his wrath and stay his stomach? Must we suffer this, just because his gal gave him the mitten, and took a notion to another? No never!—Down with him, we say, if he continues to conduct himself in this extravagant way.

"The rain shall fall upward,
The smoke shall tumble down,
I'll dye the grass purple,
And paint the sky brown."

Hear that! A pretty world this would be then! We might as well live in an old boot with a dirty sole for the earth beneath, and brown upper leather for the heavens above.

"The sun I'll put out,
With the whirlwind I'll play;
Turn day into night,
And sleep it away."

There is no doubt if he cuts that caper, the sun will feel as much put out about it as we shall. We leave it to the whirlwind to say whether they are to be trifled with or not. And as for his turning day into night and sleeping it away, we would just as soon he would do that as not, that is if he can. But hear him again:

"I'll flog the young earthquake,
The weather I'll physic,
Volcanoes I'll strangle,
Or choke them with phthisic."

Oh, ho! for shame now! He dare not clinch with the old earthquake, and so he threatens to flog a young one, and that of the neuter gender. Oh, you outrageous fellow why don't you take one of your size? And then he says!

"The moon I will smother
With nightmare and woe,
For sport, at each other,
The stars I will throw."

Serves 'em right—they have no business to be out when they might be in bed.

The rocks shall be preachers,
The trees do the singing,
The clouds shall be the teachers,
And the comets go spreeing."

Well, that's all right enough, except getting the comets on a spree—we don't like that pretty much. Our hero concludes as follows:

"I'll tie up the winds
In a bundle together,
And tickle their ribs
With a monstrous feather."

Oh, cracky! now he's done it. We did not think it in the gizzard of any man to do half so much. Really we think that such a desperate fellow ought to be caught and put into jail for a half a week and safely guarded by one flea, two mosquitoes and a great woodlouse.

The Present Age.

The present age has been denominated a "money getting age," an age in which men are more devoted to riches than to reason and philosophy. Hence some moralists pronounce it an age of "Selfishness;" while yet others have called it an age of "Practicality," as distinguished from that age when men worshiped the beautiful and the lovely, to the neglect of the more substantial elements of practical usefulness.

This much is true. The present is an age in which men think and act for themselves. He who flourishes, builds himself—and is the treasurer of the rewards of his toils—his own industry. Hence there is a strong and powerful motive weighing upon every mind endowed with any tolerable share of ambition, to make a forward march in whatever enterprise he may engage. Although the customs, fashions, and stale practicalities of the present age, may be regarded as objectionable in a certain sense, as tending to decoy public attention away from the pursuits of science and philosophy, to offer up its more fervent devotions to the God of wealth; yet we think we can clearly discern in the wonder-working influences of the present generation, powerful and irresistible motives to active diligence and industry in every practical science of the age, and in so much of philosophy as is made practically subservient to the wants and convenience of man in his schemes of invention, and in all the moving spheres of improvement. What shall we say then? Shall we condemn the spirit of the present age? No! But let us improve upon it; let us hold it in check, and if philosophy and science are forgotten or neglected in the race for riches, let us carry them forward, and bring them before the public mind, and claim for them that share of public attention, which shall comport with the lofty bearing and influence which they control over men and manners in the social, civil, and domestic circles of society, notwithstanding the many objectionable features and unfavorable inclinations in the spirit of the present age. Yet it is probable that we can point to no era in the world's history, where the principles of progress, and the spirit of enterprise, and rigid, constant perseverance, harmonized better, or were more beautifully exemplified, than at present. Although we charge upon the present the weighty objection of being the age of practicalities, yet, they are practicalities of a civilized kind, borrowed from philosophy, science and religion—the power and influence of which is spread out on the wings of the wind, and wafted to every land, and over every sea on the face of the earth.—[Princeton Herald.

The Boston Transcript has the following laughable article on the subject of Female Sufferings:

"Imagine a whig husband and a democratic wife, a free-soil uncle and a hunker aunt, a liberty party cousin, a colonizationist nephew, a slaveholding niece, and three blooming daughters, who have gone over, bodies and bustle, to the unterrified democracy, and, for the first time in their lives, will vote in pink muslin frocks at the next election — imagine this group gathered around the same table, at tea and muffins; grace by Mr. Garrison, and Abby looking in at the window! How long would a well built house probably stand, divided thus against itself!

The influence of women will be clearly exhibited in joint committees of both sexes on the subject of the Union. By the influence of our Northern women, some of most violent and rantankerous of the Southern chivalry may be tamed, and taught to travel as pleasantly as a pig in a string. Miss Frizzle said, the other day, that the Hon. ——was a very great man, and nobody denied it; but she "shouldn't be the leastest mite afraid on him upon a committee on the state of the Union." Mrs. Ro'locks said she should like, for once in her life, to be in a committee of the whole."

Matrimonial Measure.—Two Polkas make one Flirtation.

Three Flirtations make one squeeze of the Hand.

Four squeezes make one Kiss.

Five Kisses make one Moonlight Meeting.

Two Moonlight Meetings make one Wedding.

Two Weddings make Four Fools.

What do the Four Fools make? Don't all speak at once!

The three most difficult things are, to keep a secret, to forget an injury, and to make good use of one's leisure.

Good Times for Printers in California.—I find here our friend Jesse H. Giles, formerly of the N. Y. Tribune, is comfortably established as editor and publisher of the Placer Times. This little paper, which you have probably received before this, takes in from $1,000 to $2,000 weekly, in jobs and advertising.—Bayard Taylor.

California Millionaire Printer.—The Sun says: "We learn verbally from a young man who returned in the Lexington, that Mr. Benjamin F. Foster, formerly a compositor in the New York Sun Office, has accumulated about thirty thousand dollars in two years."

Infallible Remedy.—The following "cure for the gout" is taken from an old work:

1. The patient must pick a handkerchief from the pocket of a maid of fifty years, who never had a wish to change her condition.
2. He must wash it in an honest miller's pond.
3. He must dry it on the hedge of a parson who was never covetous.
4. He must send it to the shop of a doctor who never killed a patient.
5. He must mark it with the ink of lawyer who never cheated a client.
6. Apply it to the part effected, and a cure will speedily follow.

"Intemperance," was the answer to the Acrostical Enigma in our last number.

Answer to the Charade in our last was "Penknife."

For the Frontier Guardian.

Charade.

My 1, 2, 3, you will bear in mind,
Is a numeral adjective of the cardinal kind,
My 3, 4, 5, is a kind of snare,
That Christ with his kingdom did compare.
My first and last together combined,
Is a position or opinion defined.
Five letters in all compose my name;
Which forward and backward still read the same.
Answer next number. CHARLIE.

STOVES! STOVES!!

MR. DUSTIN AMY, of this town, would respectfully notify the citizens of this county, and particularly that portion of them that expect to emigrate to the Salt Lake, that he intends to have, by the first boat this spring, a heavy and well selected assortment of Cast Iron Cooking Stoves, which he proposes to sell on very favorable terms for ready cash.

As Mr. A. is a tinner by trade, he will fit up the stoves with furniture according to order, and on the shortest notice. He keeps constantly on hand a good assortment of tin ware, and a good supply of all vessels usually called for by Emigrants. He has secured sufficient help to execute almost any job that may be required in his line on very short notice. The experience that he has had in traveling in the West, and also in fitting out emigrants for the last two or three years to journey over the Plains from this place, enable him to anticipate, correctly, the present wants of emigrants; and he has and will, therefore, prepare his stock and articles for sale to suit this frontier Market.

Kanesville, Feb. 20, 1850.—3m

For Sale at a Bargain.

NEARLY opposite the post office fronting the street one house seventeen feet long fourteen wide, and a small shop twelve feet by fifteen, which would suit a small family, and in the rear of said buildings one stable sixteen feet by fourteen also a good yard with half an acre of land attached.

Solemn truth from the Hawk-Eye.

The following from the Burlington Hawk-Eye, of March 14, is worthy to be read by every person on earth, and to be engraved with an iron pen upon every American heart. The nation once split asunder, the halves are more easily split than the whole; and then an open door for every ambitious aspirant, until the demon of division has cut asunder every political cord, and descends, even to the domestic circle.

Where then is security? Whither shall we fly for refuge? May not the invisible Spirit of Jehovah have influenced some persons to timely fly to the Valleys of the mountains for safety, in view of the impending storm? May not the hand of the Almighty have grasped wicked men in Illinois, as of old, and driven the Saints away in time to escape a more desolating scourge? May not the blood of martyrs unavenged, have secretly weakened the cords of union? While we deplore the death of martyrs in the comparative degree, we deplore the sad and gloomy consequences that must inevitably follow in the superlative degree. But all is right. A wise Providence controls the destinies of men, and nations are subject to His will. Heaven strengthen every wise head and every patriotic heart in the Government of our nation, and let Gods people go and worship him in the wilderness, and offer a sacrifice to Him there as they like, and give them a government that they may be protected therein, "and your petitioners as in duty bound will ever pray."

The Union—What is it worth!

There are ties connecting man with man, and nation with nation, which cannot be severed without an inevitably fatal result. Their origin may be involved in obscurity, their nature may be undefinable or unknown, but we feel that they are interwoven with our very vitality, and, if once destroyed, the life of life will be lost forever. The social fabric may not be absolutely perfect in its proportions, there may be here and there some slight defect in its materials; but he who would destroy it for such seasons would commit a worse than suicidal act. Societies and nations are not, and cannot be, created in a day. They are the slow growth of time, the gradual production of progressing ages. The oak requires centuries to bring it to maturity—but it may be blasted in a moment. Its growth cannot be hastened, but its majestic and beautiful proportions, in an instant, may be converted into deformity. It is thus with societies. From small beginnings, they may ripen into large, powerful, populous and prosperous states. From barbarism, they may gradually emerge into a civilized and enlightened condition, and art and science may lend their bounteous assistance, to multiply the blessings they at first possessed a thousand fold. Peace and plenty may be abundantly enjoyed, and all may be as blissful as Eden in its prime. Yet, how tedious is the progress—how age after age creeps in and out with apparently laggard steps, ere all be accomplished. He who sees the beginning, will never see the end; and he who perceives the full maturity, will almost doubt that there was ever a period when the social fabric was less beautiful, or less enduring than it then seems. Its decay will appear improbable or impossible, even when the foundations are already undermined, and its walls tottering to their fall. It has ever been thus. Men will not learn from the experience of Time. They can perceive the feebleness of others, but never feel their own. They can prophecy the ruin of their neighbors, but they do not believe they are themselves rapidly following in the same path. Though their steps become feeble, and they often stumble by the way, they deem it but a momentary weakness, and not the consequence of constitutional infirmity. They amuse themselves with trifles until they plunge into a gulf of irrevocable ruin, astonished and dismayed, when they imagine they are yet distant from it. As they never perceive the impending danger, so they make no exertion to avoid it, until paralyzed by the certainty that every attempt would be useless and but accelerate their fall.

Will it be thus with us? shall we add one more to the number of nations whose folly, supineness, or temerity, has proved the source of their own destruction? We hope not! the thought is pregnant with horrible forebodings. Yet the times are portentious with evil, and the heart of the patriot sinks within him, as he contemplates the probable future. Already, the sound of discord is heard in our midst. Already the cry of disunion has been sounded, and the echo has penetrated every portion of our wide domain. Anarchy swells the discordant note, and exults that he may once again resume his sceptre.

Have we counted the cost of disunion? have we contemplated the results which must follow the dismemberment of our confederacy, and are we prepared to meet them as men should ever encounter whatever is inevitable, with a bold heart and a serene countenance? It is to be presumed that we have not; for the consequences are so appalling, and the inducements so trifling, that the one could never account for the other, unless upon the idea that our citizens are mad with rage, or impotent through folly. Death may be preferable to dishonor—destruction to disgrace; but when both may be avoided with facility, it is insanity to seek them. Until we are assured that the Union can no longer possibly be preserved, the man who advocates or favors a disruption of a people which must be one or nothing, is both a traitor and a fool. A traitor, because he would destroy the state—a fool, because, by so doing, he must inevitably destroy himself in the end. However complicated a machine may be, it may be perfectly adapted to its purpose while united in accordance with its design—separate it, and it is worthless.

What, then, is the Union worth? We can only compute its value, by reflecting upon the consequences of a separation of its now harmonious parts. In proportion as this will be disastrous, by so much must the estimate be increased. If without union, we may be as prosperous, as peaceful, and as happy as we now are, as free from danger from without and within, then the Union is valueless, and those who conceived it and perfected it, labored in vain. They were but acts of folly, and deserve reprobation instead of thanks; contempt instead of esteem. But they have borne the character of wise men, and hitherto the people have unanimously joined in the approval of their sagacity, and admiration of their foresseing prudence. The Union is worth something, then—it has some value, or the whole world is deceived. We have a foundation to begin upon, unless we may presume that the civilized world has chosen to approve what in reality deserved its censure.

But this is not all. Our experience confirms its opinion. Since the union, our growth, our prosperity, and the measure of our national felicity, have all, not only maintained their former standard, but their increase has been so far beyond all parallel, that other nations have looked on with wonder and astonishment, and we, who at one time only courted their neglect and forgetfulness, now neither fear their anger nor dread their hatred. Then they scorned—but now they envy us. Then we were too weak to require notice—now our strength elicits their respect. Then, we were but as a worm in the dust—now, our flight is toward the sun, and the lion himself trembles, lest we should tear out his eyes, and render him powerless as a lamb. All this has followed the Union, and it has been the direct consequence of the Union. Without it, we should still have been feeble and despised as we were then. Without it, our greatness would have been but a day-dream, our prosperity but the fancy of a school boy. Under the most favorable auspices, no one can imagine that our condition would now have been much better than when the Union was consummated.

But we are now strong, and are able to part without danger, it may be said. We have grown fat upon the fullness of the land, our numbers have greatly increased—we may seperate, and each section will be able to take care of itself! It is not so. Better for us, had we never been bound together, than now to attempt to live asunder. There is no hatred like that of those who have once been friends. No nations are such inveterate enemies as those that were at one time subject to the same law and the same government. What wars have ever been so malignant in their results as the Peloponnesian, in Greece; the wars among the successors of Alexander; of the different parts of the Roman Empire with each other; of ancient Gaul and Germany; the innumerable wars in modern Italy; the wars between France and England; and the mutual hatred the people of those latter countries still entertain for each other; and what other reason can be given for the dislike so general in our country, for the Father-land from which we yet boast that we are descended? In every one of these instances—and they might be greatly multiplied—there was at one period an intimate connection; the wars were the result of that connection, and ended only with their complete ruin, or the establishment of despotic power. Of all sanguinary contests, those of a fratricidal nature has ever been the most bloody, cruel and oppressive, during their continuance, and the most terrible in their consequences. It is the nature of man. He can endure the rule of a superior, but not of one who has been his equal. For him who has ever been an enemy, he may entertain some magnanimous feelings. When he meets his brother in mortal combat, it is with the rage of a maniac, and the malignity of a fiend. The very nature of their connection forbids that it should be otherwise. His every feeling must have been outraged—all the sensibilities of the man must have been tortured to their utmost fibre, before he would engage in such a contest. When he does, it is alike terrible to the victor and the vanquished, for remorse is worse than death, and though the one be slain, the other is dead, though he still lives. His better part is destroyed, and drags after it the rest.

We may form several distinct nations, and each of them will be respectable, we are told. It is a most deplorable mistake. When the present Union is dissolved, no other that may be established, will continue in existence long enough to be known by name through the world. There will be nothing to bind any two States together. All the sweet memories of the Past—the infant struggle for life in the primeval wilderness; the long contest with the merciless Indian; the wars with the French and the Spaniard; all the thickly thronging recollections of our sufferings, toils, and victories in the Revolutionary struggle, when we stood shoulder to shoulder, and together warred against the power of the oppressor; the glories of the succeeding war with England—all these must be forgotten; these links must be destroyed, for, with the union, all their freshness, beauty, and attractiveness will forever depart. If we remember them, it will be but to acknowledge that they were worthless, that the counsels of the wise, the wealth of the people, and the blood of the brave, were at once united and exhausted to secure what, after all, has been found but a deformed and monstrous abortion. It will be no source of delight, to reflect upon these things, for we must either be ashamed of ourselves, or of our fathers. If they were wise, we would have trampled upon their wisdom; if they were but the instruments of folly, we shall never more respect their memory. In the one case they deserve to be forgotten; in the others, their virtues will only make us the more painfully conscious of the degeneracy of their sons. The Past, then, will supply no link by which our citizens may be bound together. It will be entirely lost to us, or but furnish fuel to feed the flame of Discord and Anarhey which will blaze with a fitful light over the whole country. And can any man estimate the value of the Past to a people? can he tell how much we already owe to it, or what we would have been but for the great truths which have given us life and energy, and whose secret origin is hidden in the remotest antiquity? The form of man will avail us little, unless we be animated by the noble spirit of manhood. If we choose to raze out the written tablets of faith, freedom, and patriotism, which have been handed down to us by our ancestors, all that they did, will but serve to embitter the cup from which we shall thereafter drink. We may live but our life will be more "tedious than a twice told tale, vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man."

But interest—the mutual advantage of the several sections, will be sufficient to unite them! The several great natural divisions will find it necessary to form an indissoluble union, and this necessity will be understood and acted upon! But such ideas are worse than futile; they are most delusive and dangerous, because they are absolutely false. Can such principles be our rule and guide then, when they are utterly repudiated now, under influences incomparably more powerful. Is it not the interest of every State in the Union, to maintain that Union under all circumstances? Can nature assign us better boundaries? Do we not all speak one language? Have we not the same ancestry, the same education, the same laws, the same form of government? Is there a more intimate connection between New York and Pennsylvania, than between either and Louisiana? Is it not probable that so far as interest is concerned, New York and Louisiana, are united with bonds twice as strong as New York and Pennsylvania, though the two latter joined each other, and the former are seperated by almost a continent? If the Union cannot now be preserved, after we have lived under it, and experienced its innumerable benefits, during sixty years, how can we dare to anticipate that other confederacies will be established for which no possible motive can be assigned?—Would Iowa unite with Illinois, or with Missouri? or why should she prefer either to Massachusetts or Ohio? Why should she unite with any? Can any man tell? Our citizens are from every State, we have business connextions with every State, and perhaps those may be equally influential. If the Union be dissolved, why should we not maintain a seperate and independent condition? We are too weak, some one may say. By whom are we to be assailed—what foreign foe have we to fear?—Are we to dread our sister States? There are none besides from which to apprehend danger. We are in the middle of the continent, and before any other power could make an assault upon us, it must cross the soil of many of the other States. It could not reach us without the connivance or assistance of those who are now our brothers. The only necessity for another Union would arise out of our mutual fears, jealousies, and animosities. But which out of all the sisterhood are we most likely to find or make a difficulty with, those which border upon us, or those which lie at a distance? The answer is obvious. It would be difficult to disagree with Maine, it would easily happen with Illinois or Wisconsin. We should then be compelled to arm ourselves against each other, or, admitting that new confederacies were established, each would be compelled to prepare to repel all aggressions from foreign powers, as well as the other confederacies. Each would have its seperate laws, its peculiar tariffs, its distinct officers, its army and navy, and a thousand other establishments, at an immense sacrifice of national wealth; and innumerable vexations, now unknown, would naturally result from this novel condition of things.

It is impossible to suppose that there would ever be a moment's peace after this Union is dissolved. It can never be accomplished without war; and when the first drop shall be spilled, it will be the fount from which rivers will unceasingly flow. It will be without parrallel in the world's history. A new page will be written in the annuls of Time, and all its characters will be of blood. The end will be the usurpation of a military chieftain, and the establishment of despotic power. It requires no spirit of prophecy to perceive this. It is a law of necessity, and nature. Men may blindly hope otherwise, but, if we have not public virtue enough to perpetuate the Union, we may be sure that we have not enough, without it, to maintain our liberty long. If we have not a little forbearance now, when so little will secure to us such inestimable good, with what consistency can we hope for more, when so much will be requisite for our safety? If we have no charity for our brother can we have any for our foe? If we disagree when living under the same roof-tree, shall we be more friendly when occupying new positions, and all our interests are adverse?

Other nations have had their rise and fall, their vigorous youth and their premature decay, and it may be possible that we are destined to run the same career. Yet it may truly be said that none has ever fallen, but through its own folly or madness. We have no cause to dread any assaults from without; it is the secret and insidious foe that we must guard against, the viper that that nestles in our bosom, and is warmed into vigor by the breast that is destined to receive from it its fatal wound.

"The young disease that must subdue at length, Grows with our growth and strengthens with our strength,"

until, when all seems fair and beautiful around us, and no sign of impending danger is perceived, a deadly paralysis seizes upon us, and we sink at once into the grave. The foul shaver of malignant enmity may fall upon, but cannot injure us, unless it mingle with our blood, and pervade the whole system. No one can desire to apply the poison to our country, unless he be an enemy; and, if he be a citizen, he must also be a traitor. He who would destroy the fair fabric which has sheltered him from every storm, and borne the blast of many a tempest, deserves to be tossed into the flames he has kindled, without pity and without remorse. He has the nature of a malignant spirit, though he wear the form of man. And he who fails to devote every energy to the preservation of the State and the Union, cannot be entitled to its protection.

THE UNION IS ABOVE ALL PRICE—It is the PALLADIUM which marks the term of our existence, and the measure of our felicity. It secures to us, peace, plenty prosperity and glory. If it be perpetuated, we shall shine as the Sun among nations; destroy it, and we become a by-word and reproach. If we stand by it and support it, we shall defend what is far more important and essentil to the well-being of ourselves and mankind, than all else besides. If a breach be made, it will prove as a river of water upon the flame which yet lights the world from the altar of American Liberty. Intestine commotion and divided counsels, will soon hurry us into chaotic confusion, and Despotism will again rear its head, and laugh at the calamity it has already predicted. The hopes of men will be forever destroyed, and the last resource of freedom will have been exhausted. Let us not, then, yield the rich jewel we possess, to those who would wrest it from us by the fear of power or the seductions of flattery. It is ours, and it is our duty to preserve it. Let us not be angry with our neighbors, in the North or South, though they chance to differ from us. If it be necessary, we must make a sacrifice to appease the animosty of those who have been aroused into rage without what we think a sufficient cause. But, at all hazards, let us preserve the Union. If blood must be spilled, let it be in defence of the Union, and our cause will then be a righteous one. "LIBERTY AND UNION, ONE AND INSEPARABLE, NOW AND FOREVER," should be our motto, and what we may do in support of it, the World, the Future, and our Consciences will ever approve.

MAGIC OF A WORD.—Mother is a word to which every bosom responds. It finds its way to our hearts in our youth, and retains its hold upon us in our age. If fathers are looked up for precept, principle, and example, mothers are relied on for tenderness and enduring affection. Fathers are strongholds of safety; mothers are sources of love and consolation. The word mother is as a soft, balmy breeze, coming up from the valley, sweet, soothing and grateful; cooling the fevered brow, calming the ruffled spirit, and tranquilizing the agitated heart. What voice was ever like the agitated soft voice of a mother?

WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.—The original manuscript of Washington's Farewell Address was sold by auction in Philadelphia. It was started at $500, and run up to $2,200, at which price it was taken by the Rev. Dr. Boardman, who purchased it for a gentleman at a distance.

It is stated that the rents of Col. Fremonts property, at San Francisco, amounts to $40,000 per annum.

These are the Honorable Men of the Earth.

BY PICCIOLA.

Say? Where can you find the great, noble and brave,
The statesman, the scholar, the wise and the grave,
The social man's smile, at his own pleasant hearth?
You'll find them 'mong "Honorable men of the earth."

Oh where? find the Patriot's whole souled fire;
The philanthropists usefulness apart from wild ire;
The heart of compassion in time of great dearth?
Oh yes! with the "Honorable men of the earth."

Ah where! are the lov'd, of my youth's happy days;
Whose magical voice, mental thought could then raise,
Yes, from things here below; of but little worth?
Oh! they were 'mong "Honorable men of the earth."

Where! where! are the friends who would hover around,
To shield me from harm, when on slippery ground;
That protected my years since ere I had birth?
I tell you! the "Honorable men of the earth."

And where are the friends of Saints who have died;
In persecution's hot battle, were found at their side;
When merciless demon's, their fury pour'd forth?
Saints' friends are the "Honorable men of the earth."

Ah where? find the man, who'll give each one his due;
No matter his creed, he will deal by him true;
With outstreched hand, and a smile beaming forth?
You'll find him an "Honorable man of the earth.

Oh the Saint's hearts rejoice, when such like they meet;
And him as a brother, they silently greet;
From the heart goes a prayer, in eye there's mirth
For the love! Oh they love! such men of the earth.

In God's blessed word, are they called by this name;
And as such I delight to sing of their fame;
Angels will gather e'er the days of great wrath;
The "Honest,"—the "Honorable men of the earth."

Kanesville, April 15, 1850.

Poverty.

Poverty is, certainly, no disgrace; though the cause which has led to it, may be disgraceful. That it is vastly inconvenient, we suppose there are persons, not a few, can testify.

Poverty enervates the mind. We know, there are instances in which the poor in this world's goods—but rich in intellect—have thrown off beautiful corusecations, completely throwing into the shade minds of lesser light. But those are only "here and there" cases—remarkable phenomena. Poverty, as a general thing, enervates the mind; unfits it for practical application.

But Poverty does more. It oft-times turns the milk of human kindness into gall; jaundices the eye; debases the passions. By its griping hand, the virtuous and the honest, have been changed into the vicious, and the dishonest. It has made him, who lately shuddered at profanity, take the name of God in vain. The hand which, not long before, trembled at the thought of even imitating another's name, has, at the importunities of proverty, forged that very name.

It was said lately by Col. Jame Monroe, a member of the New York Legislature, in a debate on certain resolutions in favor of the public lands, that no man need be poor in this country. We have heard more than one ass make similar remark. How preposterous the proposition is, must be apparent to every mind. You may call it a hyperbolical expression. Indeed, it is superlatively hyperbolical as it is ridiculous.

There are various reasons why some men must be poor. Some have not the ability of talent to cope with others. Some are too conscientious to the subterfuges, and impositions which others practice. Some have not the favorable circumstances of opportunity surrounding them, environ others.

That many are made poor, and kept poor, by their own pride, or vicious habits, we have no disposition to deny. But the proposition that no man need be poor, we hold to be positively false. The independent man is often fool enough to think that others may as well be as indepedent as he, notwithstanding they have not the same ability.

We have seen that poverty—as well as riches—has its temptations; and hence it becomes the duty of every one to place himself, and those dependent upon him for support, above the griping necessities of life. In this view, it is good for all who can, to lay by in store something for a "rainy day." Misfortune, in some one of her manifold guises, frequently paralizes the arm, when all looks bright ahead, and, by taking away the power to labor, starts the sufferer upon the barren road of poverty. Then it is there comes a "rainy day."

Let reason go before every enterprise, and counsel before every action."

The Domestic Relation.

We conceive of no more Heaven-like circle, than is embraced within the limits of a virtuous and happy family. There is nothing beneath the skies more ennobling to human nature than such a household—where mildness and virtue, go hand in hand together. Where a contented and cheerful spirit chases away the gloom of the world, and religion with her lessons of philosophy, softens and purifies the heart. Where the head of the family is recognised and respected as such—and the greatest happiness within the circle is derived from his approving smile. Where the low sweet voice of Woman is seldom heard but in accents of gentleness and love, and the gentle name of Mother is never uttered unassociated with some endearing epithet. Such a family can only be collected together under the influences of a happy marriage—an union of hearts as well as hands—a tie consecrated by pure and chaste affection—an engagement formed on earth, but sanctioned in Heaven. On such an union, the angels who dwell in the bright abodes of the blest, must downward turn their spiritual eyes, and while they gaze with looks of interest and love, delight in and rejoice over the same.

Watt,

THE INVENTOR OF THE STEAM ENGINE.

A young man, wanting to sell spectacles in London, petitions the Corporation to allow him to open a little shop, without paying the fees of freedom, and he is refused. He goes to Glasgow, and the corporation refuse him there. He makes acquaintance with some members of the university, who find him very intelligent, and permit him to open his shop within their walls. He does not sell spectacles and magic lanterns enough to occupy all his time; he occupies himself at intervals in taking asunder and re-making all the machines he can come at. He finds there are books on mechanics written in foreign languages; he borrows a dictionary, and learns those languages to read those books. The university people wonder at him, and are fond of dropping into his little room in the evenings, to tell him what they are doing, and to look at the queer instruments he constructs. A machine in the university collection wants repairing, and he is employed. He makes it a new machine. The steam-engine is constructed; and the giant mind of Watt stands out before the world—the author of the industrial supremacy of this country, the herald of a new force of civilization. But was Watt educated? Where was he educated? At his own workshop, and in the best manner. Watt learned Latin when he wanted it for his business. He learned French and German; but these things were tools, not ends. He used them to promote his engineering plans, as he used laths and levers.—[Sir R. Kane.

A Hoosier Attorney on Capital Punishment.

The following oration was delivered some where in Wisconsin, by one of the profession, who would seem to have quite an aversion to capital punishment:

"May it please your Lordship and Gentlemen of the Jury—The case is as clear as ice and as sharp to the doin' as "no" from your sweetheart. The Scripture saith, "Thou shalt not kill;" now if you hang my client, you transgress the command as slick as grease and as plump as an egg in a loafer's face—Gentlemen, murder is murder—committed by twelve jurymen, on by an humble individual like my client. Gentlemen, I do not deny the fact of my client having killed a man, but is that any reason why you should do so? No such thing, Gentlemen. You may bring the prisoner in guilty—the hangman may do his duty—but will that exonerate you? No such thing. In that case you will be murderers! who is prepared among you for the brand of Cain to be stamped on his brow to-day? Who freemen, who—in this land of liberty and light?

Gentlemen, I will pledge my word not one of you has a bowie knife or a pistol in his pocket; No, Gentlemen; your pockets are odoriferous with the perfumes of cigar cases and tobacco; you can smoke the tobacco of rectitude in the pipe of peaceful conscience! but hang my unfortunate client and the scaly aligators of remorse will gallop through the internal principles of animal vertebrae and your anatomical construction is turned into a railroad for the grim and gory goblins of despair. Gentlemen beware of committing murder! Beware, I say, Remember the man who attempted to steady the ark, and trembled. Gentlemen, I adjure you by the American Eagle, that whipped the game cock of creation, and now sits a roosting on the magnetic telegraph of Time's illustrious transmigation, to do no murder! and lastly, gentlemen, if you ever expect to wear longtailed coats—if you ever expect to wear boots made of the free hide of the Rocky Mountain buffalo—and, to sum up all, if you ever expect to be anything but a set of sneaking, loafing, rascally, cutthroated, braided, smallends of humanity, whittled down to indistinctability, acquit my client and save your country."

The prisoner was acquitted.

The reading of a good and well-conducted newspaper, even for the short space of one quarter of a year, brings more sound instruction, and leaves a deeper impression than would be acquired, probably, at the best school in twelve months. Talk to the members of a family who read the papers, and compare their information and intelligence with those who do not. The difference is beyond comparison.

THE WIFE.—A writer beautifully remarks that a man's wife is the representative of his maker. Misfortune, and even crime, set up no barriers between her and her husband. While his wife lives, he will have one friend on earth who will not listen when he is slandered, who will not desert him when he suffers, who will sooth him in his sorrow, and speak to him of hopes when he is ready to despair. Her affection knows no ebbing tide. It flows on from a pure fountain, and speaks happiness through a vale of tears, and ceases only at the ocean of eternity.

He that arms his intent with virtue is invincible.

RIVER IN THE DESERT.—According to Major Emory, it is no fiction of the imagination, but a sober fact, that a river-spring broke out last summer in the desert country, crossing the usual route to California—a river forty feet wide, waist deep, of delicious water, such, it may be, as sprung of old from the rock, to cheer the children of Israel when on the long march to their promised land. Previously to the breaking out of this river, the emigrants suffered dreadfully with thirst. "Whence it comes, or whether it goes," writes Major Emory to the government, "is a matter yet to be determined."

Patience is a power in man, warning him to reign his spirit.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL, 17, 1850.

William Smith.

This notorious profligate has published the following article over his own signature. He is surrounded by about a dozen men who are ready to manufacture evidence at his bidding to suit any emergency to which he may be driven. The increasing prosperity of our Church, stings him so keenly that he finds it necessary to resort to Evidence of home manufactory to check our progress. It is all right. By the time he publishes a little more against the Saints on the strength of manufactured evidence,—particularly things like the following, which every western man knows to be false, he will open the eyes of every person, and show himself in his true light; a poor degraded, miserable, debauched man. "The wrath of man shall praise the Lord, and the remainder of wrath He will restrain." The Saints shall see and acknowledge that his exertions against Deseret, shall turn to their good, and to his condemnation. Ye wise men at Washington City, mark what we have said; and when it comes to pass, come out to Deseret and see us if you can. We will not butcher you, if you will come, but give you our best "dodger," and "smoke the pipe with you." If this should not be convenient for you, remain in Washington City when our words come to pass if you can. We are accused of burning the Temple at Nauvoo, by this notorious Bill Smith, the accuser of the brethren, when we were many hundred miles from it at the time. But it is all right We give place to his article:

I am in possession of the evidence that bands of these Salt Lake Mormons, armed, dressed and painted—having the appearance of Indians—are stationed on the way to California and Oregon, for the purpose of robbing the emigrants. Many murders have already been committed by these demons in human shape, which have been published to the world and attributed to the Indians.

The people at the Salt Lake govern their church by a secret lodge of 50 men. It is in this lodge that Brigham Young is crowned as a king, and is there seated upon a throne prepared for him.

WILLIAM SMITH.

This said William Smith is in possession of no such evidence as he claims. We hold ourself in law and in equity bound to pay him five hundred dollars, on his producing good and substantial evidence that the Salt Lake Mormons are robbing, plundering and murdering emigrants in the garb of Indians; and we will do the same also, if he can prove that the Mormons at Salt Lake are governed by a secret lodge of fifty men; or if he can prove that Brigham Young is crowned King in any such lodge, or if he is crowned king at all. The testimony of his crime steeped clan will not be admitted in this case at all; though we challenge him to publish that evidence, let it come from what quarter it may, that the Mormons are robbing emigrants. Bill Smith has followed lying so long, that if a truth should happen to get into his mouth, through mistake, he would let it drop as "quick as a dog would a hot potatoe." It was not the phosphorus that induced him to leave Strang's Church. Phosphorus is just as good Holy Ghost as he wants if, in the light of that, he can only gratify his sordid ambition to gain money and power without the use of honorable means. He will not find everything to his liking, even in Texas, for any great length of time. Something will be out of joint with him there very soon if he goes at all.

The Guardian.

Who among the California Emigrants wish to subscribe for this paper for three, six, nine or twelve months, and send the same back to their families or friends? We shall have expresses running back and forward on your track during the season, and we shall seize with eagerness, all the information of interest we get concerning you, and publish the same at as early a date as possible.

Persons who receive this number sent back to them by a passing friend, may desire to subscribe for it by the year or for six months. They can do so if they wish, by complying with the terms; and we pledge ourselves to give all the important news concerning the luck and fortune of these emigrants on their journey, and after they get to the mines that we can possibly gather; and that too at the earliest period.

Washington Letter Writers.

These men's communications are not always to be relied on. They often write under excitement, believing they have the true knowledge of future legislation; but it more frequently turns out that they were in error. There is nothing definite yet taken place with regard to Deseret and New Mexico. It is the opinion of some correspondents that California will be admitted as a State, and that no Territorial Governments will be established. This may be so. California will doubtless be admitted as a State; but that no Territorial Governments will be established in Deseret and New Mexico, is by no means to be depended upon.

Pilot to the Salt Lake.

Mr. George R. Grant, of this town, offers his services, as pilot, for a company through to the Lake. Having been through to California and back, and having had much experience in the mountains, he feels confident that he can pioneer a company through with speed and safety; being conversant with the Indian character.

It is our belief that Mr. Grant is every way qualified for the trip, and he will go for a reasonable compensation. For his whereabouts, enquire at this office.

The Season.

It is now the 17th of April, and the weather has been very cold, and consequently vegetation very backward. Our country is full of Californians; and corn, hay and oats are extremely scarce and dear. Unless we get warm weather and grass soon, teams and stock in general, must suffer greatly.

We would advise those Californians who have their grain laid in to last them until grass shall grow, to cross the river as early as possible, and and proceed on their journey. They may get as far as Fort Laramie before their grain will be exhausted; and by the time they get that distance, they will be apt to find grass if it is ever coming. Whereas, if they remain here until grass grows, they will have consumed their grain, and be five hundred miles behind the time, and under no better circumstances than they would be at Fort Laramie. Reason would dictate then, that every company that has grain, to push out, while the weather is dry and cold, the roads are good and streams are low; and with a dry and good road, a little grain will enable a team to make better progress, than much grass will when the rainy season sets in—the roads muddy and streams high. Moreover when grass shall fairly start, how many teams will be thronging all our ferries? And what a great number must there be detained contrary to their wishes, waiting for a chance to cross over.

Arise then, Californians, and put out while you have grain; and if you do not find it for the best, then never take our advice again.

If there was plenty of corn and hay to be had in the country, we would not advise you as we have. But you have nearly all the corn in your sacks, and your animals can have just as good a chance to pick roughness to fill themselves with while on the way, as they can have here, after the hay is all done. It is not because we want to get rid of you that we advise you thus; but the regard we have for your own interests, induces us to do it.

Seed Corn, &c.

Our farmers would do well to look in season to their seed corn. Remember last year! Be not deceived, neither sell yourselves too short because it bears a high price. But put the seed corn into the ground. When corn is worth from seventy-five cents to a dollar a bushel at your door, you have a rich gold mine on every one of your farms. Develope its richness by planting corn and by bringing it to maturity.

Remember too, that the extensive bottoms of the Missouri, and other smaller streams, waiving with the most luxuriant grass in the season thereof, are inexhaustible sources of wealth when the hay is worth five dollars per ton, as it now is. Who need be idle? And who that is well and able to labor, need be without the comforts and luxuries of life, or even without gold in his purse? No one.

Happy, and comparatively independent is he who who developes the riches of the soil of Pottawatamie County in the form of valuable crops to feed both man and beast. He shall never come to want, but abound in every lawful enjoyment. Let the ploughs be started with all the activity possible. Fear not the clouds nor the cold weather, but plant and sow in faith, and you shall reap with joy, and gather with thanksgiving and praise. Say not that you are going to the Valley and therefore have no time to plant or sow. Remember that he cannot be blest and prospered in going to the Valley unless he first sows and plants a liberal crop here this spring if he is in any way circumstanced to do it. Wander not abroad to seek employment to obtain the interest, and leave the principle concealed in the soil of your own homes. We want every body to go to the Valley, but not until they have put in a good crop. If you see not the propriety of this now, you will see it before you leave. Remember that you have never yet caught Br. Hyde in an error touching his counsel and advice in such matters, notwithstanding his impetuosity of which you are sometimes fearful.

Provisions are becoming scarce and dear in this Upper Country, and we would recommend our emigration to bring their supplies of provisions with them; particularly those who come by water.

The Stolen Mule.

J. T. alluded to in our last, has been to us personally and given every satisfaction that man on earth can give, that he is innocent of any crime or knowledge of taking the mule. He turned out and helped to hunt the mule as a good citizen should do, and thinks it very ungenerous to be charged as the thief, as the only reward for helping to find the animal.

If the mule was led or rode through his lot or yard in the night he cannot be responsible for it. He has proven that he could not have been where the mule was taken at the time he was taken; but many miles distant.

We are confident that J. T. has been wrongfully censured. Men should be particularly careful, and know pretty certainly that they are right before they charge another with a crime of this kind. A man's character and reputation are dear to him, and he is entitled to protection when innocent.

Mail for Salt Lake.

Mr. Thomas S. Williams, proposes to start from this town on the 25th inst., with the Mail for the Valley. He goes by express. Through in thirty days. Whoever wishes to write to their friends can do so at a cost of only one dime. All letters and papers destined for the Valley, should be delivered to the Postmaster as early as the evening of the 24th, in this place.

Stars.

Why have we received no stars of Millennial dawn for a long time? Have they passed under a cloud, or under some Postmaster's desk? Or has the Star Maker, Elder Pratt, ceased his work, and his creative genius become dormant? Or has an ill wind on the ocean blown them to a strange coast, or plunged them into the caverns of the deep?

Star of Millennium, shine on our nation,
Bright is thy glory, thou art a sure guide;
High be thy orbit and swift be thy motion,
Cloudless thy track o'er the storm beaten tide.

A Squall.

On thursday last, two California boys, we heard got to scuffling in the street rather carlessly about a canteen of liquor—whether seriously or otherwise we cannot say.

The Sheriff, on seeing it, thought proper to arrest them. They made some resistance, enough, at least, to test their strength and grit, and that also of the Sheriff. None of them seemed lacking for muscular power. After a little energetic exercise, the Sheriff took one man to jail; but a gold watch was given as bail, and the prisoner was liberated; he appeared the next day before the magistrate; "acknowledged the corn," and was fined five dollars and cost. Oh, whisky! Thou wert the cause of all this; and whisky sellers, these are some of the fruits of your soul saving ministrations. Do you not feel proud of your callings on beholding such precious fruits of your doings?

For the Guardian.

Mr. Editor: Amos Jackson, the person said to have invented a self-propelling saw-mill, residing near your town, must be a wicked impostor and deceiver. He is now gone to St. Louis on his saw mill business, and will most likely be arrested there for selling some counterfeit land-warrants in the State of Illinois. There has been a demand made by the Governor of Illinois, on the Governor of Missouri for the said Jackson. The Governor of Missouri has authorized his arrest and delivery to the authorities of Illinois, and a writ is issued, and I saw the men in St. Louis that were waiting for him, and conversed with them concerning this said Jackson. They showed me their papers and documents, which were verily according to the foregoing statements.

This said Jackson accompanied me down to St. Louis in the early part of winter, and he then told me that there was a charge against him in Illinois for some crime, and that he did not care to be seen by any one from Quincy. Yet he said that he was innocent, and had done no crime; but I am now convinced that he is just as great a villain as his abilities will allow him to be.

While in St. Louis he was apparently afraid of his shadow. He dare not step out of his room, only with the greatest caution, and appeared all the time as though he thought some one was after him with a "sharp stick."

I consider it due to the community and the public to let these facts be known.

Yours, sincerely,
FRIEND, TO JUSTICE.

The foregoing Statements are from a responsible source, and may be relied on. We are sorry that better men have suffered themselves, despite of the counsel of their friends, to become the tools of a wicked faction, whose acts must recoil with mortification upon their own heads. Will they now learn to be wise, or will they seize hold of the next horn of the beast that may appear. Will they go to and purge out the spirit of disaffection from their own bosoms, and expel it from the neighborhood where it has been cherished to their hurt? Or will they, like the dove, press the wing to the heart, forcing the needle to the very vitals in the hope of extracting the thorn. Time will determine!

Will some men enter a complaint against us in the Valley for not inviting them to preach in Kanesville? Most likely they will. But will they tell the reason? No! We will therefore give one reason in advance of them. It was because they were so zealous and spirited that their breath too plainly indicated the kind of spirit they were inspired with.

We will pay cash for a few hundred rails if brought soon.

"Forget me Not."

We would remind our friends who are somewhat in arrears for the Guardian, that our bills for a year's stock, are now due; and we must appeal to the people just at this time, when corn is worth one dollar per bushel, and flour four dollars per hundred, to make a little extra exertion for our special benefit, and hand in a few dimes.

For the Guardian.

Mr. Editor:

Having, through many inducements thought it our duty to say something in regard to our travels from our homes to the Bluffs; one reason above all others, has prompted of to speak in terms of the highest praise us the kind and courteous treatment we have received from the Mormons. From the fact of our having, previous to this time, had a most unfavorable opinion of these people, it was our intention, at first, not to go where they were, lest we should get into difficulties that we did not wish to encounter; and suffice it to say: We were afraid lest our property might pay the forfeit. For the benefit of the many whose fears were like ours, and particularly our brother Californians, that we strongly recommend the northern route from Illinois, to Kanesville, or Council Bluffs, a most desirable route in consequence of the high and beautiful road, and the chance of obtaining everything that a Californian may want; and when he arrives at Kanesville, he will there find stores well filled with every thing that is necessary for a fitout across the plains; and that too, as cheap as can be found in any store on the Missouri river, and cheaper than at any in Illinois

Yours, very respectfully,

Curiosity.

We have a telescope in this town that brings the mines of California so near that a wag said he could pick up gold from them while sitting in his house—he also said that he discovered a fair damsel in the moon by the aid of this wonderful tube, and that it brought her so near that he kissed her. But it is our opinion that the unexagerated truth of this matter is, that the objects which this wonderful telescope has drawn nearest to it, are a grog shop, and a set of drunken loafers.

Letters.

We will not be responsible for any letters left at this office unless addressed to us. We might employ the whole time of a clerk in running to the Post office. The Post office is the place to leave letters, and we cannot be troubled with them. Remember that the Guardian office is not the Post office.

A Suggestion to Emigrants.

Companies that are organized and about to leave this point to cross the Plains, can have their individual names inserted in the Guardian under the following head, and a copy sent to their friends anywhere in the United States.

Departed From Council Bluffs.

The —— company of California Emigrants, commanded by Capt. —— and Lieut.——, ——M. D., Physician, surgeon, (or any other officer as the case may be) composed of the following named gentlemen, viz: David B. Childs, Wisconsin, &c. This company left this point on the——day of ——, 1850, apparently in good condition, good health, good spirits,—and full of hope and zeal to possess themselves of a liberal quantity of the shining ore.

Deseret.

This name it would seem, is objectionable to the Government, because it is a Mormon name, and must therefore, with its government, be discarded. Well, be it so. We settle down under the belief that whatever is, that we cannot, by honorable means, prevent, is right, and will turn for our good.

We say, however, that we know of more than twenty thousand Mormons in the United States that are not opposed to the Mormons at the Salt Lake — Neither have they charged them with taking the oath of hostility against the Government of the United States, nor do they believe they have ever done it. We are confident that those to whom we allude, never have, neither will they.

We will not murmur or complain at this; for if we are refused, we know that there is a wise Providence in it, though we may not now clearly behold it.

If Jehovah will not sustain our doctrine, it would do us no good if the United States should sustain it. But if He does sustain it, it will not materially suffer if the United States' Government "discards" it. If we are displised and rejected of men, it is no more than better persons than we have suffered before us. If we are chosen of God and precious, we have comparatively little cause to complain.

WASHINGTON, March 25, 1850.

This was a good day's work. In the Senate, Judge Douglas, chairman of the committee on territories, with the unanimous assent of the committee, brought in two bills, in substance agreeing with what I stated nearly a fortnight ago, to be the plan of compromise likely to succeed during the session. Judge Douglas has given the subject his whole undivided attention, and the two bills reported to-day with trifling amendments, will most unquestionaby pass the Senate, and in my humble opinion, also the House of Representatives.

The first of Mr. Douglass' bills provides for the admission of California with her present limits. It is clear that the north cannot fight on that bill, on the very principle of non-interference with the will of the people, which is embodied in the second bill, which provides for creating two territorial governments from the residue of the territory acquired from Mexico, to wit: The territory of Utah and the territory of New Mexico, which bills are in the usual form of territorial bills without any proviso on the subject of slavery.

The territorial bill also provides for the settlement of the Texas boundary, by a pecuniary consideration. The sum is left in blank, but is understood will be filled up with $10,000,000 or $15,000,000.

The report of Mr. Douglass was, as I have just said, made with the unanimous assent of all the members of the committee, with this exception only that in regard to one or two unimportant points, in regard to which each member is permitted to offer amendments, two members of the committee, who consider themselves under instruction from their respective Legislatures, may ask leave to avail themselves of that privilege.

There was some difficulty in the way of just legalizing the Mormon government of Deseret. Deseret is a Mormon word, and there is a strong prejudice against Mormonism in all the North-western States, which would compel many North-western members to vote against it. The Mormons soon after the death of Joe Smith, divided; the Mormons remaining in the States of the Union being violently opposed to the Mormons of Salt Lake and charging the Salt Lake Mormons with having taken an oath of eternal hostility to the government of the United States; pledging themselves to overthrow this government, whenever they shall have the power to do so. There are many patriotic Mormons in the States of Wisconsin, Iowa, Illinios, Kentucky, Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania, who have formed many churches, and who are all firmly believing that the Salt Lake Mormons have taken the oath of hostility to the United States. A vote, therefore, approving the acts of the Mormons on the Salt Lake, by adopting their government and its name, would be deemed an approval of this doctrine; and for this reason the name (Deseret) as well as the government itself, must be discarded.

The Deficiency Bill, with a number of amendments, passed the House. I am, on the whole, glad of it. There is no use in fighting about the Clerk's salaries, while the Union is in danger. If the administration will favor the passage of the compromise bills, now introduced into the Senate, and shortly about to be introduced into the House, I, for one will not grudge a dozen clerks, or more, their pittances.

There was an executive session to-day. Mr. Lawrence was up, but has probably been laid over. He will nevertheless be confirmed in due time. There is a great disposition for peace and harmony in both Houses.

Conference.

In consequence of the badness of the weather, the business of the Annual Conference is not yet finished. Because of other matter at the present time, we have omitted the minutes until the business is completed.

The Stolen Harness Returned.

"Honor to Whom Honor is due."

The harness taken from the premises of Mr. Robert Calwell, mentioned in our last, was safely returned a few nights ago, we hear, and hung upon the fence, where the owner Col. Lockwood Smith, could get it. But instead of our getting the promised ten dollars, reward, we got, "thank you Sir." We suppose the fact of the latter being more easily coined than the former, was the reason of a tender of this low priced currency, which will not pay for paper, ink, nor for setting type.

We should have used the same exertion to procure for him his harness, if he had never mentioned dollars; but after he was so emphatic in offering ten dollars if we could devise any means by which he could get his harness, we did "kind o' think," that we might finger the X, or at least have the chance to refuse it; But we have not had the opportunity to do either.

Ice.

The ice has been running in the Missouri River for the last three days. The Steamer "St. Ange" was forced from her moorings night before last near this place by the floating ice. The weather is gloomy in the extreme. The River is nearly blocked up.

Hon. John C. Calhoun.

This Master spirit and Champion of Southern rights and Southern interests, has it appears departed this life, leaving the contest in which he was engaged to die away and fall asleep like himself; or to be revived by others. The account of his death we have not yet received. We have received only the account of his funeral service. If this be so, while we regret the loss of a great man, we must acknowledge the hand of Providence, timely interposed, no doubt for good.

WASHINGTON, April 2—7 P. M.

The Senate met for the purpose of attending the funeral solemnities of the late John C. Calhoun—the galleries were crowded, while hundreds were unable to obtain admittance. At eleven o'clock the members of the House, preceeded by its officers, entered the chamber. The Supreme Court of the U. S. and President Taylor and Cabinet then entered. The President was conduct to a seat on the right of the Vice President. The diplomatic corps, which was largely represented, occupied seats near the centre of the chamber. Numerous officers of the army and navy and many distinguished stangers occupied the sofas in the lobby, and at twenty minutes past twelve, the remains were brought into the Chamber in charge of the committee of arrangements, followed by the relations of the deceased, the South Carolina Delegates in the House and other friends as mourners. The corpse was placed immediately in front of the Vice President's desk.

After the performance of the funeral services of the Episcopal church, and the delivery of a brief but beautifully impressive address by the Rev. C. M. Butler, Chaplain of the Senate, from the 9th verse of the 82d Psalm—"But ye shall die like a man, and fall like one of the princes"—then the procession formed in the order previously determined on. Senators Magnum, Clay, Webster, Cass, King and Berrien officiated as pall bearers. The procession having been formed, it proceeded to the Congressional burying-ground, where the remains were deposited to await their removal to South Carolina. The Senate then returned to the Chamber, and adjourned.

WASHINGTON, March 17.

I learn, by a gentlemen from Boston, that Mr. Webster's views are highly approved by all the moderate and sober minded men in the East, but that the conscience party, led by Palfrey, Sumner, and C. F. Adams, are rapidly opposed to it. These furious fanatics are making an effort to get up a legislative demonstration in opposition to Mr. Webster's views. The Legislature is now in session, and there the battle is to be fought. An opposition will be, of course, made to his re-election, by the Abolitionists and their kindred cliques.

Whatever anxiety has prevailed as to the result of the present difficulties, it may be considered as certainly removed. California will be admitted as a State, and with her assumed boundaries. The fugitive slave bill will pass. No territorial governments will be established; but necessary legislation will be given New Mexico and Deseret. The question on the Texian boundary will either be settled, or an offer will be made to Texas, which will leave a settlement at an early day, and the compact made with her as to the admission of New States, will be respected. There will be no legislation as to slavery or the slave trade in this district at present.

Cholera.—There has been some cases on boats running between New Orleans and St. Louis, but we cannot hear of any cases occurring above St. Louis.

List of California Emigrants that have arrived on this Frontier.

They are all apparently in good health and spirits, and eager for the mines. Persons receiving this number who are not regular subscribers to the paper, will please run over this list of names, and they will probably find their husband's name, the name of a son or brother, cousin, friend or old acquaintance. There are many emigrants who have arrived here whose names are not in this list. They can all have their names registered in the next number of the Guardian if they wish, and a copy sent back to any friend, for one dime each.

Fresh Arrival.

The Steamer "St. Ange" arrived here on Monday morning last with freight for this place. Our merchants begin to fly about in right good earnest,—goods are plenty and cheap as a matter of course.

The Steamer, "Robert Campbell," is a few miles below, we hear, in the ice. She has a heavy freight and many passengers destined for this town. She will be up most likely as quick as the ice will let her.

St. Louis Charter Election.

The whigs carried every thing before them; the majorities over all others varying from five to seven hundred. Luther M. Kennett was elected Mayor.

NEW GOODS!

A. SORLEY,
St. Joseph, Missouri,

IS now receiving a splendid lot of SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS, of every description, of the Latest Style and Patterns. And is prepared to offer Great Inducements to all who may favor him with a call. His stock comprises a general assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, and Bonnets. Also, a large and well selected assortment of Iron and nails.

My plan is to sell for Cash Only, and at a small advance on cost; the rate charged for goods at my store, will contrast largely with prices paid by those who buy on time. Many place an undue importance on the credit system, unmindful of the fact, that constitutes a nominal profit, yet when compared with the invariable cash system it is a positive loss.

Selling on time is hazardous under the best circumstances. Those who sell on time must buy on time. Therefore, I will say to my old customers and the public generally, that you will save much by calling and examining my Stock of Goods, before purchasing. A. SORLEY.

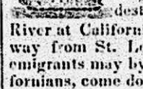
STEAM FERRY.



We learn by the Capt. of the "St. Ange," that the steam ferry boat, destined to ply across the Missouri River at California City, below the Platte, is on its way from St. Louis to its destined point, where emigrants may by crossed by the wholesale—Californians, come down below the Mouth of the Platte and try us. We already have a good flat boat in operation. ANDREW J. STEWART.

COUNCIL BLUFFS FERRY,

Across the Missouri River.

THIS Ferry chartered by the Legislature of the State of Iowa, and licensed by the Superintendant of Indian affairs, has been in successful operation for the last year. We are now prepared with good boats and experienced watermen to cross emigrants with safety and despatch. The location and facilities of this crossing are too well known to require a description at our hands. The fact of its being under the eye of the Agent and approved by the Indians to whom we make Semi-Annual payments for the privilege of having a road through their country, ensures their good will towards the Emigrants. The North side of Platte river is now acknowledged to be the Healthiest, Nearest and Best route to the gold mines. We can cross at Council Bluffs, one hundred or more teams per day, having three good boats.

Congressional.

WASHINGTON, March 25—6 P. M.

SENATE—Mr. Webster rose to make an explanation for the purpose of defending his recent speech, from the charge of being inconsistent with his remarks on slavery, made in 1848? He said some person had been edifying the Senate, by sending round a piece of paper, quoting from the two speeches; he would undertake to say now, that if anybody could make these quotations for the purpose of showing any inconsistency, that he either did not understand the subject, or was not candid—there was no inconsistency—he had never voted for any increase of slavery or of slave territory. He would carry out the compact made with Texas; having resisted, unsuccessfully, the making of the compact, he would not now violate it after it was made.

Mr. Hale replied that the compact was made in 1845, and was just as much a reality in 1848 as it was in 1850, and it seemed to him that under the circumstances there was an unwarrantable difference of sentiment, he had, however, in his allusion, designed no censure or disrespect.

Mr. Webster observed, that if he did not intend quoting to show inconsistency, he could not see what his object was.

HOUSE—The bill to supply the deficiencies in appropriations for the present fiscal year, was taken up, and questions on amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The amendment voting $9,000 for a Minister to Prussia, and $4,500 for a Charge to Austria, was concurred in. Yeas 114, Nays 72.

The amendment appropriating $200,000 for subsistence, &c., for the Florida Indians, was concurred in. Yeas 109, Nays 75.

Other amendments were concurred in, and the bill passed the House.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole, on the California question. Mr. Thurston said, he was the first representative from Oregon on this floor—he came here not as a party man—he had been grieved to hear California slandered, because she had dared to protect herself, and ask for admission—his opinion was that California should be admitted into the Union, without plucking a single hair from the silver locks of her golden constitution.

WASHINGTON, March 25—8 P. M.

SENATE—After some further explanations between Mr. Webster and Mr. Hale, Mr. Douglas, from the Committee of Territories, reported a bill to admit California, and a bill organizing a territorial government for New Mexico.

The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of the special order of the day, the motion to refer the President's California message.

Mr. Hunter, having the floor, addressed the Senate at length upon the question of slavery, maintaining the right of the South to take their slaves into the territory, and thus picturing the ends which would result from emancipation. He took a decided Southern ground, and said that the Union could not be preserved by any patched up compromise; but that he was ready himself to do any thing that promised peace, if consistent with the constitutional rights of his State.

Mr. Upham next obtained the floor; the subject was then postponed till Monday next. After going into Executive session, the Senate adjourned.

WASHINGTON, March 26.

Mr. Foote moved that the bill organizing territorial governments in Utah and New Mexico be taken up, for the purpose of making it the special order for an early day.

A most exciting passage between Mr. Benton and Mr. Foote ensued. Mr. Benton, as a friend of California, gave notice to those who desired her admission, that they must now stand by her; California was entitled to the consideration of the Senate, and her rights were not to be postponed.

Mr. Foote replied with warmth, indulging in a personal attack upon Mr. Benton's course, impugning the motives of his action, and intimating that his new born friendship for California, was not for the sake of the people, but because of the presence here of her Senator, whose admission to back him up and sustain in the Senate he was looking for with the most feverish anxiety; he also contended that the California question, had of right, no precedence.

Mr. Benton: I believe this is the American Senate. I believe that by the laws of the Senate, and rules of decorum personalities and attacks upon motives are forbidden; the attacks which have been made upon my motives are false and cowardly.

Mr. Foote, after some remarks, replied to the charge of cowardice, and said, I feel bound to say now that when the Senator removes certain stains which cling to his escutcheon, of which I know the history as well as any man in christendom, allusion to which ought to cause his cheeks to be suffused with blushes and shame; or if the Senator remains in his present attitude without the special decredit, with which he knows I am familiar, and which that paleing acknowledges, as well as the terrific fear which he knows I have witnessed. Whenever he comes out frankly and boldly, instead of shielding himself behind his established cowardice; whenever he is prepared to hold himself amenable to the laws which govern gentlemen, I am prepared to meet him on that footing.

Mr. Benton: I pronounce it cowardly to give insults when they cannot be chastised. (Loud cries of order.) Is a Senator to be blackguarded?

Mr. Foote: He is a blackguard!

Mr. Benton: Is language to be used here, which would not be used in any oyster cellar or tavern?

Vice President: The Senate is called to order.

Mr. Benton, continuing, it is time to stop such language here, in a place where a cudgel cannot be applied to him.

The Vice President repeated the call of order.

After some futher colloquy, Mr. Foote said he would stand by all he had said, and if Mr. Benton was willing to proceed in the matter, he would meet him.

Mr. Dickerson moved to lay the pending motion on the table, which was agreed to.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of Mr. Clay's resolutions.

Mr. Chase, having the floor, spoke upon the general question of slavery, vindicating the course pursued by the great body of slavery agitators—he had not concluded when the Senate adjourned.

WASHINGTON, March 27.

SENATE—After the receptions of petitions, Mr. Benton rose to a personal explanation. He charged Mr. Foote with incorrectly reporting himself yesterday, and denied the right of any Senator to modify his expressions in a personal manner, as reported. Mr. Foote was represented to have said that Mr. Benton was shielded by his age, and his open disavowal of the obligations of the laws of honor. It was false: let any man offer him (Benton) an insult, where it could be properly chastised, and he would soon learn his age. He would now give notice to the Senate, that if it failed to protect itself from the use of language which would not be used in the veriest brothel, he would henceforth protect himself, cost what it might.

Mr. Foote said he made no unjustifiable alteration and avowed the report as his own. In conclusion, he wanted to know if Mr. Benton considered himself amenable to the laws of honor. If he does not, let him say so.

Mr. Benton made no reply, but indulged in a contemptuous laugh.

ARRIVAL OF THE NIAGARA.

Fourteen days Later from Europe.

NEW YORK, March 25—6 P. M.

The Niagara arrived at Halifax on Thursday night. She brings dates from Liverpool up to the 8th inst.

The Niagara's news was delayed by a break in the wires near St. John's, or else it would have reached here yesterday morning.

The accounts from the manufacturing districts are not satisfactory. The political affairs of England possesses but little special interest. Lord John Russell has given notice that it is in contemplation of the Government to abolish the Lord Lieutenancy of Ireland, together with the Vice Royal Court of Dublin, and to have such affairs managed by the Home Department by a Secretary of Ireland.

The Canadian annexation movements excite but little attention.

Collin's new line of American steamers command a large share of attention and good will.

Lord Palmerston's conduct in continuing the Greek blockade is severely commented upon by all the English Journals. The Russian Government has presented an energetic remonstrance against this proceeding of the English Government, and the public opinion is general that the Czar will extend to the Greeks efficient support.

The London Gazette says: "A Queen's messenger passed through Malta on the 25th ult., with orders to Sir William Parker to cease hostilities against Greece.

France.

The anniversary of the Republic passed off without disturbance.

The Minister of Finance states that the revenue will be adequate for the public service this year.

The Postmaster General opens all letters passing to and from suspected persons. This conduct has given rise to warm debates in the Assembly.

It is said that France and Russia are completely united upon the Greek question.

Letters from Toulon state that the French fleet in the Levant had sailed for the Greek coast.

The result of the elections was not known at Paris on Thursday. The Government has established a censorship on all foreign books.

The menaces of Prussia against the Swiss cantoonments had been renewed, but as France and Austria have interfered, nothing serious was apprehended.

Denmark and the Duchies.

The report gains ground, that the armistice is to be prolonged. It is currently reported, that Denmark has concluded a private treaty with Prussia, by which the latter is to have the Island of Bernholm, should hostilities be renewed with the Schleswig.

Turkey.

The Sultan proposed—that the Hungarian refugees, should be detained in Asia Minor, for a period not exceeding one year.

Kossuth and others are about to be removed accordingly.

Naples.

Fears are entertained that Admiral Parker, will pay his respects to the Napolitans, as soon as he leaves the Greek coast. Like tears are entertained at Madrid.

There is no indication of the speedy return of the Pope of Rome.

Austria and Hungary.

The Vienna journals state that intelligence had been received from Transylvania that the Russians were assemblying a considerable military force in the dirles of Gortz, with the intention of again occupying Transylvania, so as to allow the Austrian troops to pass through to Italy and the German frontier. General Haynau has called out the National guard of such towns as Presburg, to make up a new levy of 20,000 men. Many of the people have left their homes in consequence, knowing that they would be obliged to serve. A few political prisoners have escaped. All National guards who served in the insurrectionary forces in Hungary, are being incorporated with the Austrian army.

Large numbers of Hungarian refugees are collecting on the frontiers of Bosena, where they are treated with the greatest kindness by the Turkish Vizier. Our latest advices state that all sentences of death have been commuted to terms of imprisonment in irons.

Prussia and the German States.

The Prussian Monitor of the 5th inst., publishes the names of the members of the Chamber of State, named by the Government; they are all from the aristocratic class. The Constitutionalists and Democrats will not interfere in the election for the first Chamber, because they consider that the nomination of so many members of the aristocracy is too significant a hint on the part of the Government, to admit of a hope that the liberties of Germany are about to be developed. All who sincerely desire that Germany should attain to a definite constitutional State, are greatly discouraged at this act of the Government. A formal protest has been entered of the Council of Administration against Hanover, for withdrawing from the alliances of the twenty States, of May 25 h.

We learn from Aldenberg, that in consequence of the termination of the armistice with Denmark, the soldiers from the department had been called in. A Danish frigate and barque have been discoverd off the bank, it would appear that they are again collecting.

The Committee of Saxon Chambers on the German question, has agreed to a series of recommendations to the ministry urging the policy of adhering to the Prussian bond, and using its influence with Wurtemberg and Bavaria, to induce them to join also. It is said that the Erfuth parliament will be postponed to admit of the consideration of this recommendation.

England.

Our minister in England has recovered his health—he had attended the Prince Consort's levee.

Several vessels were advertised in Liverpool, for California.

Late and Important News from Venezuela —Threatened Blockade of the Coast by the British Admiral.

PHILADELPHIA, March 11.

The bark Thomas Dallett arrived this afternoon from Caraccas. By this arrival we have received advices to the 20th ult.

The Earl of Dundonald, Commander-in-Chief of the British West India squadron, had sent a vessel of war from Trinidad to Caraccas to demand indemnity for the outrages committed on the British subjects during the revolution.

Mr. Wilson, the British Consul at Caraccas had made known the command, and had given fourteen days notice for the Caraccas authorities to consider the matter. At the expiration of which period, if a satisfactory answer was not given, the coast would be blockaded. The fourteen days were to expire on the 24th ult.

Business was without the least improvement General Paez continued in prison, but he expected his liberation soon, at the instance of the British Admiral.

Latest from California.

The steamer Georgia arrived at New York on Friday week from Chagres, which place she left on the 27th ultimo. She brings the mails from California of January 15 and February 1. She also brought three hundred passengers, and about a million of dollars in gold.

The news from California is interesting. The flood in the Sacramento and its tributaries had abated a little. Real estate in San Francisco is still held at enormous prices, and rents continue as high as ever. Great reductions have been made in the price of lumber, sales having been made as low as seventy dollars a thousand feet. A number of brick buildings are going up, and give to the city a more substantial appearance than it before possessed. Some of these buildings are really very elegant, and compare favorably with the majority of buildings in the Atlantic cities.

Perhaps full one-half of the population of San Francisco live in tents. Board and lodging can be obtained at $25 to $35 per week. The news from the mines continues encouraging. All accounts represent the miners as doing full as well as at any previous time. Indeed, the recent news is of such a character as to induce many people to start for the diggings, notwithstanding the almost incessant rains and the bad condition of the roads. A lump of gold weighing twenty-one pounds has been picked up in the Southern mines, and stories of lumps twice that weight find ready credence with hundreds who are hoping to get a few just such pieces. Within the next two months the emigration from San Francisco to the gold regions will be very extensive. Almost every other man is forming his plans to depart as soon as the weather will permit.

The Union.

The following closing passage of Websters reply to Hayne, will be read with renewed interest at the present time:

"When my eyes shall be turned to behold, for the last time, the Sun in Heaven, may I not see him shine on the broken and dishonored fragments of a once glorious Union; on states dissevered, discordant, belligerent; on a land rent with civil feuds, or drenched, it may be, in fraternal blood! Let their last feeble and lingering glance rather behold the gorgeous ensign of the Republic, now known and honored throughout the earth, still full high advanced, its arms and trophies streaming in their original lustre, not a stripe rased or polluted, nor a single star obscured, bearing for its motto no such miserable interrogatory as, What is all this worth? Nor those other words of delusion and folly; Liberty first and Union afterwards; but, everywhere, spread all over in characters of living light, blazing on all its ample folds as they float over the sea and over the land, and in every wind under the whole Heavens, that other sentiment, dear to every American heart, Liberty and Union, now and forever, one and inseparable."

Ridicule is a weak weapon, when levelled at a strong mind.

Large Lumps of Gold.

Some astonishing large pieces of gold are reported to have been found at the Stockton mines, in California, within the last two weeks of January. A letter of January 31, to the New York Tribune, says:

One piece weighing twenty-three pounds was brought to Stockton; that another piece of incredible size and weight was also reported to have been brought to Stockton on Friday—it was said to weigh ninty-eight pounds. I saw a number of persons off board the Stockton boat who had seen the lump weighing twenty-three pounds. The gentleman who carries the express between Stockton and San Francisco, told me he saw and had in his hands the piece weighing ninty-eight pounds. If this be true it is the largest piece of gold ever found, excepting one found in the Ural Mountains, which weighed nearly one hundred pounds, troy.

Chances of Disunion.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24, 1850.

* * * "It is understood here that thirty-four members from the Slave States have signed an agreement to persevere in staving off all transaction of business in the House until the Slavery question shall be settled to their liking, by calling the yeas and nays, moving adjournments, calls of the House, &c., whenever there shall be an effort to do any thing. The Northern members are cogitating plans to baffle such manœuvers, and one proposition considered is that of adjouring and having a Special Session called, at the beginning of which such new rules may be adopted as are adapted to the new state of things.

H. is alarmed and confident that blood will be spilt on the floor of the House before the Session closes. He says he knows many Members who go to the House armed daily, in anticipation of a general fight. W—— is confident that disunion is now inevitable. He knows intimately, nearly all the Southern members, is familiar with their views, and sees the letters that reach them from their constituents. He says the most ultra are well backed up by advices from home. What the end is to be, we cannot imagine."—[N. Y. Tribune.

STOVES! STOVES!!

MR. DUSTIN AMY, of this town, would respectfully notify the citizens of this county, and particularly that portion of them that expect to emigrate to the Salt Lake, that he intends to have, by the first boat this spring, a heavy and well selected assortment of Cast Iron Cooking Stoves, which he proposes to sell on very favorable terms for ready cash.

As Mr. A. is a tinner by trade, he will fit up the stoves with furniture according to order, and on the shortest notice. He keeps constantly on hand a good assortment of tin ware, and a good supply of all vessels usually called for by Emigrants. He has secured sufficient help to execute almost any job that may be required in his line on very short notice. The experience that he has had in traveling in the West, and also in fitting out emigrants for the last two or three years to journey over the Plains from this place, enable him to anticipate, correctly, the present wants of emigrants; and he has and will, therefore, prepare his stock and articles for sale to suit this frontier Market.

POETRY.

Woman's Heart.

"Alas! that man should ever win
So sweet a shrine to shame or sin,
As woman's heart."
Say, what is woman's heart?—a thing
Where all the deepest feelings spring;
A harp whose tender cords reply
Unto the touch of harmony;
A world, whose fairy scenes are fraught
With all the colored dreams of thought;
A bark, that will still blindly move
Upon the treacherous seas of Love.

What is its Love?—a ceaseless stream,
A changeless star, an endless dream;
A smiling flower, that will not die—
"A beauty and a mystery:"
Its storms as light as April showers;
Its calms as sweet as vernal flowers;
Its hopes as bright as summer air,
And dark as winter its despair.

What are its hopes?—rainbows that throw
A radiant light where'er they go—
Smiling when Heaven is o'ercast,
Yet melting into storms at last.
Bright cheats that come with siren words,
Beguiling it like summer birds;
That stay while nature round them blooms,
But flee away when winter comes.

What is its Hate?—a passing frown,
A single weed 'mid blossoms sown,
That cannot flourish 'mong them long—
A harsh note in an angel's song;
A summer cloud that all the while
Is lighted by a sunbeam's smile—
A passion that scarce hath a part
Amidst the gems of woman's heart.

What then is woman's heart?—a thing,
Where all the deeper feelings spring—
A harp, whose tender chords reply
Upon the touch, in harmony—
A world, whose fairy scenes are fraught
With all the colored dreams of thought;
A bark that still would blindly move
Upon the treacherous seas of Love.

MISCELLANY.

From the American Union.

Irish Wit; or, Lazy Pat Hannagan.

BY A NEW CORRESPONDENT.

Patrick Hannagan was an honest, "clever" soul, and a very domestic sort of man; never inclined to go far from home. He never was known to work hard, and seldom at all when there was bread in the house. His neighbors, generally, called him "lazy Pat."

Winter was fast approaching, and Pat not having been very industrious during the Summer, could not think of commencing to do so in the winter. But he was very poor, he had a wife and six children to feed, and something must be done. At length Pat set his apology for a brain at work, to contrive some way of getting a living without labor through the winter. Through all his poverty, he had managed to keep a cow, and he always found that when they had no other food, milk was very acceptable. He sat for some time over his old rusty stove, occasionally rubbing his cranium, and, ejaculating short sentences, as though he was in a deep brown study—and at length he said to his gude woman—

"Mag, here; sit down here;" and placing his hand upon her knee and shutting one eye, while he cast a menacing look at her with the other—"Mag—I've got a new thrade in this he'd o' mine."

"Well—'n sure, what may it be?" asked Mag.

"It's nothin'," said he (with a mysterious look and nod) "but that I'll not be sweatin' meself with worrek this cold winther, when we have milk enough from the cow, an' the pratees we can borry of brother Michael! Powers of blessin's on him for his kindness! He niver turned a nady soul from his door."

"But it is not the pratees an' milk that'll kape the babies warrum, Pat!" responded Mag.

"Ah—jist wait now. The thrade I've got in me he'd, I'm tillin. I'll sell the cow for tin dollars an' that'll buy corl for the winther! d'ye see, Mag?"

"Pat, ye're a fool! Where'll ye begitted the milk wi'dout the cow, sure! Ah, bad luck 'll come to ye, for sellin the good ol, craythur, that niver let the babies to bed widout their supper, since she come among us."

"An' its yerself that's a fool, Mag! It's not the milk I'me sellin'—mind ye—but the cow. An' what are we wantin' wid her, to be atin' her hid off this long cowld winther."

"Aye, ye're right, Pat"—said Mag—just beginning to see through his cunning.

Pat's mind once made up, he starts off in search of a customer for his cow. He recollects having seen a fine lot of that species of animal at Squire G———s, and hoping to find a purchaser there he proceeds to the Squire's, and meets him at the door.

"Good marnin,' Squire," says he. "If ye would be getting a fine new milch cow fer half what she is worth, what would ye be givin' for her?"

"Well, I don't know. How much milk does she give per day? enquires the Squire.

"That's nothin' to yerself. It's only the baste I'm sellin'. I'll not trouble ye to milk her."

"Oh, yes, I see. Well, what do you want for the cow, without the milk?"

"Tin dollars; an' that's not half the worth of her."

"Very well, I've seen your animal, I know what she is; and I will give you ten dollars for her," (said the Squire handing him the money,) "but the cow is mine, you understand."

"Sure, an' what would I be wantin' of the money an' the baste too? The craythur is yours, intirely."

The animal was duly delivered, and Pat exchanged his ten dollars for two tons of coal, which was also stowed away. He now promised himself an 'asy time, believing that his pratees and milk, and his coal for the winter was sure and safe.

Mag was rather pleased, than otherwise, with the thrade, which she believed was the sharpest one Pat had ever made; but still she prophecied that "bad luck would come of sellin the good auld craythur that niver let the babies to bed widout their supper!"

Pat knew what he was about—he said; his coal was in the cellar, he had borrowed a bushel of pratees of brother Michael, and when supper time came, he takes his pail in hand, marches up to the Squire's—milks his cow, and returns to partake of his evening meal. The next morning he does the same, and the next evening—and he thinks he never lived so well and so "aisily" before.

On the following morning, however, he appears at the Squire's barn as usual, pail in hand; but his favorite "baste" is missing!"

He looks all around, but does not find her; so he takes the stool and goes to milking the first one he meets.

"Hallo, there! what are you milking my cow for, Pat?" bawls the Squire, pretending to happen along just at the moment.

"Ha! Good marnin', Squire," says Pat. "I didn't see me own, so I thought it was jest the same to burry a little milk of anither one."

"Your cow! what do you mean? You have got no cow here. Didn't I buy her of you, and pay you ten dollars for her?"

"Sure ye did. But didn't I tell ye I wouldn't sell the milk! Would ye be chating me out of my childrer's bread?"

"I have no idea of cheating you, Pat. It was a fair bargain. You sold me the cow, didn't you?"

"Faith, I did—sure."

"Well, I have sold her to the butcher. I did not want to keep so many, and I had a right to sell which I choose, as they were all mine. You can have milk here, if you want it, but you must pay for it."

"Och! 'n' does yer honor think I am going to be chated in this way? not I"—and he threw down pail, milk and all, and made the best of his way to the nearest lawyer's office.

"Look here, maister," says he, rushing into the office like a madman, nearly taking the lawyer out of his slippers—"It's the Squire that's afther chatin' me out of me childer's bread, this cowld winther, an' I shall have ricompinse!'

"Ah," says the lawyer, coolly, "what has the Squire done?"

"Done!" exclaimed Pat in a rage Didn't I sell him a cow barring the milk, which was to feed my poor helpless childers this cowld winther? an' didn't he sell the baste, milk an' all, to the butcher, an' chate me out uv my livin'?"

"Ah, I see: you sold him the cow, but retained the use of the milk."

"Jest so; ye have it exac'ly."

"Have you got any writing of your bargain?"

"Writin'—is it? The de'il a bit uv anything did I git, but tin dollars, which wasn't half the worth uv her."

"Then I am sorry to inform you that you are a little lame. If you sold the animal, and got your pay for her, the Squire had a perfect right to do what he pleased with her."

Pat thrust his hand into his pockets, grated his teeth, and venting all sorts of bad wishes and "bad lucks," on the Squire, was about retreating from the lawyer's office, a wiser man.

"But stop," called the lawyer. "I want a dollar for advice."

"Advice, is it?—a dollar? May ye git the dollar, an' git me sellin' me cow agin, at the same time;" says Pat, (with that ominous nod of the head) as he dodged out of the door!

Little consolation did poor Pat get from Squire or lawyer, and less from Mag, when he returned home with his sad tale.

"Aye," said she, and didn't I tell ye, ye was a fool, an' bad luck would come to ye for sellin' the good auld craythur, that niver let the childers to bed widout their supper! Heaven bless the baste!"

Poor lazy Pat saw his mistake—and, after all his contrivances and calculations to live aisy, he had to go to work in cowld weather, to get bread and milk for his hungry childers.

"'Tis the Mecca of the States."—A person who accompanied Gen. Taylor in his late visit to Richmond, gives the following description of the scene as the steamboat passed Mount Vernon:

We were now passing Mount Vernon. The President approached the guards of the boat, and gazed at it very attentively. Some one remarked, "For fifty years no boat or ship has passed this spot, where lie the remains of the illustrious dead, without paying the solemn compliment of tolling their bell while passing. No such honor was ever paid to the memory of any of the great dead."

"'Tis the Mecca of the States," solemnly added the President, without for a moment moving his eyes from the spot.

"Fashion," says Hazlitt, "is gentility running away from vulgarity, and afraid of being overtaken by it. It is a sign the two things are not far asunder."

"Matrimony," was the answer to the Miscellaneous Acrostical Enigma in our last number.

Answer to the Charade in our last was "Tenet."

Charade No. 2.

My first in every clime and realm is found,
And help the rich in mirth and wealth to abound.
My second circles round the very earth.
Though nought itself, is sometimes of great worth.
My third in commerce holds a stately mien,
Though used by thousands yet the wise decline:
My whole is dear, though far be cast our lot;
If ever owned 'twill never be forgot.

OH YES!

The Old Pioneer on the Track Again

MR. HENRY W. MILLER, well known in this region, as one of the first western men, has joined me as partner; and we have removed our large stock of English Goods,

Imported Direct from Liverpool,

to our new store opposite our late stand; and in addition to the largest and

Best Stock of Hardware and Smallwares

in Kanesville, we have selected some superior lots of

Dry Goods, Iron, Steel, Springs, Axles, Axes and Holloware,

in the St. Louis Market, expressly for the WINTER TRADE, and the necessities of this community.

We have re-marked all our goods and have agreed to sell off our stock—superior in quality though it be—at prices sufficiently low to induce a continuation and increase of our trade; and to remove an influence existing, not altogether without foundation, that some of the goods of the late firm—Brown & Barham were too high; from wor. we only want to live among you and desire not to enrich ourselves, at your cost, we wish "to spend and be spent," for the good of the cause, which is to us, as to you the greatest and best. Our motto in business, is and shall be

"Small Profits and Quick Returns."

The truthfulness of which you cannot prove unless you come, see and trade with

BROWN & MILLER.

N. B. All accounts due to the late firm—Brown & Barham, will be received, settled and accounted for by THOMAS D. BROWN, at Brown & Millers store.

REVOLVING GUNS & PISTOLS.

THE subscriber informs the public, but more especially the emigrating community that he has on hand, and is manufacturing his improved Revolving Pistols and Rifles. Also my improved single shooting Pistols. The advantages these arms possess over all the patent arms, in point of utility, simplicity and durability, is obvious to all those who have examined and used them. Call and examine before you buy, and you will not regret the trouble and expense, of coming to my Gun and Pistol manufactory, eight miles below Kanesville. JONATHAN BROWNING.

To California and Salt Lake Emigrants.

Argyles Ferry on the Nichtenabotna River.

THE undersigned would most respectfully inform the traveling community, and especially those emigrating to California, and the Great Salt Lake, by the Northern route, through St. Joseph, Linden, and thence crossing the Missouri at the various ferries above the Narrows of Nichnabotna, that he is prepared with two good boats, and skillful hands to cross all who may find it to their interest and safety to patronise him. He would further state for their information that he crossed at least four-fifths of the emigrants upon this route last spring without loss or damage to the amount of a dime. It was then, as it is likely to be this spring the only practicable point of crossing on the Nichnabotna. Emigrants who design taking the North side of Platte River, and consequently crossing the Missouri above its mouth, will find a good Bluff road directly from this point to the Kanesville and other Ferries above or below the mouth of the Platte. And those who may determine to cross the Missouri at Old Fort Kearney or between that point and the Narrows, may be assured that the road from Argyles Ferry, one-fourth of which is a good Bluff route, is the best and dryest at any season of the year. Conference Minutes.

KANESVILLE, IOWA, April 6th, 1850.

10 o'clock, A. M.—It having been a cold wet week, making the ground damp and cold, the Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, met in the Music Hall, and organized pursuant to adjournment from last October Conference.

Present—Prest. O. Hyde, the High Councillors, Prest. of the Seventies, Joseph Young, Benj. L. Clapp, together with a goodly congregation. The day was fine, but the going extremely bad.

Conference was organized by appointing Orson Hyde, Chairman. Evan M. Greene, Clerk. Robert Campbell, Reporter.

Opening prayer by the Chairman.

Prest. Hyde said he did not intend to bring much business before the Conference until there was a more general representation of the people, but one item he would now present, an item that the High Council had already considered the propriety of sending a good man to St. Joseph, as there are many saints in that place, who were like sheep without a shepherd, to call the brethren together, to organize them, counsel them, visit and administer to them in their distress, and nurse and strengthen them, said that Br. Vernon H. Bruce had been selected for that mission by the High Council.

On motion, the Conference sanctioned the appointment of Br. Bruce, to that mission.

Br. Joseph Young then took the stand and addressed the congregation touching upon various subjects, followed by Prest. Hyde refering to the threatened dissolution of the Union.

On motion the Conference adjourned for one hour to meet at the same place.

2 o'clock—Conference convened pursuant to adjournment. Benj. L. Clapp took the floor, and spoke at some length relative to the Zion of God followed by Mr. Thomas S. Johnson upon the gathering to the Valley.

Br O. Hyde followed Br. Johnson relative to the emigration, the sale of claims, &c., said wisdom did not dictate that the Saints should give away their claims, or throw them out of their hands for a trifle, and gave information of the business to be brought before the Conference, and requested the reports of the branches to be handed in early on the following day, wished to know if the brethren, were willing to have all past things droped and hardnesses buried, and have a general jubilee, and the brethren responded yea, yea, yea.

Br. J. C. Wright was appointed marshal of the Conference ground for the succeeding day.

On motion, the Conference adjourned until to-morrow, 10 o'clock, A. M., to meet at the stand up the hollow.

SUNDAY, April 7th, 1850.

10 o'clock, A. M.—Conference convened at the stand, a large congregation assembled of the brethren, and many of the California Emigrants.

PRESENT.—Prest. O. Hyde, the High Council, Benj. L. Clapp, and Seth M. Blair upon the stand The band and Choir present

MARSHALS—J. C. Wright, Isaac Allred and Elisha Everett.

Music and singing while the congregation were assembling.

This morning opened with an almost cloudless sky, and soon spreading his genial rays on the large rural amphi-theatre of the Conference ground, situated on the S. E. end of Chadwick street, and which was capable of containing 20,000 souls. At an early hour the carriagies, buggies and wagons began to arrive on the ground and the audience comprised a large number of emigrants, gold diggers and strangers as well as the Saints.

The meeting was called to order by reading and singing "The Savior lives no more to die."

Counsellor Coulson addressed the throne in thankfulness for the favorable weather and for the blessings of health, &c.

The choir then sung "Let every mortal ear attend."

Prest. Hyde said it is with peculiar feelings I rise to address you this morning. It is difficult to speak in the open air, but by the assistance of your faith and prayers, I will endeavor to say some things that may be for your consideration hereafter. I look around through the congregation. I see many strangers that are passing through with expectation of bettering their condition. Many are wealthy and have a competence, but still men that are ambitious will go through any danger to be more powerful and more wealthy. There are many, I may say thousands, that will be swept away in a few years, and leave their places to be filled by others. There has been much said in these times with regard to the communion of spirits. The subject may be somewhat novel; but as the spirit of truth will bring things to my understanding, it may be profitable. Much has been said with regard to spirits. The doctrine is being incorporated among the learned that angel's visits are few and far between, but in former times it was not so. Angels in the latter times we claim have visited our earth. I will here state that my curiosity has been awakened with many others, by accounts in the Eastern Newspapers of visitations of spirits from the unseen world, had been heard—mysterious knockings, and unsatisfactory accounts given about them. I have paid little or no attention till I had seen an account by a private letter. There seems to be mysterious knockings and that cannot be accounted for; some think it is ventriloquism and some one thing and some another. The philosophers and priests are staggared by it, but they have come to the conclusion that it is supernatural agency. I bring forth this for the purpose of presenting things of this nature in their proper light, that we might know what is transpiring among us. Has the Almighty manifested things mysteriously, or has he come out in open daylight to our understanding. Witness the case of Lot and the Angels, in the form of men, and their visits to him—and the hurrying him and his family out of the city—and the city being wrapt in flames of fire. The time when our Savior was born, God sent messengers to the Shepherds that were watching their flocks. What was the intelligent language employed on that memorable occasion. "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth and good will to man. There was nothing mysterious, all was light and no darkness at all. By and by an angel was sent to Mary: saying, I am Gabriel, &c.; every thing was open, frank and free that emanated from the Almighty. Does anything that emanates from the powers of darkness bring things clear to the understanding—no all is darkness. I will here mention one thing that was written by a hand on the wall in the King's palace "Mene, mene tekel upharsin." The wise men of the nation were struck with terror and astonishment, at the unknown writing upon the wall; but Daniel, the prophet of the Lord declared to the King, "thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting, &c." We will come to the Savior who proclaimed salvation to the people, and what did he say! "Oh Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that stonest the Prophets and killest those that were sent unto thee," &c.; by and by the Savior was put to death, and strange sights were seen, and these sights and scenes were prophecied of by the people as good omens, and they thought promised protection, when the very symbols were signs of the city's speedy overthrow. Witness also the heifer bringing forth a lamb. "They had eyes but did not see—minds that could not understand, and they were subject to any spirit that might visit the earth. They could see the sights but could not understand them. A man was seen running about the streets of Jerusalem, and continually cried for some days "Woe unto Jerusalem, &c. They would not correspond with the glad tidings brought by the angels, and proclaimed by the Savior—here was something good. We may learn from the past and draw correct conclusions by them of the future. How is it in our days. An angel has come bringing us a message of mercy through Joseph Smith and he who has brought this to us has been murdered in cold blood, in Carthage prison, and perhaps your humble servant may have to share a like fate; but my life is not in my own hands; but the testimony has been reiterated from one end of the Continent to the other and the great mass have cried away with him, they have cried Joe Smith—false prophet—away with him. Where has he gone. He has gone to Heaven and his counsels may have some weight in directing the counsels of Heaven in the affairs of the Church. We have gone preaching the gospel without money and without price, sometimes we have slept in barns and under apple trees; our clothes been worn out, and our feet sore and bleeding. Sometimes we have met with a smile and a happy greeting, and sometimes a favor. We have been called every thing; we have been kicked round the earth till we have become almost case hardened. We owe no ill-will to any, but good will to all mankind. How was it in Jerusalem before its final overthrow, strange sights were seen, and they were divided one against another &c.. There seems something like it in our own country. I am sorry to speak it. Would that it were otherwise. Not only is division in our Halls of Legislation; but the signs are ominous that the States will split against each other. The North against the South. What is the condition. Let the rock be but once split, and the demon of confusion and bloodshed will run universally. When we consider these signs they do not portend good, inasmuch as it is all mystery We are forced to the conclusion of this kind. What are we to do. Why, the Savior has said when these things come to pass, lift up your heads and rejoice, for your redemption draweth nigh. Not to rejoice over their destruction, but rejoice that our names are written in the Lamb's Book of Life, for the time will come when the Savior will say, come ye blessed of my father, inherit the kingdom prepared before the foundation of the world. When God sends a message it is plain, and no mystery or mysterious knockings; it is all peace and good will to men; But the other looks like the witch of Endor raising up Samuel, it does not mean any good.

Prest. Hyde was at the conclusion of the foregoing remarks requested to relate the circumstances of his visiting Jerusalem, as John E. Page had been heard to say that he had never been there. He then related his travels from place to place, and that he was kindly treated there by the Missionaries had eat and drank with them, and they have borne testimony that I have been there and now this man says I have nont been there—I reproach him not—for my feelings pity him. If any man thinks I have not told the truth they may question me.

Music and singing.

Prest. Hyde introduced as business o the Conference, the first Presidency:

Prest. Brigham Young. you know his policy. Some may be discommoded for the present, who have sent off their teams and wagons and they have not been retuned. But what have they done? Have they not sent back means to help off the poor and they have pledged themselves to do so until every soul has been removed. Wait with patience and you turn will come. (Sustained by a general expression of the people)

Prest. Kimball, was unanimosly sustained as First Counsellor to Prest. Young.

Prest. Willard Richards was sustained as Second Counsellor to Prest. Young, and Historian to the Church.

Prest Orson Hyde, said: I want to know if you approve of my course and policy in Pottawatamie, and east of the Rocky Mountains, and I want you to speak your sentiments freely. (Voted unanimously.) I intend to take a course that will deserve your good will, I will pray for you, and want you to pray for me.

P. P. Pratt, was sustained as one of the Twelve Apostles.

Prest. Orson Pratt—I had expected him here to-day. It would do us good to see him. His labors have been as efficient in England as any man that has ever been sent there. He has introduced a system of philosophy that has been a battering ram to the learning and philosophy of the present age. According to a letter from England there has been an increase of 11,000. Though he is a small man, he is made of good stuff, and the best of all is, God is with him. May God bless him. Amen. (Voted unanimously.)

John Taylor has been sent to open the Gospel in France; but the gospel has been opened for him. He will always pass. (Voted unanimously.)

Wilford Woodruff. He has charge of the Eastern Branches. I expected to see him to-day. (Voted unanimously.)

Geo. A. Smith—may the Lord bless his memory. Amen. (Voted unanimously.)

Amasa Lyman, he presides over a company of good boys that have been digging in the gold mines; may he be successful, blest and protected in the land where he is. (Voted unanimously.)

Ezra T. Benson was sustained by a unanimous vote in his Apostleship.

C. C. Rich—sent to take Amasa's place, may he be prospered in his labors where he is. (Voted unanimously.)

Lorenzo Snow, has gone to the Pope's Dominions. It is a hard place for a man to preach—he has gone with his life in his hand, may he have our prayers. (Voted unanimously.)

Erastus Snow has gone to Denmark—may he be successful. (Voted unanimously.)

Franklin D. Richards has gone to England, he is a good man—may he be blest in his labors. (Voted unanimosly.)

The Presidents of the Seventies, viz: Joseph Young, Levi Hancock, Henry Herriman, Zera Pulsifer, Albert P. Rockwood, Benjamin L. Clapp and Jedediah M. Grant were each acknowledged and approved in their office.

The High Councillors were then presented in a body, viz: James Alred, Ira Oviatt, Aaron Johnson, Geo. Coulson, Wm. Snow, James McLellan, Geo. W. Harris, Lyman Stoddard, Jacob G. Bigler, Henry W. Miller, Noah S. Bulkley and Jerome M. Benson. These were acknowledged and approved in their office, with the exception of two contrary votes. Br. Jesse Haven voting in the negative—explained saying he had been informed that Br. Coulson had stated publicly that Joseph Young was on the ground of apostacy, and this had given him feelings so that he could not conscientiously vote for him, for he believed that Br. Joseph Young had a good spirit and of the right kind, and he thought that Br. Coulson should say whether he had made these statements or not.

Br. Clapp said he did not vote, not that he had any personal feelings, but from a sense of duty as it was for the whole people, that these votes were cast, and from general dissatisfaction that he found where he had labored this winter towards Jerome M. Benson, in regard to his competency and teachings, and insulting course.

Counsellor Coulson made some explanations concerning his remarks before the branch where he presided relative to the spirit of apostacy, and that that same spirit had in a certain measure manifested itself here among us, and referred to the course that had been taken by Br. Joseph Young and some others, and he protested against it.

On motion, Br. Benson's case was referred to the next sitting of the High Council next Saturday. Br. Benson requested the presiding Elders and teachers of the different branches where he has preached to be present.

Remarks from several.

Br. Clapp said there had been some remarks relative to himself or the saw-mill association, to which he felt to respond.

Prest. Hyde, said he was not personal, he did object to the saw mill combination in toto. He then called upon Br. S. M. Blair, to give the feelings of the Government upon the subject of the saw mill.

Br. Blair said he presumed he knew the situation of this as well as any man, he had done as much for it, and that at his own expense, he had taken the model, and presented it at Washington to the commissioner of Patents, and that his other business led him to leave the city before the patent was to be issued, and was informed by the Clerk that the patent would be issued in eight days, and he telegraphed to that effect, but Capt. Day had since wrote to him that the model was rejected on the ground that the principle would not work.

On motion, Bishop Aaron Johnson and his counsellors, Jacob G. Bigler and Lorenzo Johnson were acknowledged and approved in their office.

On motion, the President of the High Priesthood, Wm. Snow was acknowledged and approved in his office.

On motion, the President of the Elders, Joseph S. Clark, was acknowledged and approved in his office.

On motion, the Patriarch here, Wm. Draper, Sen., was acknowledged and approved in his office.

On motion, the official acts of those in the Valley, so far as we know them, are approved.

Br. Hyde spoke relative to Father Cutlers going to the Valley this season according to the request of the presidency or that he come up here and show that he has a desire to go. He said he verily believed if Father Cutler really wants to go to the Valley and had not the means, that he could be helped so that he could go.

On motion, the Conference voted that if Father Cutler does not go to the Valley, or come up here and show that he has a disposition to go, that he is disfellowshiped by this conference.

Bishop Aaron Johnson spoke relative to tithing and the poor.

Br. Hyde said, as the Lord had made it at article in his Law, he hoped that every person would make it one in their creed to pay their tithing.

Br. Edward Hunter from the Valley spoke relative to the Perpetual Fund and the gathering to the Valley.

Col. C. M. Johnson spoke relative to the organization of the County, and the people paying their taxes, that it should be done without coercion, for the good of the people, and that he had given them all reasonable time, &c.

On motion, the Conference adjourned for one week to meet at this place if the weather is favorable, but if unpleasant, until the first pleasant sabbath thereafter at 10 o'clock, A. M.

After singing and music the congregation was dismissed, having been detained six hours without recess, and were very attentive.

Supposed to have been between two and three thousand persons upon the ground.

Only 22 branches were represented.

ORSON HYDE, Ch'mn.

Interesting from Central America.

The brig Allen King, Capt. Bates, arrived at this port yesterday, from Belize, Honduras, whence she sailed on the 14th ult.

We have received by this arrival, the following letters from our correspondent in Guatemala, and the official paper of San Salvador. We make an extract from the latter in relation to the restoration of Tigre Island, before mentioned in the New York Herald.

Our private advices by the Allen King, inform us that the recent aggressions of the English in that quarter, were the political topic of conversation. The only claim of any consequence that England had against Honduras, amounted to $110,000 only, and even Mr. Chatfield considered this too unreasonable and unjust to collect. Yet he seized Honduras ports. But the movement of the Americans in Central America started the English, and Mr. C. was instructed to press the outrageous claim of a mahogany cutter, who had been driven from Honduras territory as a trespasser:

GREAT MEN.—Great men, like comets, are eccentric in their courses, are formed to do extensive good by modes unintelligible to vulgar minds. Hence, like those erratic orbs in the firmament, it is their fate to be miscomprehended by fools, and misrepresented by knaves; to be abused for all the good they actually do, and to be accused, of ill with which they have nothing to do, either in design or execution.

To expect to be great without having enemies; is to expect trees to shed their fruit without being "pelted." For bringing a man's talents out, there is nothing like a little wholesome abuse.

Man creeps into childhood—bounds into youth—sobers into manhood—softens into age—totters into second childhood—and slumbers into the cradle prepared for him.

Thoughts Suggested on the Death of William Sherratt, who died in this place, March 7, 1850.

BY FICCIOLA.

Not as the wordling thinks of thee!
Or they of pious rage;
The outward actions all may see;
But who the thoughts can gaze?

I think of thee as one who could;
Adorn a palace gay,
If naught had marr'd a heart so good,
Or clouded thy sun's ray.

Had'st thou but lived in atmosphere,
Congenial to thy mind;
Thy noble soul would'st then appear,
In nature well refin'd.

As o'er the rural landscape scene,
A hurricane voice hath moan'd,
Or tramp of vict'rys martial din—
Contentment late hath own'd,

The "brier," and the "thistle," here,
With flowers fair entwin'd;
The mother's joy o'erfraught with fear,
Deep in her heart enshrin'd.

William, thy pathway overstrewn,
With pois'nous weeds of earth;
Thou tri'dst to conquer all alone—
They spoiled thy gayest mirth.

Thy soul of music ever shed,
A halo round thy friends;
That lov'd voice from earth has fled,
To other clime it wends.

With mission now to spirit world,
Since freed from pain and woe,
The Gospel banner now unfurl'd,
To preach to those below.

Nor had'st thou liv'd thy years in vain,
While here on earth you stayed;
A priesthood's honor thou did'st gain,
For kin' provision made.

We'll meet thee in a better sphere,
Resplendant as the day,
"Your mission ended," "Come ye here."
When "Father," to us say.

Kaneville, March 23, 1850.

Self Reliance.

Whatever it may be the real design that Association shall accomplish, by those who move prominently in it, its ostensible design is to better the social and industrial conditions of mankind.

But, that it cannot. The principle—the force of which is so universally admitted—that "in union there is strength," is not denied in the proposition we have affirmed. Were every one in society to have a due sense of his responsible position; knows full well what is required of him; and have the disposition and the energy, to labor, as though the accomplishment of the end in view depended upon his individual self, then would that society reach its goal; for, every member would mutually benefit another.

But, experience, and a knowledge of human nature, teach that the reverse is true. Individuals thus laboring together are prone, every one, to shift responsibility to another; or, not knowing their precise duty, perform it imperfectly; or again, being too lazy to act their part, put as much of their share of labor as they can, upon the shoulders of others. Hence, there is not that "union" which insures "strength."

Mankind then is not going to be regenerated by associations, and phalanxes. Before this can be accomplished, every member of the human family must live up to the Divine requirement, and do unto his neighbor as he would that neighbor should do unto him.

That spirit in the breast of man, is the spirit of genuine independence. There is a freedom about him who possesses it, which is enobling; which produces a happy satisfaction.

Let an individual fall back upon himself, and he will discover—what it is important for him to known—whether he is adapted by talent for the business in life, which he is following; and for the position, which he holds. This knowledge he should, by all means, possess. But it is only when he relies upon himself, alone, that man can learn for what it is he is fitted; and where, among his fellows, he ought to stand.

We would not be understood as advocating the smothering of ambition. No. Pitch high the standard, we say. Let every man, in whatsoever business or occupation he may be engaged; in what condition soever in life he may dwell, aspire for more elevating employment; for a more honorable, and happier condition. But, let him remember, that there is "order" in the Universe; and that one man is often found in circumstances, or position, to which another may not hope to reach, because of his entire unfitness, by want of talent and education.

Let the would-be aspirant, then, look within, and satisfy himself whether, from what he discovers, he may hope to perform the duties which would be required of him; and not place himself blindly, with a ridiculous vanity, in that position, where he should be compelled to require of others the performance of what himself ought to do.

Self-reliance is all important; and children cannot be taught it too soon. Would its necessity were more generally considered.

CHARACTER.—Men are to be estimated, as Johnson says, by the mass of character. A block of tin may have a grain of silver, but still it is tin, and a block of silver may have an alloy of tin, but still it is silver. The mass of Elijah's character was excellence, yet he was not without alloy. The mass of Jehu's character was base, yet he had a portion of zeal which was directed to God's great ends. But men are made the same use of as scaffolds; they are employed as means to erect a building, and then are taken down and destroyed.—[Cecil.

NEVER DESPAIR.—But when the sky becomes dark, and the storm breaks upon you, call Hope to the helm, Patience and determination to the oars, and our word for it, you'll ride the storm and come out on the bright side.

The Character of the Omahas.

The Omahas were once a great and powerful nation; but the destroying angel long since began his desolating ravages upon its greatness—dividing and subdivlding, and destroying until its ancient pride and glory has faded away. They are now weak, degraded idle and vicious—slaves to appetite, passion, fear and want—a willing prey to the whisky seller, for whose gain he voluntarily sacrifices all the hopes and blessings, which civilization and christianity can hold up to their view They seem to be content in their ignorance and degradation. They show no desire to gain a knowledge of the true God, and to secure the blessings of christianity. They make choice of the service of the devil, and are "Lead captive by him at his will." They wallow in their filth, and polution of soul and body, and "glory in their shame." "They drink in iniquity like water"—and are greedy in the practice of those shameful vices that "drowned men in destruction and perdition." They are inured to violence and blood-shed, pilfering and robbery. They are hard hearted, cruel and blood-thirsty, and look upon the practice of revenge as the highest virtue. Such is the present moral character of the Omaha nation.

Many would suppose that a man's life would be in imminent danger among these blood-thirsty and deceitful men. But I have been with them under all circumstances—in prosperity and adversity, in peace and war, when drunk, and when sober—I have sat in their councils, traveled with them, and hunted with them, and ate at their board, and slept in their wigwam.

I felt just as secure among them as though I had been in the heart of a civilized country, surrounded by the bulwarks of human law. I came among them entirely unarmed, and have never possessed the means of injuring or frightenining them. I have refrained from carrying arms as a matter of principle. I considered it safer to put trust in the christian law, than in an arm of flesh.

Christ had told me to "put up my sword," and I believed that it was safe to obey him; and I have always found it so.

My desire to become better acquainted with the character, habits and language of these people, lead me to join them in their semi-annual pilgrimage to the buffalo country last summer. I went depending upon them for food and shelter, and for assistance in crossing the numerous streams along the way. I felt anxious to impress it upon the hard hearts of these poor blood-stained savages that I relied upon the principles of the christian religion, for that security against injury which they sought in the gun, the tomahawk and the scalping knife. That I was utterly opposed to the practice which they followed of taking vengeance upon my enemies. And that fighting and man-killing were anti-christian practices, and called dawn the judgments of God upon those who were guilty of these crimes.

The principles which I had adopted for the regulation of my intercourse with these poor dark-minded, superstitions, hard hearted savages were drawn from the christian code, the essence of which, is, "love to God and man." Those who heartily adopt our Saviors precepts as an unvarying rule of life, have little to fear, even from the most lawless and desperate savages. Kindness to the poor savage insured, as it always will, kindness in return.

I might speak of the kindness of these dark-minded heathen towards me while with them on their buffalo hunt at great length—but shall only mention a few. Many of their practices were exceedingly annoying to me, and made living with them anything but desirable—but there was nothing ill meant. My rights were in all instances strictly regarded. When I needed assistance it was promptly afforded. On one occasion my horse escaped from me, and as he ran, left my saddle-bags, clothing, blankets and saddle along his trail. A young man perceiving my difficulty, immediately started in pursuit of my horse, which he had the good fortune to capture and return to me. He then with the utmost promptness assisted me in finding things and preparing for a new start.

As I traveled along, women and children and even old men, would pick cherries and plumbs and gather various kinds of eatable roots and put them into my hands, until, in some places I was fairly surfeited with good things. I was invited to a great number of feasts, where the best seat and the choicest food was always reserved for me. My inexperience in crossing streams without bridges, made it necessary for me to make frequent calls for assistance, which was always freely granted. When the stream was too deep for fording, they would make a little skin boat with a string attached to it, and held in their teeth. Not being able to swim, I could not have got along at all without this kindness, which was most cheefully rendered, and seemed to be regarded rather as a favor to them than a burden. When out about 525 miles from home, we had the calamity to be attacked by a band of Sioux and Punca warriors. In the contest which followed I lost my horse, and owing to the number lost by the Indians, I found it impossible to procure a horse to assist me in getting home. The only recourse left me was to go home on foot. I made out to get my saddle, blankets and clothes carried for me. My saddle-bags, containing only a few light articles and a little medicine, I concluded to take on to my back; but such was the kindness of my Omaha friends, that men that were bending and sweating along under a load of at least a hundred pounds would offer to relieve me of my burden, by adding it to their own. They finally prevailed on me to have it put on to their horses, and would allow me to carry nothing but my staff.

Sometimes in crossing small streams and slews, they would almost compel me to get on to their backs, and let them carry me safely over, to save me the trouble of taking off my shoes and wading.

The kindness of my Omaha friends greatly strengthened my attachment to them.—and increased my desire to have them become acquainted with the "friend of sinners," and to have them love him, and choose him for their prophet, priest and king. To apply to him for deliverance from selfishness, sensuality, excess, crime, and every form of sin, delusion, degradation, slavery and wretchedness, and to become the "Lord's freemen." D. E. REED.

WEDNESDAY, MAY, 1, 1850.

Spirits.

Much excitement prevails in Western New York concerning the visitation of spirits from the unseen world, said to communicate freely with many people by means of a mysterious rapping or knocking. Our opinion of this singular affair is sought by some who reside in that section.

We are free to give our opinion and to contribute our mite to the diffusion of correct principles according to the ability which we have. Those manifestations are certainly very singular, and are unquestionably made by spiritual and invisible agents.

In this world there are various grades and qualities of spirits, clothed and concealed in mortal flesh. Some are very good, and some are very bad: between these extremes, the space is occupied by every intermediate grade of spirit or intelligence. There are those among them who will avail themselves of unlawful truths, in an unlawful way: For example; a low degraded spirit may eve-drop at his neighbor's window, avail himself of the secret truths of the family and expose them to the public. Contempt and condemnation fall upon him from public opinion, and shame and mortification are the portion of the betrayed family. Yet nothing but the truth was told, just as it was spoken; and that truth was the just condemnation of him who had dishonorably obtained it. A man may steal a guinea, and none can deny that he has the genuine money, and he tells the truth when he declares that he has the guinea: But the fact of his having it, under existing circumstances, proves that his legal reward is condemnation. Suppose you meet a man and speak to him; and ask him some question, and he should begin to rap on the floor, on a table, or upon a bedstead, or even upon the fence? Would you not think the man was a fool, or that he intended to insult you, or that he possessed not the organs of speech? You must certainly conclude that he was inferior to yourself in some important respects; and hence, not qualified to be your teacher.

There is every grade and quality of spirits in the unseen world. Many of them, by stealth, avail themselves of unlawful truths, and expose them unto men; thus is Satan transformed nigh unto an angel of light. The cours of which these wicked spirits take, increases their guilt and condemnation—The astrologers, sooth-sayers, and necromancers of olden time were aided by these familiar spirits. A damsel that followed Paul and declared the truth of his mission, was severely rebuked by that man of God because she was aided by a familiar spirit.

Now, therefore, let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God once spake and said. "Let there be light and there was light." No mysterious rappings or knockings! But when God speaks, light follows. Has he not a mouth, and can he not speak? Are his spiritual or angelic servants without mouths or tongues. How was it in olden time? "Behold we bring you glad tidings of great joy which shall be unto all people." And again: "I am Gabriel that stand in the presence of God, and am sent to show thee these glad tidings! No mysterious rappings or knockings by these true messengers of Heaven. But there was once or more, that a mysterious communication was made upon the wall in the court of Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon:—This was ominous of no good. Let all the true children of the covenant know that, when God speaks to man by any agent for good, he speaks in his own language. God will honor the channel of communication which he, himself, hath ordained and made. But when he intends to visit a people with woe and death, he gives evil angels power, and the destroyer rides forth uncontrolled. Strange sights and fearful noises are heard. The dead are disturbed,—signs and wonders appear!

After the Jews had rejected and killed the Savior, Jerusalem was the theatre of wonders. The heavens shed forth their signs, the jews were divided and fought one against another,—the spirits of the departed groaned and could not rest. This meant no good to Jerusalem! Let the people of Western New York remember, that a true angel from God visited their section some twenty-two or three years ago, but they rejected the message, and the agent who received the celestial visitor has been cruelly martyred in cold blood! And tell them now to beware, lest strong delusion be sent them, and they left to believe a lie, and to believe false and lying spirits, though they may steal some truths to deceive mankind with. "They shall deceive, if it were possible the very elect." Our happy country may be divided as were the Jews, and the spiritual powers move at the scene, and the powers of Heaven be shaken. Let men "fear God and keep his commandments for the hour of his judgments is come!"

"Oh Jerusalem! Jerusalem!! How oft would I have gathered thy children as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings! but ye would not! And now, behold your house is left unto you desolate &c."

It is our unqualified opinion that God, our Heavenly Father, owns not the labors or mission of those spirits in Western New York; and that their mission is ominous of no good to the nation or people. If time does not honor our opinion, then know that the truth is not spoken by us.

Now is the Time.

Every man, woman and child that is able, ought to engage in putting seed into the ground. It has been very dry, and the ground is in excellent order for plowing. It is hoped that the spirit of speculation will not rage to an extent that will cause people to neglect or to forget to put in a crop. Now is the time to do it. Remember that corn is worth $2 00 ₱ bushel, and almost every thing else in proportion! Who will be idle and let the Spring pass away without laying the foundation for a harvest? No one, unless he is sick or a drone. If you have no team, spade up your ground. An industrious family may even raise a crop sufficiently large to support themselves without a team in this fruitful soil. Do not waste your time, but take the spade and go to work in the field. This is better than to be idle. Do not think that work is coming to you without your hunting it up. Farmers, suppose you enlarge your calculations a little, and give poor laboring men employment, and feed them? Aid by your advice and counsel, those who seek places; and think that you can devise some ways and means for the poor without casting the entire burthen and responsibility of these things upon Br. Hyde. Do not refer them to him to avoid the responsibility and trouble yourselves altogether.

Gold Seekers.

There are great numbers of very enterprizing men passing the frontier at this point, and destined for the gold mines of California. They are much earlier this year than last But the season is so very backward that hay and corn are high and scarce. The weather begins to soften a little; yet on Saturday morning last snow and rain fell together in limited quantities.

There are some unprincipled men among the emigrants. They will take corn from the cribs in the night, and faith, chickens from their roosts too; money from the shelf of a washerwoman; and a few nights ago Mr. Ezra Parish, living within two miles of this town, had a very valuable horse stolen from his stable, and supposed to be crossed the river in the night, and driven on over the plains, or taken back by some one who had backed out. We do not wish to cast this odium upon the great body of Californians, yet there are some scaly ones among them.

We have taken every precaution not to have any emigrant or his property disturbed or molested by the citizens here; and so far, we believe we are spotless in this respect; and we hope that examples of too plain and pointed theft will not be set before the citizens here, lest some wreckless, ungovernable, hair-brained chap, may be induced to break over the rules of honesty, and follow the bad example that are set before him. This would be most mortifying to us. Let the thief go and perish in the mines if he will not reform, and let the sufferers bear with patience their loss and disappointment, knowing that the thief shall not be released from his prison until he has paid the utmost farthing. Justice will not relinquish his demands upon the offender though he leave the world: neither will the sufferer go unrequited, though he die before it happen; and the longer it be delayed, the longer will the amount accumulate interest in favor of the sufferer. Remember this!

Horses and cattle are being daily sold here at auction; the presumption is that they are the "bona fide" property of the persons offering them; still we have reason to believe that stolen horses have been sold here. Our citizens would do well to be on their guard; for although they may sell corn at a dollar seventy-five cents per bushel, and buy a stolen horse for fifty dollars, and the owner soon come along and prove property; then you would not make an everlasting fortune by selling corn at these high prices. We have no objection to your buying property here at auction; but be sure that the vender is the legitimate owner of the property.

Tithing.

Why is it that persons who have made from three to eight hundred dollars this season or spring, have no tithing to pay? And why have they concluded to stay here instead of removing to the Valley while they have the means? Stay to get a little better off, and loose what you now have! If you will act in accordance with the faith of this Church, you will pay your tithing, and get ready and remove to the Valley this present season. If you go not when you have the means, you will want to go when you have not the means.

He that neglects plowing and planting a crop this season, if he is able to work, sins against Heaven and Earth, against his brethren and against himself. It is a sin that is almost unpardonable in its character, and must be visited with want, confusion and remorse.

Request.

Will the proprietors of all the ferries across the Missouri River on the western border of Pottawatamie county, keep an account of the number of wagons they cross over during the season, with the average number of men to each wagon as nearly as a close observation will allow them?

Californians.

The number of these adventurers is far greater than the most enthusiastic among us anticipated.—We have ten large stores in the place, and our merchants received pr. last boats, liberal supplies: but they are now out of nearly all the staple articles, and are gone for more. There is one continual stream of emigrants pouring into this county.—They have many fine and valuable horses, oxen and cows without number. The weather is dry and generally very cold for the season, and no grass yet.

What we are all coming to is rather difficult to tell. It is hoped that we may have rain and warm weather soon.

Sir John Franklin.—The New York Tribune says: "The expedition in search of Sir John Franklin will sail from this port in May, and will consist of two schooners suitable for the navigation of the Arctic Seas, of 70 to 90 tons burden. The command of the expedition has been tendered to Lieut DeHaven, who was attached to the Exploring Expedition, who has accepted the trust. Passed Midshipman Griffin will be second in command. A party has gone east to select the vessels for this expedition.

Changing Places of Residence.

To insure attention to your wishes, come to the office yourself and get the direction of your paper changed. Persevere and see that it is done before you leave. What directions you give us, in the street, we often forget before we get into the office Send us directions in writing, or come yourselve and the book keeper will attend to your wishes.

Counsel.

Some time ago we published our counseland advice to the poor abroad not to flock here unless they came with those who would provide for em till they could provide for themselves. We pmised that just so soon as we were in a conditi to receive the poor, set them to work and feed tem, we would let it be known. The teams are onstantly leaving this section of country for the West; and poor people constantly coming here wihout means to buy either bread or teams, find themsves awkwardly situated. People cannot live alwa on the breath of excitement, nor upon the gusts enthusiasm: Natural Philosophy, says they ust have a little "dodger and bacon to help out. We foresaw the condition that the poor would be in, if they indiscriminately flocked here now, wihout securing a provider before they came, and we ave cousel accordingly; and we now ask those who have taken the responsibility of counsellingthe poor to flock here contrary to the best wiom emanating from this place, to repair forth-wa to this point and take the presidency of the poo to provide for them, furnish them homes, laboand food, until they can learn the true state of thgs, and not to run before they are sent.

We have received some speeches of Hon. Messrs. Mann, Seward and others: public document&c. These gentlemen will please accept our thanl for these favors. While we are not disposed to ater the field of public strife upon the subject oSlavery, it is our opinion that the abolitionists o the North can hardly find a more able and powerfuadvocate than they have in the person of Honorble Horace Mann of Massachusetts. Whereunto i the agitation of this Slavery question tending? Popular excitements are to be dreaded like the tornado and the hurricane. They carry ruin and desolation in their course, and it might be wisdom to step aside a little and let them spend their violence alone.

Grievances!

There are some persons who claim to think that the presidency of the church in Pottawatamie county seeks to take away the individual rights of men. The position of the presiding officer in relation to these alleged individual rights, was definitely and fully explained, and also before the General Conference on the 7th day of April last his general position in relation to all church matters. His course was unanimously approved! and so overwhelming was the tide of influence in his favor, and so clearly was the justice and rectitude of his course made manifest, that by loud acclamation he was sustained in his office without a dissenting voice.

We feel no desire to oppress any man, neither to abridge his rights or privileges, unless he claims rights and privileges that are incompatable with the interests and credit of the Church, and with the interests and welfare of its members. If they claim such rights, Bro. Hyde will be very apt to speak, and will not be intimidated by any bluster, neither by threats of carrying matters to the Valley to be settled. Br. Hyde is willing to meet his official acts in the Valley or here. He is willing to meet them on earth or in Heaven. Or in any other place. A conscience void of offence, and a heart set to do right, sweep away every fearful foreboding.

Disfellowshipped.

William B. Marshall, of Savannah, Mo., for idleness, intemperance, and gambling. Let some others take warning by this, lest the same thing happen to them for similar offences. Bros. Comfort, Young and others reported a desperate case from near Oregon, equally worthy of disfellowship; but their letter is mislaid or lost.

The Mormon Coins

Have just been received, through a gentleman who came overland from Great Salt Lake in eighty-one days. They consist of 20, 10, 5, and 2½ dollar pieces. In fineness they are about 899 thous., with little variation; and they contain only the native silver alloy. The weights are more irregular, and the values very deficient. The 20 dollar piece weighs from 436 to 453 grains, value $16 90 to $17 53. The 10 dollar, 219 to 224 grains, $8 50 to $870. The 5 dollar, about 111 grains, $4 30. The 2½ dollar, about 58 grains, $2 25.

On one side of the coins is Holiness to the Lord, with a large eye, and something like a mitre; on the other, two hands in friendly grasp, with the date 1849, and a legend containing the alleged value, and the initials G. S. L. C. P. G., meaning Great Salt Lake City, Pure Gold. The ten dollar piece has Pure Gold, in full.

Schools.

Although we have frequently spoke of the necessity of having our children taught in the various things appertaining to their welfare in this world, and that to come, still we feel a great anxiety on the subject, seeing many children among the disciples, are deprived of, or do not enjoy the blessing of a school.

If children are to be brought up in the way they should go, to be good citizens here, and happy hereafter, they must be taught. It is idle to suppose, that children will grow up good, while surrounded with wickedness, without cultivation. It is folly to suppose they become learned without education. And it is vain to think they may be saved in the the kingdon of God, without salvation.

As soon as our father Adam was born of the water and the spirit, he received a commandment to teach his children; and, as soon as the church was called to prepare for the Lord, in these last days, the fathers and mothers in Israel, were commanded to teach their children the plan of salvation; to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord.

In order to do this as it should be, it is necessary that children should be taught in the rudiments of common learning out of the best books; and then, as they grow up they can be qualified to search the scriptures, and acquire the knowledge of the Lord, become heirs of the kingdom, and, guided by the Holy Spirit, which is a never failing promise to the saints, they will walk in all the commandments of the Lord blameless, in thanksgiving forever.

Brethren, if you want your children to be useful, industrious, temperate, humane, meek and charitable, teach them so; if you want them to be prayerful, watchful, and godly, teach them so; and if you want them saved in celestial kingdom, teach them faithfully the doctrines of that kingdom, and they will soon come to the day, that they will grow up without sin unto salvation, and walk with God where the wicked will not trouble.

List of California Emigrants that have arrived on this Frontier.

They are all apparently in good health and spirits, and eager for the mines. Persons receiving this number who are not regular subscribers to the paper, will please run over this list of names, and they will probably find their husband's name, the name of a son or brother, cousin, friend or old acquaintance. There are many emigrants who have arrived here whose names are not in this list. They can all have their names registered in the next number of the Guardian if they wish, and a copy sent back to any friend, for one dime each.

New Orleans, March 29,

A serious fire occurred to-day, destroying two hotels, and nine other buildings, in Triangle Square. Loss, $800,000 — part insured.

New Books.

A good supply of Hymn Books, Books of Mormon, and Books of Doctrine and Covenants, just received from England, and for sale at this office

California Coins.—A volume recently published on the subject of coins, speaking of the recent Mormon and California coins, says the $20 Mormon pieces are worth only from $16 90 to $17 53; the $10, from $8 50 to $8 70; the $5, about $4 30; the $2½, about $2 25. The California $5 pieces range in value from $4 82 up to as high as $4 96. They are therefore both of less value than the coins of the United States.

Trial of the Montesquions.—The trial of these unfortunate brothers was commenced at St. Louis, on Monday last.

The principal defence will be insanity testimony to establish which has been procured from their native country — France, as well as from different places in this state, in which they temporarily resided last summer.

In St. Louis, on the 20th ult., the large boot store of McAllister & Co., was destroyed by fire. Loss over $30,000; partly covered by insurance.

Congressional.

WASHINGTON, April 4,—6 P. M.

SENATE.—The Vice President appointed a committee of arrangements for the removal of the remains of John C. Calhoun, and they will proceed to South Carolina and perform the last sad duties to the dead.

The Senate then took up Mr. Bell's compromise resolutions. Mr. Underwood resumed and concluded his remarks. He defended the institution of slavery from the charge of being sinful; he called upon the North to cooperate with the South in a measure which shall seperate the white and black races, the only practicable plan for the extirpation of the objectionable institution; he advocated the neccessity of passing some stringent laws for the recapture of fugitive slaves; he admitted the power of Congress to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia, but denied the moral right so to do. In conclusion, Mr. Underwood said he would speak upon Mr. Clay's resolution at some future day.

Mr. Corwin made a few remarks in reply to Mr. Underwood, defending the statutes of Ohio relating to the penalties for kidnapping. After a few additional remarks by Mr. Hale in reply to Mr. Underwood, Mr. Foote moved to postpone the further consideration of the subject until to-morrow, intimating his intention then to press upon the Senate his motion for a select committee.

WASHINGTON, April 1, 5 P. M.

SENATE.—Mr. Butler, in some beautiful and eloquent remarks, announced the death of John C. Calhoun. Resolutions of condolence were passed and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—Messrs. Holmes, Winthrop and Venable, paid a glowing tribute to the memory of Mr. Calhoun. The resolutions passed and the House adjourned.

WEDNESDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

SENATE.—A message was received from the President relative to instructions given the agent employed to visit Hungary during the recent war between that country and Austria.

Mr. Crawford, Secretary of War, had asked for a prompt and full investigation of his conduct in relation to Caulpin's claim. A motion was adopted to appoint a committee of nine to investigate the matter.

HOUSE.—Mr. McClernand submitted to the House a plan for compromising the existing difficulties, it varies but little from Mr. Bell's in the Senate.

The Speaker appointed a committee of nine, on a letter received from the Secretary of War, asking an investigation of his conduct in settling the Caulpin claims.

The committee on elections reported unfavorably to allow U. N. Smith and A. W. Babbitt, delegates from New Mexico and Deseret, seats in the House. Report referred to the committee of the whole and made the special order for the 27th of April.

The House went into committee on the California message. Mr. Greene spoke favorably; he would go for the Missouri compromise line, and admission of California on certain conditions. Mr. Spalding vindicated the Administration. Mr. Wallace obtained the floor, when the committee rose and the house adjourned.

Foreign News.

By Telegraph.

ARRIVAL OF THE EUROPA.

Fourteen days Later from Europe.

HALIFAX, April 3—3 P. M.

The Europa arrived at 2½ o'clock this afternoon. All descriptions of cotton except fair and good, have declined ¼d; fair and upland 6 3-8d; Mobile 6 3-8; Orleans 6 7-8. Sales for the fortnight 56,000 bales, of which speculators have taken 7,500, and exported 10,000. Sale of 20,000 bales. Cotton in London is down 6d from the top price a few weeks ago. The corn market is steady; yellow has advanced 6d, white unchanged, but firmer. Flour unchanged.

The money market is firmer and the bullion in the Bank of England has increase. Consuls closed at 95½ for money and account. American securities are said to be firm, but we have no quotations.

Trade in the manufacturing districts, not good.

The latest advices from India are not so encouraging as was expected. From the continent there is little intelligence of moment.

The latest accounts from Havre give remarkably favorable accounts of the cotton market, with much steadiness in prices.

All was tranquil in France, and the elections have passed of quietly.

England.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has presented the budget for the ensuing year, and although he had the pleasure of announcing a surplus of nearly two and a half millions, still, the manner in which that surplus had been disposed of, is anything but satisfactory to the country. Ministers are said to hold their offices by very precarious tenures.

Foreign News per Europa.

The news has been delayed in consequence of a derangement of the eastern wires.

Austria and Hungary.

Five columns of the "Pesth Zeitung" are filled with the sentences passed by the Court Martial upon persons who had been compromised in the late Hungarian revolution. All the sentences of death have been commuted to terms of imprisonment in irons, for periods of 12 and 16 years.

An inundation of the Danube has caused immense injury in Hungary, especially at Comorn Raab, and the Taaspa districts; 15,000 persons have taken refuge at Raab.

The greatest distraction prevailed in Germany at the opening of the Chamber. The King of Wirtemberg declared that the unitarian state of Germany will be nothing but a chimera, and that if attempted to be carried out, would lead to the separation and dissolution of Germany itself.

It is reported that a Congress of German Sovereigns will be held in April, at Dresden, to hold a council on German matters. The Emperor of Austria, and the Kings of Prussia, Hanover, and Saxony, will be present.

Denmark and the Duchies.

Advices from Boston state that the Rouche had returned from a mission to the Duchies of Schleswig-Holstein, having failed in his object, and that an understanding is more remote than ever.

Prussia.

From Boston we learn that the negotiations between the courts of Austria and Prussia, for the definitive formation of a constitution for the Central Government of Germany, have entirely failed.

France.

The news from Paris, of Tuesday and Wednesday, was of a more tranquil character than for some days past, and all appearances of an emeute are at an end.

More of the Stolen Poll Book—Miller's Election Confirmed.

We have learned the result of the late examination at Kanesville. After being engaged about ten days in a most searching investigation as to the legality of the votes given to Miller, Judge Kinney, J. C. Hall & Co., did not succeed in showing that Miller had received even one illegal vote in that county. Their own testimony, on the cross examination, showed the justice of Miller's cause so clearly, that he did not think it worth while to take any rebutting testimony, except that of J. C. Hall. Hall swears that he don't know who took the Poll Books out of the Clerk's office; but that after they were taken they were placed in his saddle bags, and that he gave them to Thompson. He implies a certain editor not far from this place in the affair, whose agency will be made apparent, when the deposition is printed by order of Congress. Their own proof showed that there were over 800 legal voters in Pottawatamie, when the election was held, and that the Sheriff of Monroe County, with other prominent leaders of the Locofoco party in Iowa, was present at the Kanesville Polls during the election, harranguing for Thompson and handing out his tickets. It showed, too, that the three Commissioners of Monroe county who created the precinct at Kanesville, were Democrats, and that they, with their Clerk, supported Thomson.

A large amount of evidence was taken, and it is altogether in favor of Miller. The fact that Selman, who was one of the Cass Electors, and Bonney, who was Secretary of State, with other prominent Locofocos made a pilgrimage to Kanesville a few days before the election, and remained there four days electioneering for the Locofoco ticket, and that one of their number—Townsend—had money given him to pay expenses, &c. &c., is most clearly proven by this investigation.

After such proof, brought to light by themselves, every one must see the inconsistency of the Locos in stultifying their own action by attempting to prove that Kanesville was not a legal precinct. It will not win; and when the evidence that has just been taken is presented to the Committee in Congress, they cannot do otherwise than award the seat so long usurped and kept warm by Thompson to Daniel F. Miller.—[Hawk-Eye.

Dr. Webster's Sentence.

BOSTON, Monday, April 1.

It is understood that the jury, after going out on Saturday night, at first deliberated in silence for ten minutes, then voted on the question whether the remains were those of Dr. Parkman, there was an unanimous "yes" On the second question, whether Webster murdered him, there were 11 yeas and 1 nay; the nay came from B. Greene who stated two points of doubt; after some discussion, he declared it removed.

Mr. Webster's family was not informed of the verdict the night it was received, the awful disclosure was made to them on Sunday morning by Mr. Wm. E. Prescott, the scene was most heart-rending. A letter of condolence was presented on Sunday afternoon, signed by the heads of the principal families in Cambridge, including Hon. Edward Everett, Jared Sparks, Professor Norton, Judge Fay, &c. Judge Fay confessed that he thought his friend Webster was a guilty man after hearing his own speech on Saturday Webster was brought into Court this morning to receive his solemn sentence, he looked gloomy in the extreme, but collected and calm; the court room was densely crowded. The Court came in at ten o'clock, the Attorney General Clifford, narrated the facts of indictment, trial and verdict, and moved the Court that final sentence be now pronounced.

The prisoner rose, and was asked by the clerk what he had to say why should not be pronounced against him; the prisoner bowed and took his seat in silence. Chief Justice Shaw then addressed him, and in conclusion said, "and now nothing remains but the solemn duty of pronouncing the sentence which the law fixes for the crime of murder, of which you stand convicted, which sentence is, that you, J. W. Webster, be removed from this place, and be detained in close custody in the prison of this county, and thence taken at such time as the Executive government of this commonwealth may, by their warrant appoint, to the place of execution, and there be hung by the neck until you are dead; and may God in his infinite goodness, have mercy on your soul.

NEW YORK, April 6—5 P. M.

The Empire City, arrived from Chagres last night, brought about $1,000,000. No material facts stated in the San Francisco papers, by Cherokee, beyond those mentioned in telegraphic dispatches yesterday. The Legislature was still in session, doing little; many complaints are made in consequence of members' resignations. The rivers in California had fell subsided to their ordinary level. In the mining regions everything was quiet; some new diggings are reported. Miners are pouring into the gold region, and there was an abundant supply of provisions. The present population of Upper California is estimated at 100,000. The general health good. In markets there was not much doing, the tightness of the money market checking operations.

WASHINGTON, April 1st.

The Honorable John C. Calhoun died at his residence, on Capitol Hill, at 10 minutes past 7 o'clock Sunday morning.

BALTIMORE, April 6—P. M.

Saddler & Son's Jewelry store was entered on Saturday night, and robbed of goods worth $6,000, including 100 gold watches.

LOUISVILLE, April 8—6 P. M.

The Baltimore Sun gives an outline of Benton's bill for a railroad from St. Louis to the Bay of San Francisco with branch roads to New Mexico, Oregon and Salt Lake. It sets apart the proceeds of sales of public lands. The breadth of one mile of public land is appropriated to the central road, and one thousand feet to branch roads; on each line to be constructed a railroad, common road and Telegraph lines; common roads to be free of toll, and railroads to be taxed sufficient to keep them in repair.

Indian titles to be extinguished on the routes to the breadth of 100 miles—military stations to be established—every male settler over 18 years of age, who settles on the line of the road or branches, within one year after the extinguishment of the Indian title, to receive 100 acres, and those who settle afterwards pre-emption rights to the same extent—surveys of the best route to be made—the common road to be completed in one year and the central in seven years after located. The use of the railway to be granted to individuals or companies, for a limited time, who shall contract to transport mails, munitions of war, and all public and private freights, at reasonable rates.

WASHINGTON, April 1,—5 P. M.

The last words uttered by Mr. Calhoun were, "I am resting now very easily." None of his family save one son was present. Mr. Venable, of North Carolina, who occupied the next room, was called, and came in. Mr. Calhoun extended his hand; his eyes were very bright, and he was perfectly conscious, but did not speak. Mr. Venable found that he had no pulse, and poured out part of a glass of Madeira wine, he raised his head, drank it, and then sank back upon his pillow. Mr. Orr, and Mr. D. Wallace, of S. C., came in, when the door closed, Mr. Calhoun turned his eyes in that direction and was perfectly conscious of everything that passed, he squeezed his son's hand convulsively, his lips moved and his eyes were very expressive, his voice could not be heard, and when some one leaned over him, as if to listen, he moved his head, as if to say, I cannot speak.

His breathing was very hard until five minutes before his death, one hand rested upon his breast, he raised the other and placed it once or twice upon his head, probably the last rush of blood pained him; when the breath left the body, it was like a long drawn sigh, it was the last and all was over. He died as easy as an infant, and was perfectly conscious until the last spark of life had fled.

His funeral will take place on Tuesday. The body will be placed in a metalic coffin and deposited in a vault in the Congressional burying ground, where two of his children are buried, and remain there until the wishes of Mrs. Calhoun are known.

A committee of the NewYork Assembly, in their report on intemperance in the State, estimate the amount annually expended for drinks, at 7,000 grog-shops existing in the cities of that State, exclusive of villages, at upwards of twenty-five millions of dollars. They have collected statistics from the various city and county prisons, with the exception of twenty-three, whence no returns have been received, which prove that upwards of 36,000 intemperate persons were arrested in 1849, and that from four-fifths to nine-tenths of all the crime committed had its origin in intemperance.

A CALIFORNIA WIDOW.—A woman named Harriett S. Mott, alias Jackson, was arrested at New York, on Tuesday with a man named John A. Jackson, with whom she had been living since the departure of her husband for California, though he had remitted her money at different times since, once $700, which she had duly received.

MR. WEBSTER'S CHAIN.—We saw, on Saturday, a chain of California gold, which is to be presented to Mr. Webster in acknowledgment of his eminent services in the cause of the union of the States. It is, indeed, emblematic of that strong chain, forged by our ancestors, which Mr. Webster has done more than any other man living to rivet and strengthen, which binds together this great confederacy of States into one united republic—so solid it is, so strong, so massive. Such an ornamental appendage, on any other man than Mr. Webster, would look burdensom and inappropriate; but it is quite in harmony with the strength and greatness of the "Defender of the Constitution." It is also a fitting tribute from a resident of California, a state whose application for immediate admission into the Union Mr. Webster has promised to advocate, with all the weight of his powerful influence.

The chain is of pure gold, of a value exceeding four hundred dollars as it came from the mines. Its workmanship reflects much credit on Californian skill. It was manufactured for the donor, Mr. George W. Eggleston, at San Francisco. It should be called "Mr. Webster's Union Chain." Our citizens will have an opportunity of seeing it for a few days, at Ball, Tompkin's and Black's, corner of Broadway and Murray streets, where it had been sent.—N. Y. Jour. Com.

SINGULAR LUMINOUS APPEARANCE.—Capt. Purkis, arrived this morning from Porto Cabello, reports that on the 12th of February, in latitude 14d 10m and longitude 64d-58m, at eight o'clock P. M., he observed a luminous appearance in the heavens resembling a large ball of fire, about ten feet in diameter. It appeared in the west, moving eastward, rather slowly, and was in sight a little more than a minute. It appeared to travel about ten degrees high, and during its continuance the heavens were illumined with a brightness nearly equal to that of noonday. When disappearing it broke into a thousand pieces.—N. Y. Com. Adv., 15th.

HORRIBLE REVENGE.—The Galena Jeffersonian says, among the overland emigrants for California last spring, was Mr. Green, of "Green's Woollen Factory," Fox River, and two of his sons, the youngest a youth. It is reported that, while passing through a tribe of Indians, this young man, naturally full of mischief, killed a squaw. The tribe, having become well advised of the fact, hastened after the company and overtook them, and demanded the murderer. At first the demand was resisted; but after the Indians had informed them that the would destroy the company if their request was not granted, the youth was surrendered into their hands. They then stripped him, and in the presence of his father, and the whole company, they skinned him from his head to his feet. He lived four hours after he was thus flayed.

NEW YORK, April 5—2 P. M.

The Cherokee arrived from Chagres this morning, bringing San Francisco dates to March 1st, and nearly $2,000,000 in gold. Digging has commenced with the dry season, and had give an impulse to busines.

The steamers Oregon and Tennessee had arrived at Panama.

A large fire broke out at Chagres on the night of the 23d of March, which destroyed the greater portion of the town.

The ship Europa and brig J. Pierce, from Philadelphia, and brigs Osprey and Amazon, from Boston, had arrived at San Francisco.

COUNCIL BLUFFS FERRY,

Across the Missouri River.

THIS Ferry chartered by the Legislature of the State of Iowa, and licensed by the Superintendant of Indian affairs, has been in successful operation for the last year. We are now prepared with good boats and experienced watermen to cross emigrants with safety and despatch. The location and facilities of this crossing are too well known to require a description at our hands. The fact of its being under the eye of the Agent and approved by the Indians to whom we make Semi-Annual payments for the privilege of having a road through their country, ensures their good will towards the Emigrants. The North side of Platte river is now acknowledged to be the Healthiest, Nearest and Best route to the gold mines. We can cross at Council Bluffs, one hundred or more teams per day, having three good boats.

NEW GOODS!

A. SORLEY,

St. Joseph, Missouri,

IS now receiving a splendid lot of SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS, of every description, of the Latest Style and Patterns. And is prepared to offer Great Inducements to all who may favor him with a call. His stock comprises a general assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, and Bonnets. Also, a large and well selected assortment of Iron and nails.

My plan is to sell for CASH ONLY, and at a small advance on cost; the rate charged for goods at my store, will contrast largely with prices paid by those who buy on time. Many place an undue importance on the credit system, unmindful of the fact, that constitutes a nominal profit, yet when compared with the invariable cash system it is a positive loss.

Selling on time is hazardous under the best circumstances. Those who sell on time must buy on time. Therefore, I will say to my old customers and the public generally, that you will save much by calling and examining my Stock of Goods before purchasing.

Linden, April 3, 1850.

To Oregon, California, Salt Lake Emigrants and the Trading Community generally.

PERRYS & YOUNG

WOULD respectively announce that they are now receiving at their old stand on MAIN STREET, ST. JOSEPH, direct from the Eastern markets, the largest stock of dry goods, groceries; hardware; queensware, &c., ever brought to the West. Comprising French and English broadcloths, of every variety; plain and fancy cassimeres; suttinets; blankets; calicoes; domestics; boots and shoes; hats and caps; knives and forks; picks and shovels; tea; sugar; coffee; molasses; salt; spun cotton; dye stuffs; rope; castings, &c., &c.

We will have on hand in a few days a large and well assorted stock of

READY MADE CLOTHING,

Purchased by one of the proprietors, who by long experience, is well acquainted with the wants of the emigrant.

Your attention is also invited to a large lot of

DRY CLARIFED SUGAR,

Warranted to keep in any climate.

All persons who make this place their starting point, (and all who act wisely will do so for many reasons,) would find it much to their own interest to give us a call, before purchasing elsewhere, as we feel confident that they can find goods in our stock better suited to their wants and at lower prices than in any other House in Upper Missouri. As all persons procuring outfits, will necessarily remain in town a few days, we invite them to call and look at our goods as it will be a pleasure to us to show them And they will have the man opportunity of judging for themselves. POETRY.

From the Saturday Evening Post.

Perseverance.

BY C. N. FINE.

Young man, toiling on obscurely,
Struggling 'guinst an obscure tide,
With a high and honest purpose,
Which the mocking crowd deride;
Faint not, fear not, brave the current,
Face the storm, however rude;
Truth will triumph, thou wilt conquer,
God will ne'er forsake the good.

Do the proud deride thy calling,
Mock thy efforts at the start,
With a scolding coldness, galling
To thy proud and honest heart?
PERSEVERE! attain a station
With the gifted and the great,
Those who now scorn thy vocation,
Then will gladly kiss the feet.

Has the 'venomed breath of slander
On thy lowly fame been blown,
From the serpent-soul of envy,
That would keep the worthy down?
PERSEVERE! With manly patience,
Time will heal the pain you feel,
From thy name such taint may vanish,
As thy breath from burnished steel.

For encouraging example,
Scan the names on history's page —
Those who most their race have honored,
Giving glory to their age;—
Names of Newton, and of Franklin,
And a thousand more as bright;
Names that gain increasing glory,
With the world's increasing light.

PERSEVERE! unceasing effort,
Humble, though, and weak it be,
May o'ercome whate'er opposes,
And work miracles for thee;
Be assured reward will follow,—
God will come to him who delves,
Honest industry must prosper;—
"God helps those who help THEMSELVES."

Love that Dieth Not.

BY T. J. OUSELEY.

Love not alone the gay,
The beautiful, the bright;
For youth will fade away,
Like day beams into night.
But love the heart that's pure,
How plain soe'er the face;
Such love will long endure,
Such love cannot debase.

Love not alone on earth
Those transient things of life,
Who like the rainbow's birth
Soon fade midst shadowy strife.
But love the power that made
All that to man is given,
Whose spirit doth pervade
The universal heaven.

Love all things, great and small,
From man to tiny flower;
Created they were all
By an Almighty power.
For "God is Love," we know,
Whate'er may be our lot,
In life, then, let us sow
The Love that dieth not.

MISCELLANY.

Goudbrand of the Mountain.

A NORWEGIAN LEGEND.

There was once a man whose name was Goudbrand. He owned a little farm situated on the declivity of a mountain, which fact gave him the name of Goudbrand of the Mountain. He lived upon such good terms with his wife, they were so happy together, that all that he did, seemed to the tender hearted woman, well done. If at any time he committed some foolish act, dame Goudbrand always managed to find something good in it. These good people owned a little piece of arrable land, three hundred dollars in their strong box, and two cows in their stable.

One fine day, the wife said to the husband, "Goudbrand, I believe we would do better to take one of our cows to the city and sell it, and get a little money. We are so comfortable now, that we ought to have a little spending money like our neighbors. We must not touch the three hundreds dollars in the strong box; but I do not see what we want with more than one cow. Besides, in disposing of one of them, I will gain the advantage of having only one beast to take care of, in place of two."

Goudbrand agreed with his wife; the idea seemed to him excellent and he immediately prepared to set out for the city with the cow. But it happened that when he got there nobody wanted his cow. Well, said Goudbrand, I suppose I must take her back again then. Her stable is ready for her and the way is not longer going than coming." So saying, he quietly consoled himself, and turned towards home. On the road he met a man who had a horse to sell, and was sending it to the city by a little boy.

"Hold," exclaimed Goudbrand; "it would be better to have a horse than a second cow!" and, therefore, he made an exchange with the man.

Going along a little farther, he found himself in company with a man driving a fat pig. Then Goudbrand thought that a fat pig was better than a lame horse, for he had discovered that his new bargain was thus afflicted. He talked a little while to the owner of the pig, and the exchange of the two animals was finally effected.

Pursuing his course very happily, Goudbrand met another man leading a goat. "Certainly," said Goudbrand, "a beautiful graceful goat, it is to be preferred to a stubborn, grunting pig," and the third time he made a change.

Not far from there he saw a man carrying a sheep on his shoulders, and nothing could satisfy our Goudbrand, but a new exchange; for "certainly," said he, "a beautiful sheep is better than a poor goat."

At last he came, face to face, with a man driving before him a goose; and the good Goudbrand changed his sheep which he found a heavy weight upon his shoulders, for the goose, which seemed easier to manage. After this great feat, he walked along some time, until he met with a cock. An exchange was again made, for, said he, "who would not rather have a cock, with a gay plumage, and song like a warrior, than a silly goose, whose cackling grates upon the ear, and which always walks so waddling."

After this he pursued his way until the day began to decline. At this moment he commenced to feel the gnawings of hunger, and having no money in his pocket, he sold his cock, and bought with the proceeds something to eat; for, thought Goudbrand of the mountain, "it is better to satisfy the cravings of my stomach, and go home feeling well, than to get there exhausted, and be the possessor of a cock." Thereupon he proceeded on his way until he reached the farm of his nearest neighbor, where he stopped to rest himself, just at the moment when the farm-boy was driving in the cattle.

"Well," said his friend; "what good luck have you had in the city, Goudbrand?"

"Oh, nothing," replied the latter; "however, I do not complain."

And he related to his neighbor, all that he had done.

"You think you risk nothing, friend," said the farmer; your wife will scold you well, as soon as you get home. Diable, if I would like to be in your skin."

"Notwithstanding all," said Goudbrand, "things might have gone worse; but, good or bad, I have an excellent wife, who never reproaches me, no matter what I do."

"It may be true, but I do not believe it."

"Will you bet that my wife will not make me the least reproach," said Goudbrand. "I have a hundred dollars in my strong box. They shall be yours if my wife blames me. Will you bet the same sum?"

"Agreed," said the farmer. "One hundred dollars!"

And as it was now quiet dark, they went towards Goudbrand's farm. The neighbor remained just outside the door where he could hear every thing, and Goudbrand entered the house.

"Good evening wife," said he.

"Good evening, my friend," replied the wife. "God be thanked for your safe return."

Then she asked him if he had made a good bargain in the city.

"So, so," replied Goudbrand. "I cannot boast much of my good fortune. Upon reaching the city I found that nobody would buy my cow, so I exchanged it for a horse."

"Good," exclaimed the wife, "I am glad of that. Persons as easy in their circumstances as we have a right to go to church on horseback like others; and if we have had the sense to get a horse, why cannot we do this? Go along, good man, and bring the horse that I may see him."

"Stop a minute," said Goudbrand; "I hav'nt any horse, for on the way I changed him for a pig."

"Really!" cried the wife, "that is just what I should have done in your place! Thanks, good man! now I can offer a piece of ham to our friends when they come to see us. In fact, what should we have done with a horse? The neighbors would have gossipped about us, saying that we were too grand to go on foot to church as formerly. I will go, good man, and see the pig."

"Not so fast," said Goudbrand, "I have not got any pig, for coming along I exchanged him for a milch goat."

"Bah!" said the wife, "really you are a sensibly man! For when I think of it, what do we want of a pig! The neighbors would have said: "Those people eat their corn before it is ripe. But now that I have a goat, I will have milk and goat's cheese, which is so good. Bring on your goat."

"No," said Goudbrand, "there is no more goat there than on the back of my hand; for I gave it for a beautiful sheep."

"Strange," said the wife, "you anticipate all my wishes. I could not have done better myself. The goat really would have embarrassed me; I should have had to watch it constantly, here and there, climb and run down the hill after it. But on the contrary, with a sheep, I shall have not only wool to spin into cloth for winter, but besides something to eat. Let us see your sheep."

"But I have not any sheep either," said Goudbrand, "for coming along, I exchanged it for a goose!"

"Bravo! better and better," said the wife; "of what use would a sheep have been to me, since I have neither wheel nor distaff, and since I do not care to spin wool for clothes which we can buy as we have always done. At last I shall taste a goose; it is so long since I have eaten such royal food; and the feathers will do to make me a pillow. Come quick and show me the goose."

"Alas! I have no goose," said Goudbrand; "I changed it for a cock!"

"Heaven only knows who inspires thee with such good ideas," said the wife. "You have done just right. Why, a cock is as good as a clock; for he will crow every morning at four o'clock, to tell us it is time to get up. The goose would have been of no use, for I do not know how to cook a goose; and as to the pillow, a straw one is just as good. Go, husband, you have done all well; go, bring me the cock."

"Alas! the cock will also be wanting at the call," replied Goudbrand, "for I had not gone far when I was seized with such hunger that I was forced to sell the cock and buy something to keep me from fainting."

"And you did perfectly right," exclaimed the wife, "you always do just what I like. Besides, what need have we of a cock? We are our own masters, thank God! and we can get up when we please; and since you are returned safe and well to your wife, you who do every thing for her. I have need of neither cock nor goose, nor goat, nor sheep, nor pig, nor horse, nor of two cows."

Upon this, Goudbrand called out from the door, "Have I won the hundred dollars?"

And the neighbor was forced to admit they were won, and well won.

WHO BIDS?—A young lady advertises in the Cleveland Plaindealer for a young gentleman to act as an amanuensis. He must be able to write in ciphers, snd when not thus engaged, he will be expected to read poetry with feeling, converse with ease, and be able to play cribbage and backgammon. He must expect to be kissed when she is pleased, and cuffed when she is not; but as her temper is acknowladged to be good, there will probably be more kissing than cuffing.—There's a good chance for somebody.

That lady ought to be a grandmother by this time—we first met with her proposal so long ago!

They who weep over errors were not formed for crimes.

Major Noah, who is a Jew, discourses as follows of Ophir, from which the gold was obtained to build the Temple of Solomon:

CALIFORNIA SUPPOSED TO BE OPHIR.—In estimating the amount of gold which was brought from Ophir, I find it stated in Kings 1, chapter ix, verse xxviii, that they came to Ophir and took from thence 420 talents of gold; but Chronicles 2, chapter viii, verse xviii, it is stated that they took 450 talents of gold. How do you account for this discrepancy, and where do you fix Ophir? The talents of Ophir and Jerusalem varied sufficiently to account for difference; or they may have taken 450 talents at Ophir and expended 30 in paying for the service of King Hiram's ships and crews. Archbishop Usher calculates the silver shekel at 2s 6d sterling; and 100,000 talents of silver at that rate amounts to 36,250,000, which being multiplied by twelve, the proportion of silver to gold will give the sum of £435,000,000. The whole expense of building and furnishing the Temple of Solomon, for which this gold was brought from Ophir, £838,477,365 sterling — more than the national debt of Great Britain. If Ophir was a three years voyage from the Red Sea, then it was not in Africa or the Indian Ocean, which was within sixty days journey. In the oldest maps of California, San Francisco is laid down as the "Gold Gates," which is a scripture phrase. We can find no other location but California for Ophir.

HINTS ON CONVERSATION. — Conversation ought to be mental music, in which diversity of thought in the unity of humanity makes the harmony of the soul. Amenity and propriety are the essential conditions. A march would not be music in a church, nor an anthem in a ball-room. But schisms like these are often the bane of conversation.

A man to talk well must believe and be believed. The clould of suspicion is like the valley of the shadow of death. The scowl of a doubt is like the sight of a hawk to the song of a bird. To be just is to be tolerant, and to be tolerant is to be gentle.

A sharp, captious, unscrupulous intellect produces an atmosphere that is poisonous to the natural flow of conversation. The man of such an intellect is a gladiator, steeped to eye in fight, cunning of fence, master of his weapon, and merciless in its use. He wields the sword of a spirit, but not of a holy one, which is sharp to wound and often to pierce the defenceless and unoffending.—[Giles.

HOW TO BE RICH.—Getting rich is usually thought to be a hard, up-hill task—especially in these times. A modern philosopher, however, has shown that nothing is easier, provided one will only take the right steps:

"It is only to trust nobody—to befriend none; to get everything, and save all we get; to stint ourselves and everybody belonging to us; to be the friend of no man, and have no man your friend; to heap interest upon interest, cent upon cent; to be mean, miserable and despised, for some 20 or 30 years, and riches will come as sure as disease and disappointment. And when pretty nearly enough wealth is collected by a disregard of all the charities of the human heart, and at the expense of every enjoyment, save that of wallowing in filthy meanness, death comes to finish the work—the body is buried in a hole, the heirs dance over it, and the spirit goes—where?"

Jeems, did you ever enjoy the ecstatic bliss of courting?"

"No, I can't say as I ever did."

"You didn't? Then you'd better get a little gal-an-try."

STATISTICS OF THE JEWS. — An official publication informs us that there are hardly more than 4,000,000 to 5,000,000 Jews in the whole world, whereas Buddhism numbers 400,000,000 adepts; Brahmism, 200,000,000; Christianity, 230,000 to 250,000,000; Mahometanism, from 130,000,000 to 150,000,000; and Fetishism, (or pur-idolatry,) from 80,000,000, to 100,000,000. The 5,000,000, Jews are thus distributed: there are some 500,000 in Syria and Asiatic Turkey; 250,000 in European Turkey; 600,000 in Morocco and North Africa; 50,000 to 80,000 in Eastern Asia; 100,000 in America, and about 200,000 in Europe, viz: 13,000 in England; 1,594 in Belgium; 850 in Sweden and Norway; 6,000 in Denmark; 70,000 in France, 50,000 in the Low Countries, 1,120,000 in Russia, (more than one-fifth of the entire race; 631,000 in Austria and its dependencies; 214,431 in Prussia; 172,000 in the German States, and 4,000 in Italy.

Beauty eventually deserts its possessor, but virtue and talents accompany him to the grave.

A violent love-fit is always the result of ignorance; for there is not a daughter of Eve that has merit enough to justify a romantic love, though thousands inspire that gentle esteem which is infinitely better. A woman-worshipper and a woman-hater both derive their mistakes from an ignorance of the female world; for if the characters of women were generally understood they would be found too good to be hated, and yet not good enough to be idolized.

"In virtue of my office I arrest you," said a constable to a wild chap the other day.

"Virtue! Now Mr. Constable, you don't pretend there is any virtue in your office, surely. I could tell things about you to prove there's no virtue in you."

ADVICE TO THE GIRLS.—Never run away from your parents till you are quite sure that the young man you run with, don't intend to run away from you. A seducer knows no more about consistency, than a weathercock does about crowing.

As you would save the strength and wind of a horse, drive slow up hill; and as you you value your own and the life of the horse, drive slow down hill. But on level ground—if you must drive fast—draw a tight reign and "let him slide."

ANGELS UPON EARTH. — In sickness there is no hand like a woman's hand — no heart like a woman's heart — no eye so untiring — no hope so fervent. Woman by a sick man's couch is divinity impersonated.

Botanic Physician.

DR. J. C. BRALEY, in the vicinity of Kanesville,, opposite Mr. Stoddard's on Indian Creek, tenders his professional services to the afflicted of Pottawatamie County. From the success that has attended his professional labors heretofore, particularly in Surgery, Obstetrics and Cholera, he feels a degree of confidence and assurance in undertaking the management of the most difficult cases, and also competent to manage most diseases incident to this climate.

He is prepared to sell his medicines at a reduced price, as he intends to go to the Valley this season; and he hopes that all those who are indebted to him will come forward and settle their accounts immediately, or within six weeks, if not paid at the expiration of said period, they will be lodged in the hands of an Attorney for Collection.

STOVES! STOVES!!

MR. DUSTIN AMY, of this town, would respectfully notify the citizens of this county, and particularly that portion of them that expect to emigaate to the Salt Lake, that he intends to have, by the first boat this spring, a heavy and well selected assortment of Cast Iron Cooking Stoves, which he proposes to sell on very favorable terms for ready cash.

As Mr. A. is a tinner by trade, he will fit up the stoves with furniture according to order, and on the shortest notice. He keeps constantly on hand a good assortment of tin ware, and a good supply of all vessels usually called for by Emigrants. He has secured sufficient help to execute almost any job that may be required in his line on very short notice. The experience that he has had in traveling in the West, and also in fitting out emigrants for the last two or three years to journey over the Plains from this place, enable him to anticipate, correctly, the present wants of emigrants; and he has and will, therefore, prepare his stock and articles for sale to suit this frontier Market.

MODERN CHRISTIANITY.

A DIALOGUE BETWEEN A BAPTIST AND AN INFIDEL.

BY J. HYDE.

A Baptist who was intently perusing a newspaper, and who appeared deeply concerned at the havoc made by the cholera in its career of desolation, remarked to a gentleman sitting near him—"The progress of the cholera is alarming—is it not?"

Infidel.—It is truly so.

B.—It ought, I think, to awaken among men people the most lively concern for perishing souls.

I.—I presume, sir, you are a christian?

B.—I am, sir, of the denomination called Baptists. It becomes me, as I said, to be concerned for souls. May I hope that in such fearful times you are duly impressed with the obligations of religion?

I.—I confess at once I am not; and although it may be painful to you to hear, I have to say that I am entirely infidel as to the religion exhibited to the world by the numerous sects.

B.—Oh! sir, I am truly distressed for your soul. I should like to hear your objections to our glorious christianity, culminating as it is in its meridian light. Perhaps I can remove the basis upon which you build your objections

I.—Being so freely and kindly invited, I will do so without further preface. You were speaking of the fearful cholera. I think there is a foolish writer in your Bible named James, who had some concern for bodies as well as souls, and if I recollect right, he says something about sick people sending for elders to anoint with oil?

B.—Yes; St. James, one of the holy apostles of our Lord, does say, "if any are sick let them send for the elders of the church, and let them pray, anointing them with oil, and the prayer of faith shall heal the sick." A glorious epistle is that of James, sir.

I.—Does your minister teach, or do his followers practice this foolish command?

B.—Oh, no, sir. That ordinance of healing and anointing with oil is done away!

I.—By what authority?

B.—I confess, sir, I cannot tell.

I.—I will inform you thereon. Your minister, with all other ministers and pious people, are too wise and infidel, like me, to follow such a foolish teacher as "holy St." James. As your ministers reject one part of the epistle, I reject the whole: thus we are both infidel in kind. I do not practice because I do not believe. You say you believe, but do not practice! Of us two you are the worst infidel, if there is bad and worse in the case!

B.—Sir, I am obliged to confess that your conclusion is startling and resistless. I wish I could overturn it, but, alas! I am unable. I tremble at being an infidel. Proceed, however, with your objections.

I.—I think you stated you were a Baptist?

B.—Yes, sir.

I.—I have a difficulty in regard to baptism upon which I would like to hear your explanation.

B.—You shall have it very freely. I hope, however, it may be more satisfactory than the last.

I.—An old foolish fisherman, Peter, I think he was called, told some silly people to be baptized for remission of sins, and thousands, I think, were fools enough to go and do as he told them!

B.—Just so. Oh! it was a glorious sight!

I.—Does your minister teach people to be baptized for remission of sins?

B.—No, sir.

I.—Have you been baptized for remission?

B.—No, sir. It is done away!

I.—Exactly so. You are all too wise and infidel to obey such a foolish ignorant man as Peter. I conclude as before; here we are infidels again, and you the worst! Bravo, infidelity. All the parsons, preachers, and pious people infidels, rejecting James and Peter.

B.—Sir, you make me feel alarmed for my religion; however, I will, if you please, hear all your objections.

I.—Jesus Christ, I think, somewhere says to his apostles, &c., Go forth without purse and scrip, the servant shall be like his Lord; and Paul says to Timothy, having food and raiment, be content. Infidel as I am, I admire such disinterestedness; but, sir, does your eloquent minister obey these directions?

B.—Alas! no, sir. We have to give him a large salary, or he would leave us and take the first "CALL" that was more golden than ours.

I.—I thought so. Ministers are not such fools as to follow the example or obey the teachings of Jesus or Paul. I conclude as before, and note the progress of infidelity. Not only are James and Peter rejected, but also Jesus and Paul!

B.—The justness of your conclusions confound me. How blind I have been, and yet I talked of living in a gospel blaze. Sir, proceed with your objections, although I am hopeless as to removing them.

I.—I think Jesus said, the gospel was to be preached in all the world, to every creature, and signs shall follow them that believe; they shall cast out devils, and lay hands on the sick, and heal them. Sir, you have known many believers, have you ever seen or heard of "these signs" following any of them?

B.—No, sir; I never have.

I.—I am forced to conclude, therefore, that either Jesus has broken his promise, or that all your believers are not true believers.

B.—Oh! sir, let Jesus be true, and all such believers liars.

I.—Very well, I accept your conclusion; but in what a pretty predicament does it place the christian world with all its prayers and piety—all its missionary crossing of sea and land, to make proselytes! they are the true infidels! Ha, ha, ha!!!

B.—Sir, I am almost speechless; your arguments shatter all my pious hopes and pretensions. I feel poor, and blind, and naked. Perchance God will by some means restore the ancient gospel for the consolation of those in a condition like mine.

I.—It is far from my wish to distress or pain your mind, but if I cannot have the real gospel, I will not allow myself to be imposed upon by a mere sham, spurious, counterfeit gospel. Infidel as I am, I have often admired the church, whose unity, order, laws, officers, and blessings, I read described in the Testament; but as for the rickety, divided thing called christianity, seen in these days, I loath, I despise it from my very soul. I might be disposed to entertain the real gospel!—a counterfeit, never. Shall I state my further objections?

B.—Yes, sir, freely; though their truth thrills my mind with pain!

I.—Jesus says, I think, somewhere that he would send a "spirit to guide his people into all truth, and show them things to come." Have you ever known any one so guided and so shown things to come?

B.—No; all modern divines are guided by the writings and sermons of hoary and time-honored fathers—the commentaries of learned doctors, and the doctrinal decision of synods, assemblies, catechisms, articles, creeds, &c.

I.—So the Spirit-guide is like other unnecessary things, done away! Have you ever known any one that was "shewn things to come" by the spirit Jesus promised?

B.—No, sir. Prophets are done away!

I.—Thus Jesus promised something not now needed! Bravo, modern divinity—infidelity I mean! You are therefore without the spirit-guide, without the spirit "shewer of things to come." What spirit have you got in his stead?

B.—I confess I cannot tell. The spirit of Jesus kept the church one; other spirits of some strange kind have torn it into strifes, schisms, and divisions innumerable! As you say, we are infidels with all our pretence to piety.

I.—An honest conclusion, and as clear as dialectics can deduce it. Shall I proceed with my objections?

B.—What! have you further objections? if so, proceed with them.

I.—Paul, I think, talks about four foundation principles in some of his writings, viz, "repentance, faith, baptism, and laying on of hands." This order of Paul was not wise enough for modern doctors, and therefore they mend it into sprinkling, faith, repentance—no laying on of hands for the Holy Ghost—and your sect, out of these four principles rejects baptism for the remission of sin, and laying on of hands for the Holy Ghost. Thus out of Paul's four principles, modern wise doctors reject two. Is this so?

B.—It is as you say. I quite forgot till now of Peter and John laying on hands and giving the spirit to the believing baptized Samaritans. Paul laying on hands to give the spirit to the twelve Ephesian baptized believers. The elders laying on hands—the bestowing a gift to Timothy, and, I wonder——

I.—Wonder at what? Do you think that college-taught doctors would follow the teachings of a wild enthusiast, like Paul—ignorant fishermen like Peter and John! No; baptism for remission, and laying on of hands for the spirit, indeed. Such ancient rubbish may be taught by fishermen-apostles, but by wise and pious modern divines—never!

B.—Oh, sir, your remarks are true as they are pungent and caustic. I rack my brain to invent replies to them, but all my efforts are abortive. Proceed, however, with your objections.

I.—I understand that in the primitive church the followers of Jesus were called by the Spirit and Apostles, "Saints." Was this so?

B.—It was. Oh, happy days! But this name is done away.

I.—Do you really fancy that modern pious people would be called Saints now? Never! They prefer to be Calvinites, Wesleyites, Popeites, Churchites, Baxterites, Peterites, Paulites, any ites rather than Saints. They admit that Paul condemned these "names of blasphemy," and said, who is Paul or Apollos? They might be nothing, but Calvin, Wesley, &c., are persons of paramount importance, Infidel, again, you see. Ha, ha, ha.

B.—I confess this is so; but I never saw this matter so plainly before. We may, I find, learn from an infidel. Proceed, however, with your objections, if any further remain.

I.—In the apostolic church, I think elders were made overseers by the Holy Ghost. Is this so?

B.—Yes; would it were so again.

I.—Vain man. Do you think modern pious people would leave the Holy Ghost to choose weak and foolish things of fishermen again? Never; they have itching ears, and will heap up teachers that can tickle well—the better the tickler the better the pay; and you know that to support these ticklers, merchandise is made of the bodies and souls of men; aye, of the chapels, too! Paul suspected that modern pietists would not have elders of the Holy Ghost's choosing. No, indeed; and to climax this ticklish subject, large colleges and institutions are built, and learned teachers supported to furnish a supply of first-rate ticklers!!! Ha, ha, ha, Paul. Infidelity prevails against you.

B.—Sir, you fill me with the keenest grief. Surely I have been blind and led by the blind. My piety, I perceive, to have been light and evanescent as vanity. Any further objections?

I.—Saints used to have visions, tongues, dreams, prophecy, healings, &c.; modern divines, I am told, reject all these silly whimsies. Is it so?

B.—Yes they do; infidels that they are.

I.—Why, my friend, I have almost converted you to infidelity; of course modern piety would reject such childish things as visions, &c.; they might be necessary for infants, but not needed by full grown modern pious people and divines. The mass is infidel!

B.—It is a marvel to me how I could have overlooked that, which, while you remark, appears so transparent and plain; but truth is potent, even though it comes from the mouth af an infidel. Proceed if you please.

I.—Paul says, I think, covet earnestly spiritual gifts of tongues, prophecy, healings, &c. I think your divines forbid to speak in tongues, and say prophecy is not needed—they are done away. Is this the case?

B.—It is so, although Paul said "we were to know in part and prophesy in part, until the perfect should come," &c.

I.—So modern divines reject prophecy in whole and part, because perfection has come, even the most perfect confusion! I should like to see a body made up of all the jarring "bodies" of modern sectarians. Methinks it would be an image kicking all manner of ways, and would soon kick itself to pieces again. Ha, ha, ha. Bravo infidelity.

B.—It is with poignant grief I admit the correctness of your rigorous and burning predicates; but, after all, I have one consolation, and it arises from this consideration, that your animadversions, scathing as they are, leave the church of early Saints untouched. Oh, that the ancient church, with its glorious spirit, apostles, unity, laws, and blessings for body and soul were restored.

I.—I feel almost inclined to add, Amen. Do you think it ever will be?

B.—I hardly venture to hope.

I.—I am not surprised at your want of even hope. Shall I tell you why?

B.—Yes, if you please.

I.—Then prepare your mind for remarks more startling than you have heard yet. To all the infidelity previously stated, modern pious divines have capped a climax; they do not even worship the God of Abraham.

B.—Sir, you perfectly astound me! Not worship the God of Abraham! Why, if you can show this you will prove us to be not only infidels but idolaters!

I.—Then listen. The several leading sects, I think, say that "the God they worship has neither body, parts, or passions" Am I correct?

B.—Perfectly so, according to the first article of the Church of England, to which the sects subscribe fully.

I.—Old Moses, who it is said was very intimamate with God, says, I think, in Gen. xviii., that God appeared to Abraham, and that old Abraham provided water to wash his feet—feet without a body? Also that Abraham and Sarah provided a feast, and Jehovah and the two angels with him did eat—eat without a body?

B.—Sir, Jehovah only appeared in figure.

I.—Oh! indeed; then it was only a figurative Abraham, a figurative calf and cakes, and a figurative Sarah—the whole book of Genesis is only a figure, and a fable; Adam is only a figure, and the fall a fable! Infidelity triumphant!

B.—Oh! no, no; it must have been a real Jehovah—real feet—and real eating; real old Abraham and Sarah; a real Adam; and to our sorrow a real fall.

I.—Then my conclusion is resistless, that modern sects do not worship the Jehovah of Abraham, who has feet and could eat and drink. Old Moses and Abraham might be such fools, but modern divines never will; they are too wise and more infidel than I, for I think I could love a God so kind, so condescending as thus to walk, to talk, to eat and drink with his friends Abraham and Moses.

B.—I am almost struck dumb with astonishment; but it is not said that God is a Spirit. Has a spirit, a body?

I.—Are you a spirit?

B.—Yes; and have a body, too. Oh! now I seem to understand glorious old Moses, when he says man was made in the image of God—body and spirit!

I.—Moses also states that he had talked with God face to face (face without a body?) but that he wanted to see the face of God in his unshaded glory.—God says no man could see the face of God (in its glory) and live; but he added I will put thee in this cleft in the rock, and as my glory passes by, I will cover thee (thine eyes) with my hand, and when I pass by thou shalt see my back parts. Modern pious people and divine say their God has no parts, thus they worship—nothing! They are atheists—too wise and learned are they to worship the God of Moses!

B.—Sir, my senses seem as if steeped in stupefaction; you utterly bewilder me.

I.—Jesus, I think, says his Father has a voice and shape. Paul says, man is not to worship with his head covered, because he was made in the shape of God. God the Father has a person, and Jesus was the express image of it. The God of Jesus and Paul might have a shape and person, but modern divines are too pious and atheistic to worship such a God!

B.—Your premises, are drawn, I must confess, from the plain word of scripture. I see no way of escape from this scathing conclusion.

I.—The God that modern pious people and divines worship they say has no passions. Is love a passion? then God so loved the world, &c. Is jealousy a passion? then Moses says Jehovah is a jealous God. Is wrath a passion? then God swear in his wrath that the rebel Israelites should not enter Canaan. Am I correct in my quotations?

B.—Perfectly so. Sir, you have in this astounding conversation brought strange things to my ears. I never heard a man quote scripture more correctly, and draw deductions more natural and clear. You must have studied the scriptures closely.

I.—If there is any clearness in my arguments drawn from the scriptures, the credit is entirely due, not to my ingenuity or ability, but to the conversation of an intelligent friend, who has been for some time joined to a strange people, called Latter-day Saints, whose doctrines I have been stating to you. Have you ever heard of them?

B.—Oh! I have heard of a man receiving golden plates from an angel, on which the gospel was graven, but it is too marvellous for me.

I.—Too marvellous! not half so marvellous as God's writing with his finger on the plates of stone, and giving them to Moses.

B.—Well; so it is much more marvellous. I did not think of the plates of stone.

I.—Can you inform me what became of those stone plates?

B.—I suppose, after copies of the law had been multiplied, God took the stone plates to heaven, or caused them to be hid up that they might be preserved.

I.—And so the Latter-day Saints say about the golden Plates—a striking coincidence!

B.—Can you inform me where I can learn further of these Latter-day Saints?

I.—I am sorry I cannot but my intelligent friend will, I know, feel great pleasure in doing so. I will take an opportunity to introduce you to him.

B.—Many thanks to you. How strange our meeting, and still more strange that you, an Infidel, should have so completely demolished all my pious pretensions. I long for the time to come when I shall hear from your friend of these strange Latter-day Saints.

I.—Then it would appear you shall not have long to wait, for here he comes. Allow me to introduce you, Mr. Latter-day Saint, to my friend of the Baptist persuasion, who is anxious to know something of the rise and doctrines of the church of Latter-day Saints.

L. D. S.—I shall feel great pleasure in taking your friend to where he shall receive the fullest information as to the rise and doctrines of the church of L. D. S. Our maxims are "Prove all things" "Search the Scriptures." Sir (turning to the Baptist,) you inquire the rise of the Church of Latter-day Saints! It owes it origin, like all true churches, to revelation from God, whose august principles are those held by patriarchs, prophets, and apostles—ancient as eternity, immutable as God; principles worthy of Jehovah, consolatory to man, and conformable to scripture and reason.

B.—I feel already preposed in your favor. The conversation I have just held with your Infidel friend has compelled me to acknowledge that modern christianity, with its multiplied divisions, sects and doctrines, is altogether unlike the primitive church described in the New Testament. In fact, he has obliged me to admit, that modern christianity is atheistic, infidelity disguised—a church without ancient gifts, like a body without members mutilated and disfigured! I must abandon the unnatural carricature, but whether shall I fly; I feel the Bible is true, the seal of the eternal is upon it. I have heard without satisfaction all the sects. Oh, that I knew where I could hear of the God of Abraham and the ancient Gospel of Peter and Paul preached, and see the ancient ordinances administered in their simplicity and power!

L. D. S.—And can you no where on earth find, as you say, the God of Abraham worshipped, the ancient gospel preached, and ancient ordinances administered? Then it is high time that God in his mercy should reveal himself and restore the ancient gospel with its powers, gifts, and blessings.

B.—Yes, it would be indeed merciful and kind. I have often thought how it could be done, If some preacher of talent and influence were to preach the ancient gospel, and administer its ordinances, it would be only raising another sect. All would be in vain, unless some man received authority, commission, and revelation from God to preach and administer like Paul. Oh, that such a man were raised up!

L. D. S.—I have to inform you that just such a man was Joseph Smith, and just such authority, commission, and power did he receive, and just such a gospel as Peter and Paul preached did he preach, and just such ordinances did he administer, and just such signs follow, and just such persecutions and slander, as pursued early Saints, have pursued the church of Latter-day Saints, Joseph, the Prophet of the Lord like other prophets finished his course and kept the faith. Modern preachers cried impostor, delusion, and like dogs of hell panted for and shed his blood! To you, as an honest enquirer, I say as Phillip said to Nathaniel, come and see, faith cometh by hearing; the spirit says come; the bride says come, hear, and obey, and your crushed spirit, your disquieted and distressed heart shall know a peace deep and enduring as the throne of God.

B.—Thank you for your invitation. I will come and hear, for saith Solomon he that judgeth a thing before he heareth it is not wise. Farewell.

Childhood's Recollection.

BY FICCIOLA.

Oh! I would fain recall, some glimpses of the past;
That crowd my mem'ry's page, with bright and sombre cast.
Some shades there are so bright, and pleasant to the view,
They charm the eye from off, the lines of darker hue.
As skilful limners touch, their landscapes in the shade,
With darker strokes to make, more bright the light ones made,
And such are incidents, to us in every sphere,
Our darkening clouds but make, the sunshine still more clear.
Oh childhoods happy hour! who hath not dwelt thereon,
In rapt'rous thought, and wished, again to sing its song?
Who hath not wished to tread, where infant feet hath trod?
To trace the childish haunts on the loved native sod,
Who hath not treasured up, some light and trifling word,
That passed the social hearth, or the parental board?
Some stories quaint with mirth, and o'en misfortune's smart,
Are kept in store to feed, the cravings of fond heart,
I've crossed the ocean's width, yes o'er and o'er again,
And traveled o'er the the land, hill, valley and the plain,
I've read me nature's book, it looked to me divine,
And gazed in heaven's face, and worshipped at her shrine,
I've mingled with the proud, and sought me out the meek,
Esteemed I have the great, compassion gave the weak,
The good I've loved right well, but envied not the rich,
I've sought the poor man's hearth, and ask'd me then, of which,
Most happiness to be found?—the proud, the rich?—Ah, no!
I know them well and prov'd, they have the greater woe,
I've loved me cherished friends, and valued learning's lore,
I've sighed me out my griefs, from disappointments sore,
All these but pass me by, like April's wanton showers,
Beneath the magic touch, of childhood's sunny hours
The pleasant home of youth, where thought and being sprung,
The dear loved voice of her, who taught my infant tongue,
Oh! Mem'rys magic wand, when wafted o'er the mind,
Its influences sweet, its balmy springs enshrine,
That softens sterner age, and lightens many woes,
With silent whisperings, to ease our panting throes,
Is there a heart on earth, of impenetrable mould,
That can resist its sway, or be by it controlled?
Ah no! o'en be it made, of iron's hardest cast,
It cannot—No! it never can forget the early past.

Kanesville, April, 1850.

California is described by Senator Seward, of New York, as "the youthful Queen of the Pacific, in the robes of freedom, gorgeously inlaid with gold."

A correspondent of a New York paper states that gold in considerable quantities has been discovered in Lower California, and that reports to this effect have induced the natives of that country, who went northward, to return home.

WHERE IS THE WILDERNESS.—At the beginning of this century it was in Ohio and Indiana. Twenty-five years afterwards it was Michigan, Wisconsin and Illinois. Last year it was in Minesota Territory. Next year we shall have to seek it in Nebraska, and around the Lake of the Woods.

The Union.

The following beautiful passage is from a Fourth of July oration, delivered at Charleston, in 1809, by the late Thomas S. Grimke then a very young man:

The American who can look forward with calmness to the day of seperation, must be more or less than a man. He must be the victim of ambition, or corruption; a deluded enthusiast, or a prophet of good, which the most sanguine dare not hope, and the keen eyed statesman cannot foresee. Thenceforward the American eagle shall drop the olive-branch of peace, and grasp only the arrows of war. The hand which writes the declaration of disunion, shall feel the blood curdle in his veins; and the tongue which reads it to the world, shall stiffen in the act. The mountains that divide us, shall be "the dark mountains of death," and the streams that flow between, like the waters of Egypt, shall be turned into blood.

The good man needs no recommendation but his deeds.

Take the First Step.

If you are ever to be anything you must make a beginning; and you must make it yourself. The world is getting too practical to help drones, and push them along, when there is a busy hive of workers who, if anything, live too fast. You must lift up your own feet, and if you have a pair of clogs on which clatter about your heels, they will soon be worn off and left behind on the dusty path-way. Mark out the line which you prefer; let truth be the object glass—honesty the surveying chain—and eminence the level with which you lay out your field; and thus prepared, with prudence on one arm and perseverance on the other, you need fear no obstacle. Do not be afraid to take the first step. Boldness will beget assurance, and the first step will bring you so much nearer the second. But if your first step break down, try again. It will be surer and safer by the trial. Besides if you never move, you will never know your own power. A man standing still and declaring his inability to walk, without making the effort, would be a general laughing stock; and so morally, is the man in our opinion, who will not test his own moral and intellectual power, and then gravely assures us that he has "no genius," or "no talent," or "no capacity." A man with seeing eyes keeping them shut and complaining that he cannot see! The trumpeter of his own imbecility!

EXCUSE FOR NOT GOING TO CHURCH.—Overslept myself. Could not dress in time. Too cold. Too hot. Too windy. Too wet. Too damp. Too cloudy. Don't feel disposed. No other time to myself. Look over my drawers. Put my papers to rights. Letters to write to my friends. Mean to take a walk. Going to ride. Tied to business six days in a week. No fresh air but on Sundays. Can't breathe in church always so full. Feel a little chilly. Feel very, very lazy. Expect company to dinner. Got a headache. New bonnet not come home. Tore my muslin dress coming down stairs. Got a new novel, must be returned Monday morning. Wasn't shaved in time. Don't like a liturgy, always praying for the same thing. Doesn't like extempore prayer—doesn't know what's coming. Don't like singing without music, makes me nervous. Can't sit in a draft of air—windows or doors opened in summer. Stove so hot in winter always got a headache. Can't bear an extempore sermon, too frothy. Dislike a written sermon, too prosing. Nobody to-day but our minister, can't always listen to the same preacher. Don't like strangers. Can't keep awake when at church. Fell asleep last time I was there, shan't risk it again. Mean to inquire of some sensible person about the propriety of going to so public a place as church. Will publish the result.

BEAUTIFUL SENTIMENT.—God hath sent some angels into the world, whose office is to refresh the sorrow of the poor, and to strengthen the eyes of the disconsolate. And what greater pleasure can we have, than that we should bring joy to our brother? that the tongue should be turned with heavenly accents, and make the weary soul listen for light and ease; and when he perceives that there is such a thing in the world, and in the order of things, as comfort and joy, to begin to break out from the prison of his sorrows at the door of sighs and tears, and by little melt into showers and refreshments this is glory to thy voice and employment fit for the brightest angel.

So have I seen the sun kiss the frozen earth, which was bound up with the images of death, and the colder breath of the north, and then the waters break from their enclosures, and melt with joy, and run in useful channels; and the flies do rise from their little graves in walls, and dance awhile in the air, to tell their joy is within, and that the great mother of creatures will open the stock of their new refreshment, become useful to mankind, and sing praises to her Redeemer; so is the heart of a sorrowful man, under the discourses of a wise comforter; he breaks from the despair of the grave, and fetters and chains of sorrow; he blesses God, and He blesses thee, and he feels his life returning; for to be miserable is death, but nothing is life but the comforter. God is pleased with no music below so much as in the thanksgiving songs of relieved widows, of supported orphans, of rejoicing, comforted and thankful persons.

Benefit your Friends that they may love you more dearly; benefit your enemies, that they at last may also become your friends.

FASAIONABLE MANNERS.—There is a set of people whom I cannot bear—the pinks of fashionable propriety—whose every word is precise, and whose every movement is unexceptionable; but who though versed in all the categories of polite behavior, have not a particle of soul or of cordiality about them. We allow that their manners may be abundantly correct. There may be elegance in every gesture; and gracefulness in every position; not a smile out of place, and not a step that would not bear the measurement of the severest scrutiny. This is very fine; but what I want is the heat and gaiety of social intercourse---the frankness that spreads animation around it---the eye that speaks effability to all that chases timidity from every bosom, and tells every man in the company to be confident and happy. This is what I conceive to be the virtue of the text, "Be courteous," and not the sickening formality of those who walk by rule, and would reduce the whole of human life to a wirebound system of misery and constraint. ---[Dr. Chalmers.

Some think that if nature had designed a man to be a drunkard, he would have been constructed like a churn, so that the more he drank, the firmer he would stand.

WEDNESDAY, MAY, 15, 1850.

Is there Good or Evil about to Come on the Land!

The Children of Israel were fed on Manna from Heaven while they journeyed in the wilderness; but they soon became cloyed with it and wanted flesh; when Lo! and behold, Quails came in clouds and in flocks into the Camp of Israel—were caught and eaten by the people; and while the flesh was yet in their mouths, the Lord cursed it, and as the reward of their murmurings thousands fell in the wilderness, as it were in a day.

Has not God blessed our land and country with rain, sunshine, and fruitful seasons ever since we were a nation? The people of America have had plenty to eat, and the very best things that Heaven and Earth could give. But they wanted Gold, and have murmured because they could not have all they desired of it. At length, the temple of the God of this world is opened to admit his worshipers that they may pay their devotions to him in his golden paradise. Thousands upon thousands turn their backs upon the common gifts of Providence, despise the products of the soil when compared with the products of the mines. The true God has heard the murmurings of the people—saw that they lightly esteemed h is common favors, though like water, the more needed, and has determined to give them the desire of their hearts, even gold to the full, and with-hold those comforts, and necessary gifts that have been so lightly esteemed: such as plenty of wheat, corn, beef, pork and the great variety of fruits and vegetables which are so necessary to life and happiness.

We do not desire to prophecy evil; but these are some of our reflections. Many are going after gold who already have an abundance of the good things of life, if we may judge from their appearance. With a competency, then, at home; yea! an abundance: why will you leave that wife and those little children, an aged father and mother, and those sisters and force your way through famine, through a savage wilderness country where the pistol and the bowie-knife are the supreme law of the land in many cases? Has a strange fatality inspired you with moral strength sufficient to break all these ties, brodst all these obstacles to find perhaps a golden grave in the temple of the God of this world? The mysterious rapping of departed spirits, the contention and threatened dissolution of the political ties that have bound the country together—fire and plague, murder and crime increasing in the land—the golden treasures opened, frost and cold so severe about the middle of May that the heaviest winter clothing is needed—The forest trees as bare as in December—corn worth three dollars a bushel, and little or none at that price—and cries of the blood of martyrs going up on high, bespeak, in our opinion, no particular good upon the land! Yet while one plank of the old ship floats, we will cling to it.

Counsel.

It is our advice to our friends abroad, whose circumstances, will permit it, to come to this place and winter here, provided they have the means to do it, if they cannot come sooner, and then they may be ready to go early to the valley in the spring. If they are not able to go to the valley, they can remain here and cultivate the richest soil in the world, the products of which will command as high a price as the same will bring in any part of the Union. Take the Guardian and pay for it, and you will get all the information from this point and also from the Salt Lake, that will be of interest to you. Those who stop here, should have teams and farming utensils suitable for farming.

Keg Creek Mills.

About 18 miles South of Kanesville, Messrs, Joseph W. Coolidge & Co., keep constantly on hand meal, flour, chopped feed for horses, and also bran. These mills are certainly a valuable acquisition to the facilities of this county for the outfitting of emigrants to the west, and the county in the immediate vicinity of said mills is a beautiful and healthy one, being of the richest soil, and having as good timber and water as any other portion of country on this frontier. If any man wishes to invest capital in the most valuable property in this frontier County, he can purchase said mills, (as we hear they are for sale,) or he may purchase claims of the most valuable farming land in all the Pottawatamie purchase. There are many valuable claims for sale in various parts of the county; and whoever wishes to secure valuable gold mines without going to California, had better secure these claims, and go to raising corn, wheat, potatoes, oats and hay, all of which bring the highest prices at your own doors. Enquire at this office for the most valuable property.

Conference.

The adjourned Conference will meet and conclude its business on Sunday next 10 o'clock A. M., on the same ground where it was on Sunday, the 7th ult.

Elders Orson Pratt from Liverpool, and Wilford Woodruff from Boston, Mass., with many other elders from the East, are expected to be present.

Bow of Promise.

Mr. Joseph Smith, when alive, said that none need fear a general famine while they could see the rain-bow in the clouds. That was a sure indication of seed time and harvest; but, continued he, when the bow disappears, or when it is not seen, look for famine and distress. Who has seen the bow in 1850? We have not; yet we should be pleased to see it. But let no farmer slacken his hand in putting in seed, though clouds, frost, cold and dry weather cast a present gloom over your prospects. Do your duty, and trust to a wise and merciful Providence to bless your labors.

We are requested to say that Wm. O. Clark and company arrived here on Friday last in good health.

Signs of the Weather and of the Times.

It is now the tenth day of May, and there is little or no grass yet. The season has been very dry and cold; and our hopes and anticipations of an early Spring are blasted. From ten to fifteen thousand California Emigrants have been quartered here from a month to six weeks, with nearly twice the number of horses, mules, oxen and cows; and the consequences are, that our hay and grain, of every kind, sort, and description have been called out by very extravagant prices, and consumed by the great and unexpected rush of emigration. Our County is almost as bare of provisions as were the fields of Egypt of vegetation after the swarms of locusts had passed through. Gold is very good, but gold without bread is of little use.

What means all this rush and this commotion? Is it like the rustling of the leaves, like the waving of the forests, like the moving of the waters by an invisible power (the wind) just before the storm breaks with full fury upon us? Is it possible that the ship "UNION" whose flag has proudly floated on every sea and shed its brilliancy on the crest of the passing billow,—that has inspired admiration at home and commanded respect abroad, is it possible that the officers on board are about to mutinize, and to run this proud craft directly upon the black reefs of slavery? God save the vessel! "Dont give up the ship."

A storm, with thunder and lightning, may purify the atmosphere; but when it increases to a tempest or hurricane, then beware of devastation and woe!

Indians.

We should think that our citizens would learn, after they lose a few more horses, wagon covers, and tools out of their shops, that it was not good policy to keep them about here, to shake hands with them and give them countenance and encouragement to come on this side. Whenever they do come, there is almost invariably something stolen; and none have spirit enough to clear them out unless bro. Hyde will personally lead out. We have told you your duty, which was, if you have any thing to give them, send it to them upon their own side, suffer them not to lurk about among you. If you do this you will do your duty to yourselves and to community. Yet if you are not disposed to do it, but harbor them about you, and shake hands with them, do not whine about us or complain if they steal the shirt off your back. Do your duty and you will soon be clear of them.

If our friends at home and abroad who know themselves to be in arrears for the Guardian, will have the goodness to pay or remit to us the money, they will confer a special favor upon us, as we wish to raise all the money we can before the last trains leave for the Valley. We have no particular cause of complaint; but we have cause to return our grateful thanks to the majority of our subscribers, for their punctuality in paying up their liabilities to this office, and thus proving their good wishes towards us, and showing their anxiety for our success in the enterprize which we have undertaken.

Suffering on the Plains.

It is more than one month since the first companies of Californians started out upon the plains from this point. They, as well as we, judged that there would be plenty of grass by this time on the entire route, but the season has been so unusually backward, that there is no grass yet, and the grain of the Emigrants on the plains, particularly that of the first companies, must be exhausted. Great suffering and sacrifice of teams will be unavoidable. Indeed! unless there is grass very soon, none will be able to go to the mines by the overland route this year, in our opinion. All calculations concerning grass, based upon the experience of former years, are completely frustrated. We are, therefore, forced into silence about making any further calculations as to the propriety of starting out on the plains, at any given time

W. McClennan, Esq.

This gentleman was at this place, from Nauvoo, Ills., during the latter part of this last winter in pursuit of a horse and buggy that he claimed was stolen, or in some way taken without leave. He found the buggy and the person who took it, or the one who was supposed to have taken it. He took the buggy into his possession and sold or traded it to Mr. Kelting, and might have taken the person who had it, if he had been disposed. The reason of our publishing this is, that we were informed that Esq. L. stated in Nauvoo, on his return, that he did not get the buggy, but that we could tell all about it. We do not know that that gentleman made any such statements; but if he did, he well knows the opposite to be true. The buggy was the property of a German Doctor in Nauvoo. Esq. L. said he had a writ for the person who took it away. We have never been written to upon the subject, neither have we received any money to find it. The buggy was found and sold to Mr. Kelting for Fifty Dollars by Esq. McLennan. We have just spoken to Mr. K. about it, and he says it is exactly so.

Decision.

How many are there that are indifferent about putting in a crop this spring, because they indulge the hope that some body will help them to go to the Valley; or that circumstances may turn so favorably that they can go, and therefore are not anxious about planting and sowing.

If men are disposed to let the spring pass without putting in a crop, whether they go to the Valley or not, if they are in any way situated to do it, they cannot expect to prosper if they go, or if they stay. Such persons must not calculate to be helped by the Bishop.

Though the season is cold and dry, let no hand faulter, neither be distrustful. Plant and sow in faith, and ask for rain to refresh the earth.

The decision of the high council is, for those who have claims to sell, to put them at a fair honorable price; not sell them at a sacrifice unless it is to a poor brother; and let this determine who ought to emigrate from this place, even those who can sell at a fair price. If all sell that can, at any price, and go to the Valley, they will take nearly all the teams there are in the county, and leave the multitude with only about one yoke of oxen to seven or eight families.

Singular.

Why will men cleave to a dishonest and wicked person, a person who is believed to be guilty of fraudulent transactions. One who has expressed his fears of being arrested? A man who is willing to practice fraud for the sake of gain? Why will men cleave to such a character? Because their thirst for gain benumbs their sense of honesty and uprightness, and they prove that birds of a feather flock together; and that they are willing to glory in their shame. Now let these men renounce all allegiance with such dishonest and fraudulent characters; or be justly branded with the same odium, and go down until they feel that it is hard to "kick against the pricks."

Indians on the Plains.

The Emigrants hear very strange accounts frequently about the Indians robbing and killing some parties of Californians in advance on the plains: but we are confident that no such occurrences have taken place. The Indians will commit no depredations upon any company that attend to their own business, keep a watchful eye upon their horses and mules at night, and who observe a proper decorum and discipline during the day on their march. If Emigrants have any thing that they can spare, and are disposed to give the Indians something they can do so, but do not admit them into your camps by day or by night. Your gifts and benefits to them should be all voluntary, and you need pay no attention, further than you like, to any paper they may present you. Diligence and fidelity in your guards at night, firmness and decision in your intercourse with them by day, coupled with a dignified generosity extended to them without your camps, will insure your safety from their depredations while you pass through their country.

Elder Jacob Gibson and his Company from Philadelphia, arrived here, all well, a few days ago. Many Emigrants are flocking here from all quarters. Some to remain here and some for Salk Lake.

Information Wanted.

A little girl now some seven or eight years old whose name if Keeler, is with some person in Pottawatamie County. Her father is at the Salt Lake Valley John Herret, deceased, was her mother's brother. The mother died in Nauvoo Illinois. Any person who can give information of the present residence of the little girl will receive the gratitude of enquiring friends—who wish to benefit the child.

Warning.

We again warn our citizens against buying horses at auction, and against buying them of strangers. There are two or three stolen horses that have been traded off in this town, and the real owners have come after them. A word to the wise is sufficient, but the simple must learn by the things they suffer.

The Saint Louis Republican of May 3d, in copying from the St. Joseph Gazette concerning the high prices of produce here, tells the truth. At the beginning of the Emigration this spring, Corn sold at from 25 to 30 cents per bushel—Flour from $2.50 to $3.00 per hundred and other things in like proportion. The continued increase and influx of Emigrants gradually raised the price of Corn to $3.00 per bushel—Flour from 6 to 7 dollars per hundred and every other eatable for man and beast in like proportion. This is decidedly the most eligible geographical point for the Emigration to make to on this frontier. It is far up in the "healthy north; and St. Joseph should not complain, though we have had, still have, and will have, in all, more than three thousand teams, perhaps four thousand, and fifteen or twenty thousand men quartered here for six weeks. If these swell the prices of produce, the tendency of money is down stream, and Saint Joseph has the first hand in the purse as it passes along. The experience of this season, will give to the farming interest an impetus that it has never had before. Next year, if we are favored with a fruitful season, we will try to sell every thing as cheap as they will in Saint Joseph. Farmers, do your duty, and you will probably reap a sure reward. There is little or no grass yet. Vegetation is certainly one month later than it was ever known to be before since the country was settled by white people. This we cannot be responsible for. If grass had grown at the usual time, we should have had grain plenty for all that came and for ourselves also, and that too at a moderate price. If the people below think that we are extorting, let them just ship up here a lot of flour, corn, oats, bacon, and every thing else that they think we sell too high, and in so doing take the speculation off our hands, reduce the price of produce, and mercifully relieve that class of our citizens who get their bread by their daily labor. It will administer that kind of rebuke to us that will not awaken our indignation, but our gratitude.

Caution.

Those men who have gone abroad on missions, and have borrowed money and given references for payment where they had no right, and have thereby involved good and upright people in distress, and have left their friends to bear the dishonor of their loose and heedless transactions, had better return forthwith: for they will do no good whither they go. Their way will be hedged up,—the spirit of their mission and calling will depart from them, and if they cease not such operations, they will be forced to return in disgrace, dishonor, and with the cordial displeasure of good men upon their heads.

Men who are sent to preach the Gospel should live by the gospel, and that servant whose eye is single in the discharge of his high and holy duties, will not lack for what is needful.

We say to every such character who thus mistakes his errand, your mission will prove your snare. He that is not faithful in the unrighteous mammon, or in temporal things, cannot, with safety, be entrusted with spiritual things. Let no man feel hurt at this, or think that it means him if he knows he is clear. The experience of this Church for the last twenty years, proves our statements true.

The Montesquion Case.

The Union says: On the opening of the Court, the jury in the Montesquion Case announced through their foreman that they were unable to agree on a verdict. They also asked, as we are informed, for further instruction. Judge Colt is represented to have said, that if they had arrived at, or should arrive at a verdict with regard to one of the accused, and be in doubt as to the guilt or innocence of the other, they could deliver the verdict found.

When the court again opened at three o'clock, the jury did not come forward, one of the members being seriously ill. It is understood, however, that no verdict has been found. We learn from good authority that they stand seven for acquittal, and five for conviction, in reference to both of the accused.

AMERICAN ARCTIC EXPEDITION.—One hundred and thirty-six of the most prominent firms in New York have addressed a memorial to the United States Senate, praying that Congress will grant permission to thirty seamen to volunteer as the crew for Mr. Grinnell's expedition in search of Sir John Franklin.

The heart of a generous man is like the clouds of heaven, which drop upon the earth, fruits, herbage, and flowers; the heart of the ungrateful is like a desert of sand which swalloweth with greediness the showers that fall, and burieth them in her bosom and produceth nothing.

From the Plains.

The news received from Fort Kearney and those emigrants who started early in April, taking with them forage to last their stock from ten to twenty days, are very discouraging; many have returned to the States to wait for grass and recruit teams; others, who have continued on their journey, have to keep their stock alive by giving them flour and meal, which was intended for the men. All the teams must be very much reduced, and many will be broken down and give out before they travel many hundred miles. Of those who left early, we expect to hear will meet with great hardships and suffering. The grass is not yet grown.—[Adventure.

FROM FORT KEARNEY.—A small detachment arrived at St. Joseph on Monday week, having left Ft. Kearney on the 22d ult. They report that the first trains of emigrants passed that post three weeks since, and that they met a great number on the road. When they left the Fort there was not any grass. They bring no news, other than the following notice from Major Chilton, commanding at Ft. Kearney, which he forwarded for the benefit of emigrants, with a request that it be published:

"As mis-apprehension may generally prevail respecting the possibility of obtaining supplies at Forts Kearney and Laramie, emigrants are informed that no supplies can be obtained at those posts—there being an insufficiency for the troops in consequence of non arrival of stores intended for their use.

North Wind!

A cold North wind has blown for the last month, almost incessantly; and it is now (May 10th.) almost like a keen March wind—dry and cold.

We have received the speech of Hon. Stephen A. Douglas, Senator from Illinois on the territorial question, also the speech of Hon. J. P. Walker of Wisconsin, on the "Compromise Resolutions;" also the speech of Hon. Mr. Giddings of Ohio, "on the state of the Union. &c." These gentlemen have our thanks for such favors.

For the Guardian.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, MAY 9, 1850.

MR. EDITOR:—

Dear Sir,—Permit me through the columns of your paper to announce to a large circle of friends my safe arrival at this place, and also that of my company. This, in my humble opinion, is a much better starting point than St. Joseph or Independence.—Most of the emigrants start from this point. Our health is extremely good, perhaps never better. We have been in fine spirits ever since we left home; for all before us is bright with the sunshine of hope. May it ever be so. We shall leave this place for the plains in a few days; not alone, but with a large company of iron hearted, undaunted spirits, whose unyielding wills are calculated to lead them on until they are brought to participate to some extent in their golden dreams. I do not wish to be understood that all possess these characteristics; for we are aware that there are many of the reverse. These will undoubtedly return, as many have done already. The weather is most delightful.—Vegetation begins to show itself in all its virgin beauty and loveliness. The gentle zephyrs of spring that glide so gracefully o'er the earth, are refreshing both to man and beast. All nature seems to rejoice again at the prospect of being clothed in her best attire. The feathered songsters warble their harmonious notes in unison with nature's choicest lyre, while the propitious smiles of Providence are calculated to enable us to look to him as the grand source of all these blessings. We Californians, do therefore rejoice in view of the glittering prospect before us, while at the same time we do most heartily tender our sincere thanks to those who have assisted us in this great enterprise. Adieu.

Yours most Respectfully,
W. J. LUSK

REPORT OF THE COMPROMISE — PLAN OF AGREEMENT. — The Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer says the Compromise Committee have agreed upon the following propositions, submitted by Mr. Clay:

1st. California to be admitted as a State with her present boundaries.

2d. New Mexico and Utah are to have territorial governments, without any reference to slavery whatever.

3d. The right of Texas to be divided into four additional States, with or without slavery, as the people within them may desire, whenever there is a sufficient population, is to be fully recognised.

4th. The boundary between Texas and New Mexico is to be adjusted agreeably to the line and plan laid down in Mr. Clay's resolutions.

5th. The right of the south to have their fugitive slaves delivered up, is to be strongly and emphatically declared.

6th. The slave trade in the District of Columbia is to be abolished.

Some difficulty was experienced with regard to Mr. Webster and Phelps, but it is said they finally agreed to support a report based upon these principles.

☞ The Chickisaw Indians who boast that they have never imbrued their hands with the blood of white men; and express the highest reverence for the memory of the Father of his country, have contributed $200 towards the erection of the National Washington Monument. Truly, "the poor Indian, whose untutored mind, sees God in clouds and hears him in the wind," has a nature susceptible of the finest feeling of humanity and a heart open to kindness when kindly treated, but revengeful to the last degree when injured or oppressed.

Thomas J. Campbell, Clerk of the House of Representatives, died in Washington City, on the Morning of the 13th ult., after an illness of two days. Campbell was a Whig in politics, and a citizen of Virginia.

List of California Emigrants that have arrived on this Frontier.

They are all apparently in good health and spirits, and eager for the mines. Persons receiving this number who are not regular subscribers to the paper, will please run over this list of names, and they will probably find their husband's name, the name of a son or brother, cousin, friend or old acquaintance. There are many emigrants who have arrived here whose names are not in this list. They can all have their names registered in the next number of the Guardian if they wish, and a copy sent back to any friend, for one dime each.

Congressional.

WASHINGTON, APRIL 16.

The remains of Mr. Campbell, late Clerk of the House, accompanied by his son, and Hon. J. Anderson, of Tenn., left yesterday for Nashville. His funeral sermon was preached in the House.

J. C. Walker, the present reading Clerk, fills the vacancy temporarily made by the death of Mr. Campbell. Albert Smith of Maine; Forney, the candidate of the caucus at the commencement of the session; Gen. Walbridge, and others, are mentioned as candidates for the vacant Clerkship.

Franklin H. Elmore, formerly a representative in Congress, has accepted the appointment of Senator in the place of Mr. Calhoun.

The Nicaragua treaty has been completed, the stipulations agreed upon, and will be signed this week. It will be immediately communicated to the Senate.

The family of Calhoun have consented to allow his remains to be placed wherever the government of South Carolina shall desire, and they will be interred at Columbia.

The Boston Medical College has been open for inspection; and it is estimated that more than 50,000 persons have passed through Dr. Webster's rooms.

The steamer America, one of the fastest of the Cunard Line, will be due at Halifax tomorrow, with Liverpool intelligence to the 6th.

WASHINGTON, APRIL 17.

Previously to the scene which occurred in the Senate, the following proceedings took place.

Mr. Butler presented the credentials of Franklin D. Elmore, appointed a Senator from South Carolina, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Mr. Calhoun, which were received and ordered to be placed on file. Mr Elmore was not present.

WASHINGTON, April 18—6 P. M.

The question was taken on Benton's nine propositions submitted some days since, and all were rejected. The question was then taken upon a proposition by Mr. Hamlin; excepting the admission of California from the reference, rejected yeas 20, nays 25. Mr. Walker moved to amend the original motion of reference by excepting therefrom the subject of arrest of fugitive slaves, rejected—Yeas, 27, Nays 20.

Mr. Hale moved to amend by adding a provision referring to the committee all petitions and remonstrances sent to the Senate this Spring relating to subjects referred to select committee. Mr. Clay hoped the reference would be made—he thought that the committee after reading one or two of them would be satisfied. Mr. King opposed the reference of these petitions from miserable fanatics; it was insulting to propose it.

Mr. Hale in the course of some remarks in reply said, that the SENATOR from Alabama considered it respectful to refer the cogitations of Senate, but when it was purposed to refer the thoughts of the people, he called it insulting. After some further debate, the chair ruled Hale's amendment out of order, upon the ground that the petitions proposed to be referred were not under consideration. The final question being taken upon the motion to refer Messrs. Clay and Bell's resolutions to a select committee of thirteen, without instructions; it was adopted.

WASHINGTON, April 23—3 P. M.

SENATE.—The Senate was engaged all day yesterday in discussing the resolution offered by Col. Benton, instructing the committee of 13, to whom was referred Messrs. Clay and Bell's resolutions, to report separately upon each subject involved, and not to unite in one bill or more, incongruous subjects. Mr. Benton's motion was laid on the table.

HOUSE.—Mr. Richardson's resolution to appoint a committee to inquire into and report on claims allowed by the present Cabinet, formed the principal subject of discussion in the House yesterday—they were eventually adopted.

Mr. Allen, of Maine, is confirmed as Consul to the Sandwich Islands, and Mr. Kinney, of the Newark Advertiser, as Consul to Lyons.

The nominations of Messrs. Lawrence, Maxwell and Loomis, were continued until the return of the committee attending the remains of Mr. Calhoun.

ARRIVAL OF THE AMERICA.

NEW YORK, April 20.

The America arrived at Boston this morning.

England.

A severe hurricane occurred on the coast of England on March 3d. The packet ship Skiddy of New York, and the Howard of New Orleans were wrecked, all hands saved. The steamer Adelaide from Dublin to London was lost near the mouth of the Thames; every soul on board, numbering 200, was drowned.

Smith O'Brien and his associates had arrived at Van Dieman's Land; the felons were granted tickets of leave on condition of their engaging, that their liberty should not be the means of effecting their escape from off the island—all, except Smith O'Brien accepted the boon; he had been sent under surveillance to Menai Island. The British Parliament has done little more than transact business of a local and uninteresting character.

France.

An effort has been made in the Assembly to introduce a bill to obtain the vote of the people in relation to the establishment of a monarchical government. The proposal was negatived.

It is said that the President is so deeply in debt that nothing but possession of the Imperial crown can extricate him, and that he is at present engaged in negotiating with Russia for the purpose of getting possession of it.

The government is perseveringly employed in introducing their measures of coercion, in which the majority of the Assembly sustain it. The bill relative to the press is meeting with the most determined opposition from the editors, which they consider more objectionable than a small stamp duty. The official organ of the President attacks the Democratic press and pointedly hints at the propriety of the President's concentrating all political rights in his person. Eugene Sue was spoken of as a candidate for the National Assembly. The French squadron is now at Naples, in which city political persecutions are rife.

Rome.

A recent number of the Roman Observer says, that the return of the Pope to Rome has been definitely fixed for the 6th inst. His speedy return seems to give general satisfaction.

Portugal.

Advices from Lisbon state that Mortinego is concentrating a squadron at the Tagas, in anticipation of a hostile naval force to enforce a settlement of the long standing claims of the American Government.

Austria.

The belief is entertained that a collision between Austria and Prussia is almost unavoidable.

Spain.

The report from Madrid of a speedy reconciliation between the English and Spanish governments, is confirmed. The state of Cuba causes the greatest solicitude to be felt on the part of the Spanish Government.

Turkey.

Recent advices from Constantinople state that preparations are being made to conduct Kossuth and other Hungarian refugees to Cantepon, in Asia Minor, where they are to be confined it is said for five years.

A telegraphic dispatch of the 19th of March, from Theisler, states that the insurrection in Russia is extending its rage and increasing in strength.

From the Louisville Journal of the 24th.

Terrible Steamboat Calamity--Great loss of Life.

It is our painful duty this morning, to record one of the most distressing steamboat accidents that has ever occurred on the Ohio river.

On Monday night, about 12 o'clock, the Belle of the West, bound from Pittsburgh to St. Louis, was discovered to be on fire a little below Warsaw, in this State, about 100 miles above this city. She had a large number of passengers on board, full 100 in the cabin, and an equal number on deck. The fire originated in the hold. When it was discovered, the boat was turned to the Indiana shore, about half a mile below Florence, whilst the Captain proceeded to arouse the passengers from sleep, a few at a time, not wishing to create a consternation, lest a general panic and rush might involve an unnecessary loss of life.

The progress of the fire was tremenduous. Within five minutes after its discovery the entire boat seemed wrapped in flames. A large proportion of the passengers were still on board, and the scene was now terrible beyond description. Men, women, and children were running and shrieking over cabin and deck; some in their confusion mistaking their way and rushed into the midst of the flames, and others plunged into the river on the side of the boat farthest from the shore and perished in the waters. To add to the horrors of the occasion, the steam pipe burst, or one of the flues collapsed in the midst of the raging fire, and three or four passengers were dangerously scalded.

The sights and sounds upon the shore were indeed awful. The multitude were rushing in all directions in search of husbands, wives, fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, and children, and the shriek of doubt and anxiety, the wild scream of apprehensions realized, and the cry of joy at the meeting of relatives and friends filled the air.

We have heard some thrilling incidents attending this great calamity. A fine, brave boy, 12 years old, leaped into the river, and, whilst swimming toward the shore, saw his mother upon the boat struggling to make her escape, overburthened by the weight of two little children. Lifting his right hand from the water he beckoned to her to throw one of the children to him and she did so. He swam with the child to the shore and the mother escaped with the other, and thus the whole family were saved. Many other families were far less fortunate. Of the family of a man named Amon Waggoner, of Virginia, consisting of himself, his wife, and eight children, three children were lost, a daughter of 17, another of 13, and a little son of 4. They were on their way to Iowa and lost everything they had. About fifty German Moravians from near Lancaster, Pa., were on board and many of these lost children and relatives.

We have heard some painful rumors in regard to the possible cause of the fire. A family was put on shore at Cincinnati on account of having the small-pox. Some of the relatives of the family on board were very indignant, and one of them, it is said, expressed his belief that the boat would never reach Louisville. Another, according to the statement of a woman who professes to have heard the remark, said that the boat should not reach Louisville. The hatches were down when the boat left Cincinnati, but, at the breaking out of the fire, they were missing, and could not even be found, and two or three persons at least lost their lives by falling through the hatchways into the burning hold. During the conflagration a trunk belonging to one of the passengers, a young man, was taken a considerable distance from the shore and rifled of $600.

The number of persons who lost their lives is variously estimated—some say thirty, some forty, and some fifty. Among the survivors not more than four or five are supposed to have been dangerously wounded by the fire and steam. Some of the survivors made their way to Florence, where they were kindly and hospitably entertained, especially by Judge Joseph Melin, and others got upon a boat about daybreak and proceeded to Cincinnati. Early in the morning the citizens of Warsaw appointed a committee to go over and tender to the survivers all necessary aid and hospitality.

Early in the afternoon the mail-boat Ben Franklin, Capt. Summons, arrived at the scene of the calamity, and, a large number of the survivors still remaining upon the shore, Capt. S. landed his boat to offer them relief. He took on board all such as chose to come to this city, not less than forty or fifty in number, making no charge against them, and giving them the best his sumptuous table afforded.

The passengers of the Franklin made up a purse of seventy-eight dollars for the sufferers, and appointed a committee, as will be seen from their published proceedings, to wait upon the citizens of Louisville and solicit contributions. We earnestly hope that our fellow-citizens will contribute generously. Many of the poor sufferers are now in our midst, far from their homes and far from their places of destination without a dollar in money, or a dollar's worth of property. The committee will of course proceed this morning to a vigorous discharge of its duties.

Great Conflagration in the City of Mexico! Very Late and Important!

The N. Orleans Picayune of last Saturday evening brings us the following:

The British steamship Medway arrived at Mobile Point on Friday, the 19th inst., having left Vera Cruz on the 15th inst. The Medway brought over 110 passengers, and $500,000 in specie.

Capt. Rodovich, late of the brig Titi, was one of the passengers on the Medway. He informs us that the Titi was sold at auction and brought over $900, and the cargo was sold for $600. When the Titi went ashore, there were $33,000 in specie on board, which was saved. Three other vessels were lost in the same gale which wrecked the Titi; the French bark Jenny from Bordeaux; the Mexican schooner Juniato. The American bark Eugenia was to have sailed from Vera Cruz to New York.

By the arrival of the Medway we have papers from Vera Cruz to the 12th instant, and from the city of Mexico to the 10th.

The city of Mexico was, on the 29th ult., visited by a double calamity In the first place, at about 10 o'clock in the morning, a southwest wind commenced blowing with great violence, and shortly became a perfect hurricane, such as had never been experienced in Mexico in the memory of the "oldest inhabitant." From mid-day till 5 o'clock in the evening the hurricane raged with inconceivable fury; walls were overturned, signs carried off, and twelve large trees in the Alameda were blown down. The streets were filled with debris, and were rendered for a time impassable. At Puebla the effects of the hurricane were less severely felt than at the capital.

At the moment when this tempest was at its height the toesin sounded from all the churches in the city, and the cry of fire resounded through the streets, which but a moment before almost deserted, soon were filled with an affrighted crowd. The cause of the alarm was a fire which had broken out in the carriage shop of Wilson & Hope, Sapo street, just in that part of the city where the hurricane raged most fearfully. In less than an hour that establishment and many adjacent houses were destroyed.

The violence of the wind not only rendered useless all efforts to extinguish the flames, but carried the burning embers to a great distance. In this manner the city was set on fire in two other places—at the carriage shop of Mr. Patricio Desmond, New Mexico street, and at a point near the Alameda. The pumps failed, water was scarce, the fire department was badly organized, and the wind continued to blow with the same fury, so that it was believed, not without reason, that these three fires, at distant points, would lead to a general conflagration. Happily, however, the general solidity which characterizes the structure of Mexican houses stopped the progress of the flames about five o'clock in the evening. About a hundred families were deprived of their homes by this lamentable catastrophe. The damage is estimated at $500,000. During the fire the French Foreign Legion, under the order of M. Le Vapeur, the French Minister, did good service, and one of its members was severely wounded. A young sculptor named Jose Maria Miranda was nearly killed. The Minister of Relations had appointed a committee of four to collect and receive subscriptions in aid of the sufferers, and the President had headed the list with a donation of $100.

On the 30th ult. an officer of the National Guard had a quarrel with the proprietor of a pulqueria, on the corner of Vanegas and Chavarria streets, in which the latter received a mortal wound. Another man was assassinated on the same night.

On the 22d of March a terrible conflagration broke out in the town of Cormen, which destroyed thirty-two houses.

The constant stream of emigration from the western States to California, is beginning to be sensibly felt. More than six thousand persons have already left Michigan, each of whom took in money or outfit at least $500, transferring from that State the sum of $3,000,000. From Iowa, it is said, 3,000 persons will depart this season—estimating that each emigrant will take with him means equal to $350, it appears that the emigration to California this year, will cause an abstraction from Iowa of $1,000,000. It is estimated that at least 17,500 emigrants will leave Missouri for California during the current year, and that each will have an outfit worth $350. The State will thus be drained of over $6,000,000. Thus from three States of the Union, we find an aggregate outlay of more than $10,000,000—caused by the emigration to California. Speaking of the effect of this large emigration from the States, the New York Express says:—

The emigration to California, especially from the western States, is likely to be immense; and the result is, in many quarters a depreciation in the value of property, particularly in land, Iowa, in some parts, we remark, is threatened with a sort of depopulation.

Thus all is not gold that glitters, in the old States of the Union. What is the gain of one is the loss of another. Texas has been settled at the expense of the south-western slave States, and by the stoppage of their growth. The Mexican war requisitions, to say nothing of the blood and treasure they have cost, are now settled to the sad detriment of Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois and Iowa.

The demand for money in the interior, to fit out emigration for California is, in some considerable degree, felt even in this city; that money which would naturally come here now from the west, to buy goods for consumption there, is now being used in investments for horses, mules, cattle, teams, &c., for the Eldorado.

The "western fever," it may be said, rages now with as much intensity in the Northwest, as the "Ohio fever," raged in New England after the peace of 1816, or as the Wisconsin and Michigan fever has raged for some time past in New York and Northern Ohio, and parts of New England. The western fever is only now more intense, in as much as the field of operation is much larger.

NEW YORK, April 23, 1850.

The correspondence of the Courier and Enquirer, writing from Washington states that the Nicaragua treaty is concluded and signed. It speaks of it as highly favorable to the United States, and says that it liberates every part of Central America from British bondage. It re-establishes the Monroe doctrine, and ensures the construction of the ship canal—it admits all nations to use the canal—it secures the protection of Great Britain over all other routes to the Pacific. It was sent to the Senate yesterday, reported and referred.

Advices from Vera Cruz to the 25th ult., state, that in the interior the cholera is prevailing to a considerable extent, and in the city of Mexico, that the natives were carried off after being attacked. The Congress was still in session. Mr. Coude, commissioner for settling the boundary between the United States and Mexico, had returned to the city of Mexico, and would finish his labors in November next. The "Monitor" nominated Gen. Mariano Arista as a candidate for the next Presidency. Assassinations at the capital of Queretaro are frequent. Among those killed are Mr. Fernandez and Mr. Quenodo, deputy to Congress, who was stabbed in thirty places while lying in bed.

The annual production of the manufactories of the shoes known as brogans, in Massachusetts, is stated to be in value $20,000,000.

A lump of gold was received in New York city, by the steamer Georgia, which is said to be worth $2,600.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

OH YES!

The Old Pioneer on the Track Again!

MR. HENRY W. MILLER, well known in this region, as one of the first western men, has joined me as partner; and we have removed our large stock of English Goods,

Imported Direct from Liverpool,

to our new store opposite our late stand; and in addition to the largest and

Best Stock of Hardware and Smallwares

in Kanesville, we have selected some superior lots of

Dry Goods, Iron, Steel, Springs, Axles, Axes and Holloware,

in the St. Louis Market, expressly for the WINTER TRADE, and the necessities of this community.

We have re-marked all our goods and have agreed to sell off our stock—superior in quality though it be—at prices sufficiently low to induce a continuation and increase of our trade; and to remove an influence existing, not altogether without foundation, that some of the goods of the late firm—Brown & Barham were too high,; in a word, we only want to live among you and desire not to enrich ourselves, at your cost, we wish "to spend and be spent," for the good of the cause, which is to us, as to you the greatest and best. Our motto in business, is and shall be

"Small Profits and Quick Returns."

The truthfulness of which you cannot prove unless you come, see and trade with

BROWN & MILLER.

N. B. All accounts due to the late firm—Brown & Barham, will be received, settled and accounted for by THOMAS D. BROWN, at Brown & Millers store.

NEW GOODS!

A. SORLEY,

St. Joseph, Missouri,

IS now receiving a splendid lot of SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS, of every description, of the Latest Style and Patterns. And is prepared to offer Great Inducements to all who may favor him with a call. His stock comprises a general assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, and Bonnets. Also, a large and well selected assortment of Iron and nails.

My plan is to sell for CASH ONLY, and at a small advance on cost; the rate charged for goods at my store, will contrast largely with prices paid by those who buy on time. Many place an undue importance on the credit system, unmidful of the fact, that constitutes a nominal profit, yet when compared with the invariable cash system it is a positive loss.

Selling on time is hazardous under the best circumstances. Those who sell on time must buy on time. Therefore, I will say to my old customers and the public generally, that you will save much by calling and examining my Stock of Goods, before purchasing.

POETRY.

What is Noble!

BY CHAS. SWAIN.

What is noble? to inherit
Wealth, estate and proud degree?
There must be some other merit,
Higher yet than these for me!—
Something greater far must enter
Into life's majestic span;
Fitted to create and centre
True nobility in man!

What is noble! 'tis the finer
Portion of our mind and heart;
Linked to something still diviner,
Than mere language can impart;
Ever prompting—ever seeing
Some improvement yet to plan;
To uplift our fellow being—
And, like man, to feel for man.

What is noble? is the sabre
Nobler than the humble spade?
There is a dignity in labor
Truer than e'er Pomp arrayed!
He who seeks the Mind's improvement
Aids the world—in aiding mind!—
Every great commanding movement
Serve not one—but all mankind.

O'er the Forge's heat and ashes—
O'er the Engine's iron head—
Where the rapid shuttle flashes,
And the spindle whirls its thread,
There is Labor lowly tending
Each requirement of the hour,
There is genius still extending
Science—and its world of power!

'Mid the dust, and speed, and clamor
Of the loom-shed and the mill;
'Midst the clink of wheel and hammer,
Great results are growing still!
Though too oft by Fashion's creatures
Work and workers may be blamed;
Commerce need not hide its features!
Industry is not ashamed!

What is noble? that which places
Truth in its enfranchised will!
Leaving steps—like angel-traces—
That mankind may follow still!
E'en though Scorn's malignant glances
Prove him poorest of his clan,
He is the noble—who advances
Freedom, and the Cause of Man!

MISCELLANY.

Johnny Beedle's Courtship.

BY JOHN SEAL.

After my sleigh ride last winter, and the slippery trick I was served by Patty Bean, nobody would suspect me of hankering after the women again in a hurry. To hear me curse and swear and rail against the whole feminine gender, you would have taken it for granted that I should never so much as look at one again to all eternity. Oh, but I was wicked. "Darn and blast their eyes!" says I; "blame their skins, torment their hearts, and darn them to darnation." Finally, I took an oath and swore that if I ever meddled or had any dealings with them again, (in the sparking line, I mean,) I wish I might be hung and choked.

But swearing off from women and then going into a meeting house chock full of gals all shining and glittening in their Sunday clothes and clean faces, is like swearing off from liquor and going into a grog shop. It's all smoke.

I held out and kept firm to my oath for three whole Sundays—forenoons, afternoons and intermissions complete. On the fourth there were strong symtoms of a change in the weather. A chap about my size was seen on the way to the meeting house, with a new patent hot on; his head hung by the ears on a shirt collar; his cravat had a pudding in it, and branched out in front in a double bow-knot. He carried a straight back and a stiff neck, as a man ought to when he has all his best clothes on; and every time he spat he sprang his body forward like a jack-knife, in order to shoot clear of the ruffles.

Squire Jones's pew is next but two to mine, and when I stand up to prayers and take my coat tail under my arm, and turn my back to the minister, I naturally look right straight at Sally Jones. Now Sally had got a face not to be grinned at in a fog. Indeed, as regards beauty, some folks think she can pull an equal yoke with Patty Bean. For my part, I think there is not much boot between the two. Any how they are so nigh matched that they have hated and despised each other like rank poison ever since they were school gals.

Squire Jones had got his evening fire on, and sat himself down to reading the great Bible when he heard a rap at the door.

"Walk in. Well, John, how der do? Git out, Pompey."

"Pretty well I thank you, Squire, how do you do?"

"Why so as to be crawling;—ye ugly beast will ye hold yer yop;—haul up a chair and sit ye down, John."

"How do you do, Mrs. Jones?"

"Oh, middlin', how's yer marn?—don't forget the mat, Mr. Beedle!"

This put me in mind that I had been off soundings several times in the long muddy lane, and my boots were in a sweet pickle.

It was old Captain Jones's turn: the grandfather being roused from a doze by the bustle and racket, he opened both his eyes at first with wonder and astonishment. At last he began to hollow so loud that you might hear him a mile, for he takes it for granted that every body is just as deaf as he is.

"Who is it? I say who in the world is it?"

Mrs. Jones going close to his ear screamed out:

"It's Johnny Beedle."

"Ho—Johnny Beedle. I remember he was one summer at the siege of Boston."

"No, no, father; bless your heart that was his grandfather, that's been dead and gone this twenty years."

"Ho—but where does he come from?"

"Down town."

"Ho—and what does he follow for a living?"

And he did not stop asking questions after this sort till all the particulars of the Beedle family were published and proclaimed in Mrs. Jones' last speech. He then sunk back into his doze again.

The dog stretched himself before one andiron, and the cat squat down before the other. Silence came on by degrees like a calm snow storm, till nothing was heard but a cricket under the hearth, keeping time with a sappy birch forestick. Sally sat up as prim as if she was pinned to the chairback, her hands crossed genteely upon her lap, and her eyes looking straight into the fire. Mammy Jones tried to straighten herself too, and laid her hands across her lap. But they would not lay still. It was full twenty-four hours since they had done any work, and they were now out of all patience with keeping Sunday. Do what she would to keep them quiet, they would bounce up now and then, and go through the motions in spite of the fourth commandment. For my part, I sat looking very much like a fool; the more I tried to say something; the more my tongue stuck fast. I put my right leg over the left, and said "Hem." Then I changed, and put my left leg over the right. It was no use; the silence kept coming on thicker and faster. The drops of sweat began to crawl over me. I got my eyes on my hat hanging on a peg on my road to the door. At that moment the captain all at once sung out, 'Johnny Beedle!' It sounded like a clap of thunner, and I started at once right up on end.

"Johnny Beedle, you'll never handle such a drumstick as your father did, if yer would live to the age of Methusaler. He would toss up his drumstick, and while it was whirling, take off a gill er rum, then kitch it as it came down, without losing a stroke in the tune. What d'ye think of that, ha?—But scull your chair around close along side er me so yer can hear. Now what have yer come a'ter?"

"I a'ter? Oh, jist takin' a walk."

"Pleasant walkin', I guess."

I mean just to see the folks—how they all do."

"Ha! That's another lie you've come a courtin', Johnny Beedie, you're arter our Sal. Say now, d'ye want to marry, or only to court?"

That was what I call a choker. Poor Sally made but one jump, and landed in the middle of the kitchen, and then she skulked in the dark corner, till the old man, after laughing himself into a whooping-cough, was put to bed.

Then came apples and cider; and the ice being broken, plenty of conversation with Mammy Jones about the minister and sermon followed. I agreed with her to a nicety upon all the points of doctrine, but I had forgot the text, and all the heads of discourse but six. Then she teased and tormented me to tell who I thought the best singer in the gallery that day. But mum—there was no getting that out of me. "Praise to the face is often disgrace," says I, throwing a squint at Sally.

At last Mrs. Jones lighted another candle, and after charging Sally to look well to the fire, she led the way to bed, and the Squire gathered up his shoes and stockings and followed.

Sally and I were left sitting a good yard apart, honest measure. For fear of getting tongue-tied again, I set right in with a steady stream of talk. I told her all the particulars of the weather that had passed, and also made some pretty cute guesses as to what it was likely to be in future. At first I gave a hitch up with my chair at every full stop, then, growing saucy, I repeated it at every comma, and semi-colon, and at last it was hitch, hitch, hitch, and I planted myself by her side.

"I swow Sally, you looked so plagey handsome to-day, that I wanted to eat you up."

"Oh, Pshaw! get along you," says she.

My hand had somehow, crept along on its fingers, and began to scrape acquaintance with hers. She sent it home again with a desperate jerk.

"Try it again. No better luck. Why, Miss Jones, you're getting obstropulous—old maidish, I guess.

"Hands off is fair play, you know, Mr. Beedle."

It's a good sign to find a girl sulky. I knew where the shoe pinched. It was that Patty Bean business. So I went to work to persuade her that I had never any notion after Patty, and to prove it, I fell to running her down at a great rate. Sally could not help joining me, and I raythor guess Miss Patty suffered a few. I now not only got hold of her hand without opposition, but managed to slip an arm around her waist. But there was no satisfying me, so I must go poking out my lips after a buss. I guess I rued it. She fetched me a slap in the face that made me see stars and my ears rung like a brass kettle for a quarter of an hour. I was forced to laugh at the joke, though it was out of the wrong side of my mouth, which gave my face something the appearance of a gridiron. The battle began in the usual way.

"Ah, Sally, give me a kiss and ha' done with it."

"I wont, so there now."

"I'll take it, whether or no."

"Do it, if you dare."

And at it we went rough and tumble.

An odd destruction of starch now commenced. The bow of my cravat was squat up in half a shake. At the next bout smash went shirt collar, and at the same time some of the head fastenings gave way, and down come Sally's hair like a flood in a mill-dam broke loose, carrying away half a dozen combs. One dig of Sally's elbow, and my blooming ruffles wilted down to a dish-cloth. But she had no time to boast. Soon her neck tackling began to shiver. It parted at the throat, and whorahl came a string of white beads scampering and running races every way you could think of about the floor.

By the hokey! if Sally Jones isn't rale grit there's no snakes. She fought fair, however I must admit, and neither tried to bite nor scratch: and when she could fight no longer for want of breath she yielded handsomely. Her arms fell down by her side—her hair back over the chair, her eyes closed, and there lay a little plump mouth all to the air. Lord! did you ever see a hawk pounce on a young robin? or a bumble-bee upon a clover top? I say nothing.

Constarnit, how a buss will crack on a still frosty night. Mrs. Jones was about half-way between a sleep and a wake.

"There goes my yeast bottle," said she to herself, "burst into twenty pieces, and my bread is all dough again."

The upshot of the matter is, I fell in love with Sally Jones head over ears. Every Sunday night, rain or shine, finds me rapping at Squire Jones' door, and twenty times have I been within a hair's breadth of popping the question. But now I have made a final resolve, that if I live till next Sunday night, and I don't choke in the trial, Sally Jones will hear thunder.

Advice to Ladies whose husbands are digging Gold in California.

As a large number of our fellow-citizens have left their wives behind them in their search for hidden treasures, we trust that it will not seem disrespectful nor impertinent, it we offer a few words of advice to these temporarily widowed ladies.

As it is quite enough for one of the family to be enduring hardship and privation, it is incumbent upon the ladies to make themselves as easy and as comfortable as circumstances will admit. The most reasonable occupation will be the planning of new dresses, dashing equipages, and fine parties for the future. To save time, it will be well to look over the dry goods stores, milliners and dress-maker's, jewellers, and furniture ware-houses, so as to know exactly what to buy when the gold arrives. It may be well also, to take time by the forelock, and order such sumptuous articles as are not kept on hand. If merchants will trust, so much the better; you can have your things without waiting on tardy remittances.

When the first invoice of the gold comes, your friends will probably tell you about savings banks, city stock investments, or stupidity of that sort. Of course, you won't think of such a thing. You will now buy your dresses and jewelry. Some would say, pay your debts, but those who trusted you can surely wait for the next remittance. There must be plenty more where this came from.

It will be time now, especially if you have received a second remittance, to cut all your former acquaintance. It will be very lonesome for a time, after you have cut the old, and before you have found the new. This is what the farmers call "between hay and grass," but the thoughts of future triumph will sustain you.

Now, while your time is little occupied with acquaintances, you cannot do better than prepare yourself for your new sphere in life. Read very carefully a dozen or two of fashionable novels. They are rather dull reading to be sure, but their lessons in the manners of genteel and aristocratic society will be invaluable.

You want a French teacher, a dancing master, and, if you can learn a little music, all the better; but be sure you have the most fashionable masters. You also want an accomplished serving maid, who has been turned out of a few of our first rate families. Her gossip will be of great use to you. Lose no opportunity to become acquainted with fashionable young men. They are great scamps it is very true, but then they may be of service to you, and the end justifies the means.

You will now be prepared to launch in the vortex of fashionable dissipation, if the gold only comes in reasonable quantities. While you are flaunting in your new finery, your husband is working in the water, lying on the ground, and eating pork. What does that matter? Put your pleasure against his privations, and there will be still quite a pretty average of enjoyment between you. Besides, riches take to themselves wings. You may never have another chance to see life; and if one of these days, instead of a remittance of gold, you hear that your husband has died of a fever, or that his luck as a gold-digger has failed him, you will have spent some happy moments, and at the worst you can go back to your sewing. Meantime we hope our advice will be taken kindly as it is meant.

MRS. PARTINGTON ON THE PACIFIC RAILROAD.—Thirty thousand dollars worth of specific railroad stock taken! Well, I wonder what kind of stock they are going to use to expel the railroad, as it flies on its course as if on the minions of a pledged singster over the great desert country, which consists of vast forges, immense cannons, great taverns, big basins, and other characteristics of a galvanic legend, whether they are horses, oxen or mules. I do not believe that the new spangled notion of steam injuns and volcanic batters isn't to despair with the old ways of movin' thro' the world, specially in sinner's movin' down that broad road to destruction; where as the parson said, last Sunday, there was whipping and whaling and knocking out teeth.

TWENTY-ONE young women from the State of Maine sailed last week from New York city for California. They understand what is most wanted in California. They deserve success—short courtships and good husbands.

STEAM BOAT EXPLOSION ON LAKE ERIE—Twenty persons killed and wounded.—The Cincinnati Gazette has intelligence that the steam boat Troy burst a boiler on the 24th inst., on Lake Erie, just at the mouth of the Niagara river, by which twenty persons were killed and wounded. The Gazette gives a list of them, but none were from this region. Among the list of passengers saved we notice the names of Mr. Pragoff and son, of Louisville.

LARGE REWARD.—Officer Smith, of the New York special police, was paid on Monday, the reward of $4,000 for arresting the thieves who stole $10,000 worth of gold dust some time since, and recovering the property.

BOSTON, April 8—P. M.

Dr. Parkman's family on Saturday paid Littlefield the $3,000 reward offered for the recovery of Parkman.

Prentice says that "Locofoco" papers are like the month of March, "they come in like lions, and go out like lambs." He always reminds us of May, the month the feathered songsters carol on a rail.

A young lady who married a rich man under the pretence of being beautiful, is discovered to have painted, worn bustles, and otherwise disguised her natural imperfections. Her husband means to sue her for obtaining money under false pretences.

COUNCIL BLUFFS FERRY,

Across the Missouri River.

THIS Ferry chartered by the Legislature of the State of Iowa, and licensed by the Superintendent of Indian affairs, has been in successful operation for the last year. We are now prepared with good boats and experienced watermen to cross emigrants with safety and despatch. The location and facilities of this crossing are too well known to require a description at our hands. The fact of its being under the eye of the Agent and approved by the Indians to whom we make Semi-Annual payments for the privilege of having a road through their country, ensures their good will towards the Emigrants. The North side of Platte river is now acknowledged to be the Healthiest, Nearest and Best route to the gold mines. We can cross at Council Bluffs, one hundred or more teams per day, having three good boats.

Botanic Physician.

DR. J. C. BRALEY, in the vicinity of Kanesville, opposite Mr. Stoddard's on Indian Creek, tenders his professional services to the afflicted of Pottawatamie County. From the success that has attended his professional labors heretofore, particularly in Surgery, Obstetrics and Cholera, he feels a degree of confidence and assurance in undertaking the management of the most difficult cases, and also competent to manage most diseases incident to this climate.

He is prepared to sell his medicines at a reduced price, as he intends to go to the Valley this season; and he hopes that all those who are indebted to him will come forward and settle their accounts immediately, or within six weeks, if not paid at the expiration of said period, they will be lodged in the hands of an Attorney for Collection.

STOVES! STOVES!!

MR. DUSTIN AMY, of this town, would respectfully notify the citizens of this county, and particularly that portion of them that expect to emigrate to the Salt Lake, that he intends to have, by the first boat this spring, a heavy and well selected assortment of Cast Iron Cooking Stoves, which he proposes to sell on very favorable terms for ready cash.

As Mr. A. is a tinner by trade, he will fit up the stoves with furnitures according to order, and on the shortest notice. He keeps constantly on hand a good assortment of tin ware, and a good supply of all vessels usually called for by Emigrants. He has secured sufficient help to execute almost any job that may be required in his line on very short notice. The experience that he has had in traveling in the West, and also in fitting out emigrants for the last two or three years to journey over the Plains from this place, enable him to anticipate, correctly, the present wants of emigrants; and he has and will, therefore, prepare his stock and articles for sale to suit this frontier Market.

A Glance at the World.

Our native planet has completed another revolution. The days, hours, and moments of another year have fled to mingle with those before the flood. Events of varied and deep importance have transpired, and stamped their impress upon the historic page of 1849. Numbers who entered upon the fleeting moments of the year past, filled with life and buoyant with hope and bright expectation, now sleep in death, whilst thousands of eager intelligences have taken up their abode in the flesh, and commenced their earthly education. During the last twelve months, the destroyer has laid many low. Many who would not have God to reign over them, nor accept his salvation, have fallen victims to the overflowing sickness. The Saints have hardly escaped. The Lord has begun to thrash the nations. His consuming judgments are abroad in the earth. He strikes terror to the hearts of kings. The high and mighty have fallen. The proud are confounded. The poor and humble rejoice in the Holy One of Israel.

One idea presents itself above all others. By the unerring force of the law of gravitation, precisely as one scale of the balance rises the other proportionably falls. Just so it is in respect of the two principles or powers that are striving for mastery in the world. The light of the living principle of divine revelation is piercing the dark places, and making war with all unrighteousness; and measurably as it is established and prevails in the earth, does the darkness, disunion, and confusion of the abetters of "no revelation" become manifest. The union, success, and prosperity of the Saints guage the rottenness and instability of all systems which are the offsprings of the wisdom of men.

Hundreds of honest hearts, anxiously waiting for the consolation of Israel, have wandered from sect to sect, and from party to party in search of truth, but have been unable to find it. All human institutions are like destitute of divine authority. All exhibit unmistakable symptoms of general decay. In all are found the seeds of decay and elements of corruption; none being right of God. One man's opinion, or system, is as good as another's. None reach within the veil. Their duration and influence are bounded by natural life and death. Built for this life, none for eternity. Their priesthood is of man, and perishes with him. Their authority vanishes at the grave, consequently it will never be recognized beyond it. Man invests man with a little brief authority and station here, but all measures and proceedings are executed in view and fear of death. The most powerful preachers are those who can preach death the most effectually and awfully—who can array and present the king of terrors in robes of dreadful majesty. To convert men, they "shake them over hell," which is the second death. Well might one of old say, "Life and immortality are brought to light by the gospel." The servant of God, a priest of the royal order of Melchisedec, does not preach death. To him death is swallowed up in victory. He is come that they might have life, and have it more abundantly." Such a priesthood exists not for a day, but is the "power of endless life." The great differences between true and false priesthoods appears to a point of duration. The true and right-ful priesthood is "without beginning of days or end of life," consequently, its only message is life, life, eternal life. It acts for eternity. Its power extends "beyond this visible diurnal sphere." Its authority is acknowledged and received in the councils of heaven. "Whatsoever ye bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever ye loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." A false power knows no death, and therefore makes no provision for any. Death is the non-acceptance of eternal life, the absence of the vital principle. A false priesthood does not and dare not assert its immortality, because it has none; and it cannot promisingly hold forth eternal life to its votaries, for it is mutable itself. All its acts, laws, and ordinances die at its death, and are known no more for ever. Repentance to such a priesthood is a repentance to be repented of. Proselytes to such a system, are twofold more the children of hell than they were before.

Turn which way we will, all uninspired systems are very unsatisfactory. Catholicism cramps and trammels the mind of man beyond endurance. Multitudes are disgusted with episcopacy, in consequence of the pride, greediness, and overbearing of the clergy, and the obvious anomalies of its constitution and working. The remaining numberless sects shine little brighter. The Scottish poet drew his bow at a good venture:—

"This gow'd makes sogers fight the fiercer, Without it, preaching would be scarcer."

Methodistic sanctity, with all the assistance of black coats, white cravats, gracious heaven-ward looks, and countenances screwed to the extreme point of hypocrisy, veils not the "black corruption of a putrid heart." A fierce, hot, and bitter contention has been carried on of late amongst the followers of John Wesley. An agitation involving one or all parties in guilt. The case appears to be like this:—Some of considerable talent and standing in that society, having entertained divers misgivings in respect of the infallibility of its governing officers or conference, imagining not that they loved the flock less, but the fleece more, take upon them to criticise the proceedings of that venerable body. The conference gets into a "pretty considerable fix," from which it endeavors to extricate itself by disfellowshipping the obnoxious parties. The agitators meet with such sympathy from the common people, who contribute, but spend not, whilst conference has a difficult task to convince a mistrustful public, that it has confounded ecclesistical jurisprudence with individual liberty.

Honest hearts are not altogether content to sit down by the cant and hypocrisy of the priesthood. When they are bitten by one sect, they fly to another, "out of the frying pan into the fire" often. We hear them exclaim, "I was brought up a Methodist, my parents were Methodists, and I had hoped to bring my children up to that persuasion; but how can I recommend a religion to them, whose councils display such scenes of confusion as characterised the last Wesleyan conference." "I had always thought conference a body of godly men, assembled in the fear of the Lord, to make decisions in righteousness, but we may judge of their spirit by their shouting 'old clothes,' 'mackerel,' &c., to one another, when some attempted to address the assembly." We are not surprised to see in the public journals like the following, "We are informed on good authority, that many Wesleyan ministers, dissatisfied with their system of church government, and not the least so with the recent proceedings, are meditating a resignation of their charges, and a course of study preparatory to offering themselves for ordination in the established church." Then again, there are many seceding from the church, impelled more or less by the views of the many cases that have preceded them.

Wisdom crieth in the streets—When will the people give ear—when will they learn that conferences, synods, assemblies, bible, missionary, and peace societies, are vain things for safety or unity. For behold, they bluster up, say something must be done, get up a monster peace meeting, or one in connexion with the Evangelical Alliance, and then vauntingly cry, "Look at our unity; we are all one, though divided amongst ourselves in so many different sects, each one going to heaven his own particular way, and singing his own particular song;, yet we can meet together, Episcopalians, Methodists, Presbyterian, Swedenborgians, Unitarians, Baptists, Ranters, and heaven knows what else; give one another the right hand of fellowship, and centre all our sympathies, talents, and energies in one common focus for the Redeemer's cause, the glory of God, or the salvation of immortal souls."

Presently, let the love drawn out cool a little, the great swelling words resolve themselves; then look at the lions in their undress, and we hear of one parson damning unsprinkled little infants; another conscientiously refusing to marry unsprinkled adults; a third denying christian burial to unsprinkled old and young. And this is unity!

"Just like prize fighters in a fair,
Who first shake hands before they box.
Then give each other plaguy knocks,
With all the love and kindness of a brother."

Many people are beginning to believe in a day of power. Hoary-headed sectarians, grown grey in the unprofitable traditions of their forefathers, now fish up tit bits from favorite commentators, in support of the idea that it is possible for man to be the agent of supernatural power. Says one, "I know one of our preachers who lay at death's door, but recovered therefrom by the faithful prayers of his congregation." Says another, "There is a man in our church who has healed several by laying on his hands in the name of the Lord." Mesmerism, too, is revealing intelligence from the unseen worlds. Some contend that mesmerism is simply a natural agent. I am more inclined to think it a spiritual power, for a natural agent can receive no spiritual intelligence. Mesmerism, considered as a spiritual power, is of doubtful tendency, it declares not its authority, neither makes known its origin. Can it be of God? Judging from analogy it is not. All heavenly supernatural agency that has appeared from the foundation of the world, has always unhesitatingly avowed its divine commission. Mesmerism has not done this. Its advocates deny its pretension to so high a mission. And yet it converses with the dead, and reveals things that have been and are to be.

Those who love righteousness have abundant cause for thankfulness to the father of lights, for the restoration of the Melchisedec priesthood, with its keys, powers, and authorities, by which men may detect false spirits, powers and influences, though they should assume the garb of angels of light. The powers of darkness appear to be preparing their forces for a decisive contest. May all Israel, as children of the day, know and escape the wiles of the arch deceiver, so that the glorious appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ may be to their joy and rejoicing, and not to their dismay and consternation.—[Star January 1, 1850. A Journeying Song for the Camp of Israel.

Dedicated to Prest. Brigham Young and Lady,

BY MISS. E. R. SNOW.

Tune—"Auld Lang Syne."

The time of winter now is o'er,
There's verdure on the plains:
We leave our shelt'ring roofs once more
And to our tents again.

Chorus—Thou Camp of Israel onward move,
Oh, Jacob! rise and sing—
Ye Saints! the worlds salvation prove—
All hail! to Zion's King.

We go to choice and goodly lands,
With rich and fertile soil;
That with the labor of our hands,
Will yield us wine and oil.

Chorus—Thou Camp of Israel, &c.

We go beside the mountain cliffs,
Where purest waters flow—
Where nature will her precious gifts
Abundantly bestow.

Chorus—Thou Camp of Israel, &c.

We'll find a climate pure and free,
Producing life and health:
Where steady care and industry,
Will be a source of wealth.

Chorus—Thou Camp of Israel, &c.

And there again we will surround
In peace, the luscious board;
And share the products of the ground
With skill and prudence stor'd.

Chorus—Thou Camp of Israel, &c.

We leave the mobbing gentile race
Who thirst to shed our blood;
To rest in Jacob's hiding place
Where Nephite Temples stood.

Chorus—Thou Camp of Israel, &c.

We seek a land where truth will reign
And innocence be free—
Where lawful rights will be maintained,
A land of Liberty.

Chorus—Thou Camp of Israel, &c.

We seek a land of holiness,
Where justice to the line
And to the plummet, righteousness
Will every work define.

Chorus—Thou Camp of Israel, &c.

We go where virtue will be known,
And merit meet its due;
For Zions' pathway will be strown
With light and glory too;

Chorus—Thou Camp of Israel, &c.

We go where hypocrites will fear
And tremble at the word
Of him! who is appointed here
To wield the two-edged sword.

Chorus—Thou Camp of Israel, &c.

We'll find the land the prophet saw
In vision, when he said
There, there, will the celestial law
Be given and obeyed.

Chorus—Thou Camp of Israel, &c.

We go where nations yet will come,
In ships, from climes abroad
To seek protection and a home
And worship Israel's God.

Chorus—Thou Camp of Israel, &c.

We'll build in peace and safety there,
A city to to the Lord:
And shout amid our toils to share
A Latter-days reward.

Chorus—Thou Camp of Israel! onward move,
Oh, Jacob! rise and sing—
Ye Saints! the worlds salvation prove—
All hail to Zions King.

Young Men.

There is no moral object so beautiful to me as a conscientious young man. I watch him as I do a star in the heavens; clouds may be before him, but we know that, though unseen, he illuminates his own true sphere. He resists temptation not without a struggle, for that is no virtue; but he resists and conquers, he bears the sarcasm of the profligate, and it stings him, for that is a trait of virtue, but heals with his own pure touch. He heeds not the watchword of fashion, if it leads to sin; the Atheist who says, not only in his heart, but with his lips, "there is no God!" controls him not: he sees the hand of a creating God, and rejoices in it.

Woman is sheltered by fond arms and loving council; old age is protected by its experience, and manhood by its strength; but the young man stands amid the temptations of the world like a self-balanced power. Happy he seeks and gains the prop of morality.

Onward, then, conscientious youth—raise thy standard, and nerve thyself for goodness.

If God has given thee intellectual powers, awake in that cause; never let it be said of thee "he helped to swell the river of sin by pouring his influence in its channels." If thou art feeble in mental strength, throw not that drop into a polluted current. Awake, arise, young man! assume that beautiful garb of virtue! It is difficult to be pure and holy. Put on thy strength then. Let truth be the lady of thy love—defend her.—[Miss Caroline Gilman.

It is said that the change which Mr. Calhoun intended to propose to the Constitution was the creation of two Executives; one from the north and one from the South.

Writing Letters.

BY JOSEPH SMITH.

The art of writing is one of the greatest blessings we enjoy. To cultivate it is our duty, and to use it is our privilege. By those means the thoughts of the heart can act without the body, and the mind can speak without the head, while thousands of miles apart, and for ages after the flesh has mouldered back to its mother dust. Beloved reader, have you ever reflected on this simple, this useful, this heavenly blessing? It is one of the best gifts of God to man, and it is the privilege of man to enjoy it. By writing, the word of the Lord has been handed to the inhabitants of the earth, from generation to generation. By writing, the inventions and knowledge of men have been received, age after age, for the benefit of the world. By writing, the transactions of life, like the skies over the ocean, are spread out upon the current of time, for the eyes of the rising multitudes to look upon. And while we are thus summing up some of the blessings and enjoyments which result from this noble art, let us not forget to view a few of the curses and mischiefs which follow an abuse of this high privilege. While we behold what a great matter a little fire kindles, let us not stand mute. Let us not forget to set a better example, when we see the slanderer dip his raven's quill in gall, to blot the fair fame of some innocent person. Let us weep, for so will the heavens do, when the great men of the earth write their glory in the tears of the fatherless and the widow. Let us mourn while this world's vanity is written for deception, in letters of gold. But enough, for the wicked are writing their own death warrant, and the hail of the Lord shall sweep away the refuge of lies. We, as the disciples of the blessed Jesus, are bound by every consideration that makes religion a blessing to the inhabitants of the earth, while we see this exalted privilege abused, to set a more noble example: To do our business in a more sacred way, and, as servants of the Lord, that would be approved in all things, hide no fault of our own, nor cover any imperfections in others; neither offend, lest we bring a reproach upon the great cause of our holy Father.

It is pleasing to God to see men use the blessings which he gave them, and not abuse them. For this reason, if the saints abide in the faith wherewith they have been called, the earth shall yield her increase, and the blessings of heaven shall attend them, and the Lord will turn to them a pure language, and the glory of God will again be among the righteous on earth. All things are for men, not men for all things. Beloved brethren, before we can teach the world how to do right, we must be able to do so ourselves: Therefore, in the love of him who is altogether lovely, whose yoke is easy and whose burden is light, who spake as man never spake, let us offer a few ideas on this subject, for the consideration of such as mean to love their neighbors as themselves, for the sake of righteousness and eternal life.

1. Never write a to letter to a friend or foe, unless you have business which cannot be done as well in some other way; or, unless you have news to communicate, that is worth time and money. In this way you will increase confidence and save postage.

2. Never write any thing to a friend or foe that you are afraid to read to friend or foe, for letters from a distance, especially one or two thousand miles, are sought for with great anxiety; and, as no one is a judge of men and things, you are liable to misrepresent yourself, your country, your friends and your enemies, and put in the mouth of the honest, as well as the dishonest, a lie, which truth, in her gradual but virtuous way, may not contradict till your head is under the silent clods of the valley.

3. Never write anything but truth, for truth is heavenly, and like the sun, is always bright, and proves itself without logic, without reasons, without witnesses, and never fails. Truth is of the Lord and will prevail.

4. Never reprove a friend or foe for faults in a letter, except by revelation; for in the first place, your private intentions, be they ever so good, are liable to become public, because all letters may be broken open, and your opinion only on one side of the question, can be scattered to the four winds; and he to whom you meant good, receives evil; and you are not benefitted. Again, we can hardly find language, written or spoken on earth, at this time, that will convey the true meaning of the heart to the understanding of another; and you are liable to be misunderstood, and to give unpleasant feelings; and you merely, to use a simile, bleed an old sore, by probing it for proud flesh, when it only wanted a little oil from the hand of the good Samaritan, in person to heal it. No matter how pure your intentions may be; no matter how high your standing is, you cannot touch man's heart when absent as when present. Truly, you do not cast your pearls before swine, but you throw your gold before man, and he robs you for your folly. Instead of reproof give good advice; and when face to face, rebuke a wise man and he will love you; or do so to your friend, that, should he become your enemy, he cannot reproach you: thus you may live, not only unspotted, but unsuspected.

5. Never write what you would be ashamed to have printed; or what might offend the chastest ear, or hurt the softest heart. If you write what you are ashamed to have printed, you are partial: If you write what would offend virtue, you have not the spirit of the Lord; and if you write what would wound the weak hearted, you are not feeding the Lord's lambs, and thus you may know that you are not doing to others what you would expect others to do to you. The only rule we would give to regulate writing letters is this: Write what you are willing should be published in this world, and in the world to come: And would to God, that not only the disciples of Christ, but the whole world, were willing to follow this rule: Then the commandments would be kept and no one would write a word against the Lord his God. No one would write a word against his father or mother. No one would write a word against his neighbor. No one would write a word against the creatures of God. No one would need write a word against anything but sin; and then the world would be worth living in, for there could be none to offend.

Novel Reading.

Why do you read novels? "To gain a knowledge of history, because many novels are founded on it" replies one. Suppose a naturalist should form of clay the figure of a new and unheard-of animal, and then deck a part of it with the wool of the sheep, another with the fur of the beaver, another with the feathers of an ostrich, and another with the quills of a porcupine, and thus by culling parts from certain real animals, should at length finish his ideal animal, would you make this uncouth combination of parts a subject of study in order to gain a knowledge of natural history? How does this new animal differ from a novel? The former is but an impersonation of the latter. The writer of a fiction produces a new and unheard-of book. He culls scraps of veritable history from here and there, and skilfully entwines them to suit his fancy. Examine carefully the historical novels of that prince of writers, Scott, and you will find, in comparing them with veritable history, that he has used facts only to give an air of truth to his works: in many cases, he has awfully distorted even these, in order to adopt them. It is the province of the historian to tell the truth; of the novel writer, to tell what he pleases. The one gives you a transcript of real-events, the other daguerrotypes the floating images of his excited fancy; and yet you go to the novel-writer to gain a knowledge of history!

Why do you read novels? "To gain a knowledge of human nature," replies another. Alas! for poor, erring humanity, if novel writers are its expositors. Our fallen nature is yet groaning under the curse of Eden. There is enough in the actual affairs of life to make a good man exclaim, "My whole head is sick, and my whole heart is faint;" but the real condition has far more symmetry, harmony and order, than these ideal caricatures of novel-writers. The very nature of their vocation impels them to go beyond the boundaries of truth, and to present to their readers not what is true, but what is new. Examine cautiously any of their works, and you will find that, with comparatively few exceptions, the characters with which you are so much delighted have not their likeness in heaven, on the earth, or under the earth. They are chimeras in the brain of your author, and yet you study these in order to gain a knowledge of human nature.

Why do you read novels? "To make myself conversant with the best styles of writing," replies another. This is a specious plea, and is often urged. But it is false. The individual who makes this a motive for reading several thousand pages of fiction, is self-deceived. There is nothing but the artificial interest that they create, which gives them the preference, and there is hardly a single novel written in a style worthy of being employed in writing a veritable book. One of the silliest objects in the world is an individual melted to tears while reading a novel: weeping over the phantasms which an author has made to flit before the mind. Wherein consists the utility of subjecting our finer feelings to such airy trifles? God never intended them to be exercised thus. But suppose that you could acquire the best style by reading novels, are you ignorant of that well-established fact in mental science, that the mind becomes assimilated to that which it habitually contemplates? Now, although you may be able to speak with the tongue of kings and princes, and lords and knights, and be familiar with tournaments and sceptres and crowns, and understand fully the sickly nomenclature of royal gallantry, what benefit does all this confer on you? * * * * * * The very objects which you ought to be familiar, have no attractions for you now, because your natural relish has been perverted.

You do wrong in reading novels, because you subject your purity of mind to a fearful trial. It is hard to discriminate between the good and the evil in novels. The novel appetite being once formed, it craves all. A hellish seduction characterizes this kind of reading. The unhappy being who takes the first steps becomes enamored of the pleasure it affords. All other reading becomes lifeless. Now observe this fact. Only one successful attempt has been made to write a novel in which woman is not a prominent character, and lust one of the main ingredients in the composition of its plot. Authors are well acquainted with human nature. They know that it loves to coast along the borders of infamy and crime. Open vulgarity and obscenity are forbidden by reigning custom; but novel writers, by means of honied words and artful plans, lead the mind just far enough to give it courage in its own imaginative powers, and then leave it in a most dangerous situation. A virtuous impulse would send it back; but, alas! here the enemy puts forth his greatest efforts. Where the novel-writer leaves off, the devil commences, and instils far more polluting thoughts than the literal construction of the word implies.

You do wrong in reading novels, because you destroy your power of concentration of mind. It is a fearful truth, that novels require less mental exercise than any other kind of reading. A mind wholly absorbed in fiction becomes dwarfish and unfit for the actual duties of life. The reason is obviously because the imagination is exercised, and the reasoning faculties lie dormant. You may feed the animal frame on chaff, and you will soon compel it to drag out a miserable existence; so you may feed the mind on fancies, and it will become enervated and unworthy the name of intellect. Exercise your reasoning powers. Store your mind with truth—that alone is beautiful; and you will find that thought is productive; each effort better capacitates the mind for the next. You will make a geometrical progression. Wherens in novel-reading your mind resembles the cup of Tantalus—an ever-flowing stream enters, but the water rises not.

The Mormons.

We notice in the papers of Philadelphia that J. L. Kane, Esq., delivered a lecture on Tuesday last before the Historical Society of that city, on which occasion he reviewed the history of the Mormon people, from the period of their ejection from Nauvoo to the time of their settlement in Deseret. Mr. Kane has himself visited the Mormons in their new home, and therefore, in the descriptive portion of his lecture, speaks from personal observation.

Much has been said for and against this people; and the unprejudiced and well-balanced mind is at times at a loss to determine whether they have been traduced or not. Upon the maxim, however, that communities, as well as an individual, are to be presumed innocent until proven guilty, we have hitherto refrained from condemning the Mormon people, and shall continue to do so, except upon strong proof of their criminality. One circumstance which weighs in their favor is, that the charges made against them, when not proceeding from parties directly interested in decrying them, have generally been anonymous. We with more confidence, therefore, take hold of any responsible and disinterested evidence which we find for or against them; and of such a character we judge Mr. Kane's lecture to be. The Philadelphia Inquirer gives the following synopsis of Mr. Kane's discourse:

"The lecturer, in a journey westward, arrived at their capital the day after the dispersion of its inhabitants, and well described the melancholy aspect of the deserted street—the desolate mansion, the untenanted workshop. He journeyed onwards, and came up with bands of frightened fugitives: he mingled among them—observed their admirable discipline in the conduct of their march—their tenderness to the sick—the devoted care with which, by compass, chain and well-known land-mark, they ascertained and registered for future recognition the burial-place of their dead. The description of the hardships this people have endured, as given by the speaker, was well calculated to win a feeling of sympathy—a sentiment he took care to improve by testifying, in the most unqualified manner, as to the faithfulness, affection and devotion of the Mormon women in their relations of daughters, sisters and wives.

"Mr. Kane's opportunities of observation were, we think, as commented on by him, well calculated to remove in the minds of his hearers the prejudice existing against this people. Their hospitality to California emigrants, and unvarying kindness to all who sought shelter and protection at their hands, were facts of which the prints bore constant proof; and that their enterprise, and sagacity, and industry, were elements which composed their character, and were fast elevating them into the condition of a great and thriving race; and that they had already assumed a position which entitled them to admission into the Union. Some of Mr. Kane's descriptions were very felicitous; we regret we are unable to give them in their very words—a circumstance indispensable to a just appreciation of their merits.

"In conclusion, the lecturer held this language:

"'I have given you, in terms, the opinion my four years' experience has enabled me to form of the Mormons, preferring to force you to deduce it for yourselves from the facts. But I will add, that I have not yet heard the single charge against them in a community—against their habitual purity of life, their willing integrity, their toleration of religious differences of opinion, their regard for the laws, of their devotion to the constitutional government under which we live—that I do not from my own observation, or upon the testimony of others, know to be unfounded.'

"The discourse, throughout, was deeply interesting, and was listened to with the closest attention."

The jealous man poisons his own banquet, and then eats of it.

Freedom may use her tongue, because speech is both her weapon and her spoils; but despotism is lost from the moment it attempts to vindicate its ways.

Col. Fremont on the Pacific Railroad.—The closing proceedings of the Pacific Railroad Convention, in Philadelphia, took place on Wednesday. They embrace an admirable letter from Col. Fremont. The Col. is, perhaps, the highest authority in the country upon the subject, having traveled over the whole route again and again. He contends that this continent can be crossed from the Mississippi to the Pacific, without climbing a mountain, and on the very line which every national consideration would require to connect the great valley of the West with the Pacific Ocean. He says, moreover, that in his opinion, it will be found convenient to divide the entire line into three parts—the Eastern, reaching from the mouth of the Kansas to the head of the Del Norte; the Middle, from the head of the Del Norte to the rim of the Great Basin; and the Western, from the rim of the Great Basin to the Ocean.

WEDNESDAY, MAY, 29, 1850.

Are You Whig or Democrat!

The above question is frequently asked us, and to avoid a tedious and unnecessary repetition in answering it; we now say, that our politics are Whig. We believe that the administration of the affairs of Government is safer when conducted by Whig policy than when managed by Locofoco zeal. The latter appears to us extravagant; and in many instances, exhibits a recklessness of character, tending to unwarantable extremes that endanger the peace and prosperity of the nation.

A medium course, tempered with caution, guided by a dignified wisdom, and inspiring confidence by a firm stability, we have considered the surest way to make a nation prosperous and happy. The surest way to command respect and veneration at home and abroad, and to make every citizen feel that he sits "under his own vine and fig tree."

Whigs and Democrats both have their good men and their bad ones. Merit makes manifest the former class, and corruption and intrigue the latter. Some men are above price and stand on principle, while others are in market to be knocked off to the highest bidder.

Let men be good or bad, honest or dishonest, true principles will shine in their lustre, at times, on the darkest sons of error. A cloud may obscure the sun for a time, yet it is bound to burst out sooner or later.

The Whigs are like a gentle rain upon the earth, which causes vegetation to revive and spring forth; while the Democrats are like a torrent falling from a broken cloud, which, though it saturates the ground, tears up and washes out by the roots the most precious plants. Quite too rapid!

Conscientiously believing that the greatest embodiment of safe and wise political principles, is with the Whigs, we sincerely honor their position; and at all suitable times, we shall feel it a duty and privilege to throw the small weight of influence which we may possess into their side of the scale. We want no influence except that which we earn and merit: And we consider ourself a lawful steward over the products of our own toil and labor; however some may envy us our hard earned capital, and curse us because we may have some little influence, though we never got it at their expense, nor by their good-will.

We do not deem it in accordance with the design of our paper to raise a political war or strife; but whenever a suitable opportunity presents, and circumstances require it, we shall speak from time to time as we may think the general interests of the people require. Not to hold up the errors, imperfections, corruptions, or crimes of men; but to hold up the true light, and let these other things vanish themselves without our fingers being defiled with them.

Mr. Heywood's Visit to President Taylor.

On the return of Mr. Heywood from Washington City to this place, he told us that he had resolved not to come all the way from Deseret to Washington, and return again without having an interview with President Taylor, the distinguished chieftain who led the American forces to victory and conquest in the sunny climes of Mexico.

After no little exertions, and by dint of perseverance, he succeeded in obtaining the desired opportunity The President was in a very good humor, and received him with much civility, and after some little conversation, said: "Can you raise potatoes in the Valley?" Mr. H. replied in the affirmative

When the interview ended, Mr. Heywood arose, gave the President his hand and said: "By the providence of God, President Taylor, you have been elevated to this dignified and responsible station! Now, I want you to be a father to our people." The President dropped his head for a moment, and then observed: "I will do you all the good I can, and as little harm as possible."

This is a good sentiment, and an index to a good and generous heart; and if the sentiment is faithfully observed (of which we entertain no doubt,) it will, most unquestionably, be satisfactory to our people. We have only sketched a few words of the interview to show the last sayings of the President on parting with Mr. Heywood

Sugar Beet.

Mr. Miles Beach, brother of Mr. Munson Beach, from St. Louis, is about starting from this point to the Salt Lake City with a stock of goods; and in connection with his mercantile operations, he goes out prepared to cultivate, on a pretty extensive scale, the Sugar Beet, and also intends to erect a sugar manufactory and refinery.

We view this as one of the greatest and best schemes that has ever been set on foot for the people of the Western Valleys. It brings one of the greatest comforts, nay, luxuries right to their doors, and puts it in the power of the people there to increase their comforts and to reduce their expenses. We hope and trust that Mr. B. will receive that favor, attention and patronage in the Valley of the Salt Lake which his noble enterprize justly entitles him to. He has a scientific knowledge of the business, and deserves to be encouraged. We wish him abundant success!

School Books and Stationary.

Who will go to the Valley without School Books—without paper, ink, pens, wafers, sealing wax, pencils, slates; and various other articles in the line, too numerous to mention, when they can be had so reasonably as they are now selling at the office of the Frontier Guardian? Remember that you will all want to write back after you get there. Your children will want to be educated, and you will need the books and facilities for these things, that perhaps cannot be obtained so readily in the country whither you journey.

Official.

Rain has come at last, just in time to save the country! Grass is now abundant. The green mantle of Spring begins to throw its extending folds over hill and valley, and nature appears attired in her most beautiful dress.

Friends and Brethren bound to Salt Lake Valley! Now is the time to "roll out" into camp. You have no time to loose. The journey is long, and remember that winter will meet you in the mountains unless you hasten. Let none go short of one hundred pounds of breadstuffs and other eatables in proportion, according to the taste and relish of the parties. Take one hundred and fifty pounds of breadstuffs if you can, and other things in proportion. Roll out, Roll out, you that intend going at all. Tarry not—clear the track; and let the west swarm with animal life while the late rain and warm weather are causing the grass to spring forth with great rapidity, inviting you to march forth upon the plains.

It was decided in our Council last winter, that our emigration pass up on the South side of the Great Platte River: Not that we owe ought to any ferry but good will, neither are we brought under obligation to any ferry; but consistency requires us to honor our own counsel, it being the result of much experience, &c. Companies will rendezvous near Bethlehem City, eighteen miles below this town; at the elm grove, four miles directly west of Kanesville, and Br. Felts' company from the Pochahontas will rendezvous about a half mile west of Kanesville. Any person who may be going to the Mines, or to the Salt Lake even, should now open his eyes, and make every step count one.

Arrivals.

Elders Orson Pratt, Wilford Woodruff and his company; and Elder N. H. Felt and company arrived here a few days since, all well; and many of them are bound for the Salt Lake Country, and many will settle in Pottawatamie County. The California Emigration has been greater through this place than through any other place on this frontier, according to the best information that we can obtain. At any rate, we shall be able in our next, to give a pretty accurate statement of the number of teams and men that have crossed at this point. We now believe the number of teams that have passed here for the mines will exceed five thousand. Our own emigration is very large from all parts. There have twelve first class steamers arrived here from St. Louis this Spring, laden to the guards. We shall be glad when the rush is over, and our streets once more comparatively clear, and our citizens themselves again. Throng and excitement have given us a peculiar longing for a little tranquility and seclusion.

The Season.

During the months of March, April and the forepart of May, it was exceedingly dry, cold and windy. The prospects of the farmer began to be gloomy in the extreme. The whole surface of the earth was as a moving cloud of dust. Animals and men were almost choked with it. The goggle trade has been a splendid business in this place. On Sunday night, 19th inst., a glorious and plentiful shower of rain fell upon the earth, and on Monday morning, the ground was completely drenched—weather turned exceedingly warm, and grass and all kinds of vegetation now are most luxuriant and prosperous. All nature smiles again. The farmers had an excellent time to put in their seed, and the recent rains bring it forth now with great rapidity. Success to the farmers! When they prosper, every body else prospers. They are the anchor of hope, the bone and sinew of the country, and the salvation of the government, in spite of Clay, Foote, Benton, and all the squaw fights the two latter can raise.

For the Guardian.

Steamer Pocahontas.

This capacious boat, the largest we believe that ever came as high up the Missouri as Council Bluffs, was moored at Kanesville Landing on the eve of the 20th inst., 13 days from St. Louis, bringing 350 passengers besides considerable freight for this section, and the Salt Lake settlements.

The passengers speak in the highest terms of Capt. Moore, Mr. Lee, Clerk, and the other officers for their gentlemanly deportment, kindness, and fair dealing in all the perplexities incident upon a crowded boat and a large amount of baggage.

N. H. FELT.

Heretofore monies from foreign subscribers only have been acknowledged through the Guardian;—hereafter home subscriptions will be acknowledged.

Attend to Your Subscriptions.

There are many of our subscribers removing from the Eastern and Middle States; and in fact, from many other parts, to this place and to Salt Lake. They should be particular to call and arrange their subscriptions immediately on arriving here, lest their papers be continued to their former address, and they pay their money without receiving any benefit. All whom it may concern, are particularly requested to attend to the above at the earliest practicable period.

Legal.

It is requested, by Mr. Sloan, the District Clerk, that all marriage lisences that have been executed, be returned forthwith to him that he may arrange his record in a proper and lawful manner. Those who neglect to do this within the time specified by law, must expect to pay the penalty of their delinquency.

The Clerk is also authorized, by law, to prepare and administer the oath of allegiance, and to grant certificates of application to foreigners to become citizens.

This will be attended with but trifling expense and it places the foreigner on the high road to citizenship in the United States of America. This is the first step of the alien towards the ballot box; and towards an eligibility to an official station in the government of the country.

It should be remembered that if any minister of the gospel shall solemnize a marriage in this county without first having obtained a lisence from the District Clerk to authorize him to marry, is liable to a penalty of five hundred dollars, and we are told that such will be prosecuted.

How to Prosper on the Plains.

Have good teams, good wagons, plenty of cows, with the best of provisions, and enough of them. Keep watch by day and guard by night, and not hurry too much, "for the race is not to the swift nor the battle to the strong. Be merciful to your animals and give them time to eat and rest: and to keep the witches hobgoblins and Indians at a respectful distance from you, be sure and get your clearance from the printer.

Address Us At Kanesville.

Our mails have become so far regulated, and the prospects so favorable, that we will now venture to advise and request our friends and correspondents abroad, to address us at Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, and no more at St. Joseph, Upper Missouri

High Council.

This body met on Saturday last, and resolved that one company of emigrants for the Valley of the Salt Lake, be organized at the Elm Grove West of Kanesville, on the banks of the Missouri river. No person or family will be allowed to go with the sanction of the Council unless they have, at least, one hundred pounds of good breadstuffs to the person, old or young; and one hundred and fifty pounds of breadstuffs if it is possibly consistent, and other eatables in a reasonable proportion. Every wagon, its contents, and the team attached to it, will be duly inspected by a judicious and responsible Committee, and ascertain if they are in a suitable and proper condition to cross the Plains. For this service a tax of twenty-five cents will be levied on each wagon thus inspected. Every person should have his teams yoked or hitched up at the time, so as to prevent delay. The weather is now fine and prosperous, and let every one who intends going to the Valley this year, be up and doing. No companies will be organized after the 15th day of June to cross the Plains this year; and all Ferries that we can control or influence, will cross no emigrants after the 20th day of June. The admonitions of our last companies who emigrated last year, and came well nigh perishing in the snows of the mountains, are a sufficient warrant, which should be satisfactory to every one, for stopping emigrants crossing the river after the 20th day of June.

No person should be longer in suspence about going to the Valley. If you do not positively know that you are going, you are guilty if you do not take immediate measures to raise a crop; and if such persons find themselves destitute next fall, they cannot expect to have much sympathy from the church. "God helps those who help themselves."

Counsel.

There seems to be some misunderstanding with regard to the word "Counsel." Any article in this paper under that head, is designed to be heeded, and may be considered as having received the highest official sanction of the Church from whence it proceeded. When that counsel is disobeyed it frustrates the general movements of the body, and brings distress upon the Church.

A New Island Discovered.

The North American states that a new Island, entirly unknown to navigators, was made in November last, by Captain William M'Michael, of the ship Montauk, while on a voyage from sydney, New South Wales, to Shanghae, in China. It lies below Loo Choo Islands and Japan, about 130 deg. 06 min. east from Greenwich. Smoke was seen in several places, and at night many lights, as from fishing boats.

Burlington Hawk-Eye.

This is a keen discerning journal—ably edited, and advocates the best political policy in our opinion; but it sometimes makes a discovery of things that do not exist. It should see clearly enough to discover the difference between irony and reality, should consider our whole remarks, and not permit an unfounded jealousy to direct its keen penetrating glance at a few detached sentences, and from those isolated passages, draw conclusions that accord no better with truth than the growling of a bull-frog with the soft notes of the lute.

We killed the first snakes out here, and built the first mills and bridges; and we will try to have all things right on this Frontier. Do not be alarmed friend "Hawk!" The ballot-box will probably remove your doubts and fears, if you endure with a little patience.

When we have given our enemy a rebuke to our heart's content,—we do not wish to chastise him or continue a war of words that would exclude more useful matter from the columns of our journal.

Expelled.

One William Jenkins, from Wales, residing near Oregon, Mo., for drunkenness and blasphemous conduct, stands expelled from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

Farewell Ball.

It will be seen by the official action of the Council that permission is given to each branch of the Church throughout the County to have one dance, and one only. The friends have a desire to meet together in a social capacity before they separate, some going to the Salt Lake, and some remaining here. The president of each Branch is appointed to preside over his respective party. Let there be no misunderstanding in the case. In the first place, no one should step forward unless he fully understand, and when any Branch has had one dance, let them stop at that; and there should be none postponed later than the 15th, day of June. It is hoped that no transgressor will have any occasion to say, "I did not understand it."

It was proposed, that in consideration of the incessant labors and increasing care and responsibility of the president of the church here, that all the funds raised should go for his special benefit. This proposal, he objected to; but said, that if they were disposed to place the funds in his hands, with the privilege of giving to others, and for various contingencies, he would accept of it; but observed that he could not accept a dollar for his own use, as he could live without it. This was agreed to.

Some of the Council observed that the branches might feel disposed to have free balls, or to make the expenses balance the proceeds, and thus, no funds be raised. It was replied that it was a kind of liberal generous affair. No compulsion, but a free will concern, and every branch could show its feeling and ability after selling out their produce at high prices.

Petition.

Extract from the Minutes of the High Council.

Br. S. M. Blair presented a petition to the Council, on Saturday last, praying for a Farewell Ball, signed by several of the citizens of Kanesville. After some remarks, it was moved, seconded, and carried, to grant the petition, and also that each Branch have the privilege of one Ball, to be given under the supervision of the President of the Branch, the benefit arising therefrom to be given to Prest. O. Hyde to be used at his discretion for the benefit of the poor, and various contingencies.

E. M. GREENE, Clerk.

Kanesville, May 25, 1850.

The Largest Lump of Gold Yet.—By the last accounts from California, we learn that a lump of quartz and gold was found in the diggings, weighing ninety-three pounds, of which sixty were gold. This must, decidedly, be the handsomest specimen of "rock" that can yet be boasted of. The miners are evidently approaching the great deposits, and when they reach them, we suppose they will dig out gold by the ton, as coals are dug in Pennsylvania. What may we not expect next!

Saint Louis Band.

This band arrived here a few days since from St. Louis enroute to the Salt Lake Valley, under the supervision of Elder N. H. Felt, and conducted by Mr. Ballou, an Italian, whose talents, as a Musician, we are confident few can equal, and none can excel.

We are highly gratified to witness the progress made by our Saint Louis friends in this sublime and soul inspiring science. We wish them much success in their praise-worthy exertions to contribute to the social enjoyment of that community who may be honored with the privilege of greeting them as citizens and residents. They have a choice set of heavy brass instruments, and they know well how to use them. We have listened with peculiar pleasure to their thrilling strains in the midnight serenade for the last few nights. Mr. Pitt and his associates, who, by the by, are not slow on the stringed instruments, have favored us with their soft and fine touches in the glimmering moonlight under our window. Music has a charm that merits more encouragement than it generally receives.

The Farewell Ball comes off in this town on Friday evening next. Extensive arrangements are being entered into for the occasion' by the managers, for the enjoyment of the guests.

Deseret and California.

Gen. John Wilson and Amasa Lyman, delegates from Deseret, arrived at the seat of Government in California, late in January, bearing a proposition from Deseret to California. A memorial, stating the purposes to submit to the people the question, calling a Convention of all California both east and west of the Sierra Nevada, and that if the people decide for the call of such Convention, it shall meet "with a view of framing for the present, one State, to cover all the territory acquired from Mexico, as included in California."

The delegates also submit the suggestion that the people inhabiting the strip of country included within the limits of both States, shall determine for themselves to which State they will belong.

The principal reason urged by the delegates for the adoption of these proposals is, that the slavery question would thereby be put to rest for all California.

Gov. Burnett, in his message, considers one by one, all these arguments and propositions, and condems them all. With regard to the slavery question he says, that the people of California settled that themselves, and if the people of Deseret did not, it is their fault or misfortune. He says that the two communities are too far apart to be combined even temporarily, and that Texas and Maine might as well have been made one State as Deseret and California.

The Legislature, after hearing the memorial and Governor's message, refused to receive the former; thus the delegates will accomplish nothing.

Lines Suggested by a Trip on the Missouri River.

BY AMICUS.

Majestic stream, thy waters madly flow,
From mountain Springs where tall the fir trees grow,
And gather force along thy devious way,
Thy muddy waters cloud the sparkling spray.

Thy serpent track the Continent divides,
From mountains north to sunny Southern tides,
Far north the buffalo drinks thy streamlets dry,
And yet thou doest the vast wide seas supply.

Thy boiling current sweeps away the land;
Fills high the deep with Islands form'd of sand.
Where islands stood bright, covered o'er with green,
Nought but thy muddy bubbling waters now are seen.

In eddying whirls on thee vast forests float,
As well the neat and tidy puffing boat,
Thy sunken snags have foundered many a bark,
And thousands meet their death beneath thy waters dark.

The red man sports on thee his light canoe,
With quickning strokes he brings the game to view—
He takes the fish from thy deep hidden bed,
The wild fowl takes, if arrow true has sped.

Vast hills enclose thee in thy swelling course,
And holds secure thy torrents maddening force,
Thy rocky heights the howling tempests brave,
Rich verdure of the hills reflect sad darkness on thy wave.

Majestic stream, thy like is no where seen;
Roll on forever, 'twixt thy beds of green,
And you ye hills with dizzy tow'ring head,
Stand till thy author shakes thy rocky bed.

Compromise Plan of Committee of Thirteen.

Washington, May 8, 1850.

Mr. Clay is now reading the report of the Committee of Thirteen, of which the following is an abstract.

1st. The Committee are unanimously of opinion that new States may be formed out of Texas, under the terms of compact entered into by the United States; in the resolutions of annexation, and that when they are so formed, they have a clear and undoubted right to be admitted into the Union, as equal States; the Committee do not think that any plan for the formation of new States should be originated by Congress, but should be left to the people of Texas; also, that such new States should be admitted without any objection on account of the exclusion or permission of slavery.

2d. In considering the question of the admission of California, the majority of the committee are of opinion, that every irregularity in the proceedings antecedent to her application for admission into the Union should, in consideration of the many circumstances of her position, be overlooked, and reccommend the passage of the bill reported by Mr. Douglass for her admission into the Union as a State.

[Owing to an interruption at Washington, this report was not finished when the office closed.]

A dispatch from New York says, the Herald has received a copy of the Nicaragua treaty and a portion of the correspondence, but does not publish it. It says it lays a foundation of revolution in the world, and sows the seeds of one of the greatest naval conflicts between the United States and England which will surpass anything of the kind that has ever taken place in the history of the human race. The terms of the treaty, and the protection it gives to the charter, gives confidence among capitalists both here and in London, and the probable success of the enterprise and the opening of a new and wonderful communication of ships of every magnitude, between the Atlantic and Pacific. It is hoped that it will be confirmed.

A late Washington letter, in the New York Tribune, says:

If the speech of Mr. Clay has had no other effect, it seems to be conceded that it has scattered to the winds of heaven the iniquitous scheme of the Calhounists for a separation of the Union. Southern men have been brought to reflect on what would be the consequences to themselves, even if they carry out their own rash acts; and their better acts; and their better judgments have extorted from them the confession that Mr. Clay was right in showing that their last end would be worse than their first. No other Southern man living could have spoken with the boldnesss that Mr. Clay did, and it is that boldness and fearlessness of speech that has driven the disunionists in disgrace from the treasonable designs they had partially matured against the integrity of the Union.

Wanted.

Two or three tons of goods hauled to the Valley, for which ten dollars per hundred will be given. One half in advance, and the balance to be paid on the delivery of the goods.

List of California Emigrants that have arrived on this Frontier.

They are all apparently in good health and spirits, and eager for the mines. Persons receiving this number who are not regular subscribers to the paper, will please run over this list of names, and they will probably find their husband's name, the name of a son or brother, cousin, friend or old acquaintance. There are many emigrants who have arrived here whose names are not in this list. They can all have their names registered in the next number of the Guardian if they wish, and a copy sent back to any friend, for one dime each.

MARRIED,

In this town, by the Editor, on Sunday, 19th inst., Mr. CHARLES ALLEN to REBECCA WINSLOW, (formerly from Cincinnati Ohio,) both of this County.

May the rays of hope, and the tranquility incident to conjugal bliss, shed their divine influence over this happy couple.

At Martindales Branch, May 23d, by Thos. S. Johnson, Mr ARA W. SABIN, Savannah, Mo., to Miss NANCY ANN HANES, Fremont county, Iowa.

With the above we received some most excellent Cake, for which they have our best wishes, and we can say with the poet:

He that holds fast the golden mean,
And lives contentedly between
The little and the great,
Feels not the wants that pinch the poor,
Nor plagues that haunt the rich man's door,
Imbittering all his state.

In this town by the Editor on 27th inst., Mr. GEORGE SCHOLES to MARY SPENCER, both of this County.

DIED,

On board the steamer Sacramento on her way to Council Bluffs on the 5th instant. IRVIN H., only son of Wm. H. and Emily C. Branch, from Connecticut, aged 2 years, 6 months and 20 days.

At Bullock's Grove, on the 23d inst., of Small Pox, AMOS GARDNER, son of Moses J. and Polly Gardner, aged 13 years, 2 months and 19 days.

On board the steamer St. Louis, on her upwrad trip from New Orleans to St. Louis, on the 30th ult., of general debility, MARY, wife of James Needham, and mother of John Needham of this place, (from Lancashire England,) aged 61 years.

Mrs. Needham, accompanied by her husband and a part of the family, were on their way from England to join their son, (John Needham and family,) at this place; having been seperated for eight years. Although now they have an extensive circle of friends and acquaintances on this, and the other side of the Atlantic to mourn over the loss of an affectionate wife and mother. Yet they feel confident that her merit will be rewarded, and her acts of benevolence and kindness remembered in the day of retribution.

ADJOURNED CONFERENCE.

SUNDAY, May 19, A. D., 1850.

The adjourned Conference convened at the Stand, South-East of the Printing Office; it was a fine morning and the sun shone delightfully, a large congregation had gathered at an early hour. Present of the Twelve Prest. O. Hyde, O. Pratt, W. Woodruff. The members of the High Council, the Marshal, J. C. Wright, and many influencial brethren. The meeting was called to order by the Prest., O. Hyde. Singing by the choir and music by the Band. Prest. O. Hyde remarked it was a very important time with us and all people from here westward, spake of the words of the martyred Prophet, "plagues shall go forth and shall not be stayed, also relative to the poor Saints that have landed in this place. The groggshops, &c., also relative to the drouth, said the first thing to obtain rain was for each person who can, take a poor family and become a benefactor and temporal Savior to them at this time, and said will you do it. General cry, yes! yes! Prest. Hyde then said shall the sins and polutions of those raised up drunkards, turn on the heads of the keepers of grog-shops, whether Jew or Gentile, the people said, yes! He then said if the brethren were willing to take in poor and succor them, to manifest it by raising their hands, also those who would take their stand firmly against those grog shops, drunkenness and all vices, (all hands were up.) No opposition.

Prayer by Prest. O. Pratt.

Music and singing. "Thou art gone to the grave," Prest. O. Hyde said, the out and in emigration caused so many changes, it required new officers to be appointed to keep all things right; Bishop Aaron Johnson was gone to the Valley, and it was necessary for this Conference to choose a man to fill his place, and proposed that Bishop Aaron Johnson make a nomination.

The Bishop nominated Wm. W. Lane, was seconded by J G Bigler, and carried by a full vote. Prest. O. Hyde, proposed an agent of the High Council to travel among the branches.

On motion, it was voted that one man fill that agency.

On motion it was voted that Lyman Stoddard fill that office.

On motion, it was voted to appoint a Committee to settle the poor Saints who have just arrived.

On motion, Jacob Bigler, J. M. Benson, Isaac Bullock were chosen said Committee, and David Candland clerk.

Councillor Geo. Coulson spoke of the Indian affairs, the shooting of those Pawnees last spring, &c., said Prest. O. Hyde, had had an interview with the chiefs of that tribe, and on their agreeing that all difficulties were settled, and that they should not molest our emigrants or the Californians as they pass through their lands he paid or caused to be paid the sum of $50, and called the people to sustain it by subscription.

Isaac Bullock, Daniel Mackintosh, James Sloan, T D Brown, Jacob Bigler and John Needham, were appointed to pass through the congregation, and $43 was received.

Charles Allen and Rebecca Winslow came to the stand and were joined in marriage by Prest. O. Hyde. Music and singing.

Br. W. Woodruff dismissed with prayer for one hour. The same night a copious shower of rain fell.

SUNDAY, 2—P. M.

Elder Orson Pratt spoke at some length, giving cheering accounts from England, of the progress of the work of the Lord. He was followed by Elder Woodruff from the East, who made a few happy remarks.

Conference adjourned until October 6th.

Steamboat Burned.

LOUISVILLE, May 8th, 1850.

The steamer James Dick, a regular packet between New Orleans and Nashville, was destroyed by fire on Monday last. The boat was insured in the sum of $7,500 at Lexington, Columbus and merchants' Insurance offices.

CAIRO, May 7th, 11 A. M., 1850.

Eight miles below this place about 4 o'clock this morning the steamer Columbus, collapsed a flue, killing one fireman instantly, and scalding some fifteen others, deck hands and passengers, one of whom has since died.

The steam and water escaped forward towards the bow, or the result would have been awful, from the crowded state of the decks.

Fire at Huntsville.

LOUISVILLE, May 8th, 1850.

A destructive fire occurred at Huntsville, Ala., on the 3d inst., consuming property to the amount of half a million of dollars.

The New York papers contain elaborate descriptions of the execution of Johnson, at Patterson, N. J., on the 30th ult., convicted of the murder of Judge Van Winkle and his wife in January last. The culprit maintained to the last that he was innocent of the deed for which he was to be executed.

PROFESSOR WEBSTER.—This unfortunate man, so far as external appearances indicate, has become reconciled to his fate. His demeanor is that of a person endeavoring to solve some great problem — calm and thoughtful. He reads much, and has recourse to many books and newspapers. His family visit him almost daily. It is to be regretted that some of our contemporaries persist in circulating the most scandaluos fabrications in relation to his family. They, at least, are entitled to sympathy, and should not be visited by additional torture. The statement in one of the penny papers that a daughter of Prof. Webster had been rendered insane by the conviction and sentence of her father, is totally destitute of truth. No such calamity has befallen this afflicted family. They bear the terrible trial which has come upon them with submission, patience and a christian fortitude the furthest possible removed from that despairing anguish which produces insanity.—[Boston Courier.

Foreign News.

By Telegraph.

ARRIVAL OF THE CANADA.

Eight days Later from England.

The news from the manufacturing districts is more cheering, and trade has somewhat improved. The British Ministry have met with another signal defeat and this time, upon a portion of the Chancellors budgett. The defeat came unexpectedly and created a sensation. No outbreak has occurred on the continent, but from France particularly, reports indicate a very critical state of affairs.

France.

The Socialists, as the election draws near, evince deadly hatred to the present government. They nominated Eugene Sue as their candidate for Paris. His opponent, of the disorder party, had not been determined upon at the last dates. The funds are sensibly effected, owing to this unsettled state of affairs.

A frightful loss of life occurred at Angier on Monday, by the breaking down of a suspension bridge over the Soire. Over 200 men, belonging to the 11th regiment of light infantry, were drowned.

Italy.

The Pope has returned to Rome, and was well received upon his entrance into Rome. There was no pomp and public display beyond the necessary guards and staff.

Austria and Prussia.

A convention is said to have been concluded between Austria and Prussia.

An Austrian officer, of high rank, has been arrested in the act of sketching Prussian fortifications.

The Schleswig controversy, and the probability of a peaceable settlement of that question, is further removed than ever.

India and China.

There are later advices from India. The news from both quarters is satisfactory. The overland mail on Monday, brought dates from Bombay to the 16th of March, Calcutta of the 17th, March, and Hong Kong of the 25th February. The expedition sent by sir Cotton Campbell against the Hill tribes, has been defeated by the loss of over one hundred men. The Hindoo and Musselmen population in the city of Magrepoor, have risen against each other under the influence of religious fanaticism, and the city was destroyed by fire.

Hungary.

The leaders of the Hungarian revolution, having, nine months ago, been summoned to surrender within thirty days, all who have not done so, have been sentenced to death for contumacy, amongst whom is Kossuth, and others. The Turkish fleet arrived at Malta on the 8th inst., with 200 English refugees on board. They proceeded to Belgium, from thence to England, and from thence they proceed to the United States.

Turkey.

A letter from Constantinople, of the 6th, says that diplomatic relations have been resumed between Porte and Austria, and that Mr. Church, from the United States, had been received by the Sultan in a very flattering manner. It is said that the new relations will be likely to prove a very influential one, and that the embassies of America and England will mutually act together. The Sultan has added a Christian batallion to each of his regiments.

Sardinia.

All ecclesiastical privileges have been abolished. The papal nuncio has consequently demanded and received his passport, and has left Tuscany.

Denmark.

The probability of the peaceful termination of the Schleswig Holstein difficulties, is daily growing more remote. The army of Schleswig are making preparations for deciding the matter by hard knocks.

Spain.

From Malta we learn that the Roman Catholic religion has been proclaimed as the predominant religion of the Island.

Ireland.

From Ireland there is nothing to report, except a continuance of favorable weather for agrieulture. Many of the emigrants embarking for the United States are people of considerable means.

ARRIVAL OF THE CAMBRIA.

HALIFAX, May 1.

The steamer Cambria arrived to-day at two o'clock, from Liverpool, and sailed for New York at 6 P. M. She left Liverpool on the 13th April, at 10 o'clock, A. M.

Accounts from the manufacturing districts exhibit little improvement. The price of manufactured goods do not keep pace with the advance of the raw material; and short time would have to be submitted to.

The Greek question has not been adjusted, and in the event of the failure of the friendly offices of France, there is every reason to apprehend serious difficulties between England and Russia—as the former, in the case stated, has given Admiral Parker express orders to enforce a complete blockade of the coast of Greece. And should he do so, the Emperor of Russia has given positive assurances of his intention to advance to the assistance of King Othe. No authentic advices of a later date than the 28th of March, have been received from Athens—at which time the result of the meeting, held two days previously, between Baron Graz and Urse, had not transpired. The meeting is said to have borne a very amicable character; but if a Telegraph dispatch, dated April 2d, and published in the Breslin Zeitung, can be credited, the officers of France have failed to effect a satisfactory settlement of difficulties.

England.

Parliament re-assembled on Monday. The supplies for the Navy and Ordnance were allowed, after a sharp contest for retrenchment. On Tuesday, Lord Duncan moved for a repeal of the window tax, which produces a revenue of nearly £2,000,000, and which it is proposed to meet by the abolition of the African squadron. After a warm debate, the House divided—when ministers and the tax were sustiained by a bare majority of three. Four opposition members were shut out from voting.

On a point of etiquette which proposed to raise Assistant Surgeons' of the Navy from the cock-pit to the cabin, the Ministers found themselves in a minority of eight.

On Friday night, Lord John Russell brought forward a motion of inquiry relative to salaries of all Government officers.

The London Times has adopted a tone of much severity against the existing Government. It devotes considerable space to the subject of Sir H. Bulwer's correspondence with Mr. Clayton, relative to the modification of the present tariff on iron. The opinion is advanced in several quarters, that the restrictive policy of the United States, if continued, will lead to still greater depression in the Iron business of Great Britain.

The commerce of Greece, it is said, has already suffered by the English Blockade to the value of £2,000,000, which, with the destruction of the crops by frost, will cause a large falling off in revenue, and is calculated to increase the growing discontent of the people.

The legislation against the removal or abolition of the Lord Lieutenancy of Ireland, and the sickly attempt of O'Connell to revive the Repeal movement, are leading political questions before the Irish, but possess no new features. At the quay at Limerick, there are twelve vessels capable of accomodating 2,000 persons, preparing to start for the United States. The usual cry of poverty and disease is heard in every quarter.

Italy.

Letters from Florence giving news from Rome, states that the magnificent arch dedicated to Bella Terna, in honor of the Pope's return, was burnt during the night.

Austria.

Diplomatic notes have been exchanged between the Courts of St. James and Vienna, as to the relations of Austria and Turkey.

The insurrection at Croatia is at an end.

The Hungarian Refugees have not yet reached their destination in Asia Minor.

The Austrian Cabinet has intimated that, in regard to the attitude of Russia and the German question, Austria will not be the first to break the peace of Europe, but that she will not allow any other German power to attempt any thing contrary to the Treaty of 1815.

NIAGARA.

HALIFAX, Tuesday morning, May 7.

The Niagara arrived this morning. The Europa had not arrived out when the Niagara left, but her news was anxiously looked for, and it was anticipated that it would have a material effect on the cotton market and consequently on trade in the manufacturing districts. The proceedings in Parliament possess very little interest.

In France the approaching election appears to be the only subject of interest.

An arrangement is known to have been effected between the Greeks and the English Government.

Nicaragua Treaty and Canal.

According to the New York Tribune, the material provisions of the Nicaragua treaty are substantially as follows:

1. The United States and Great Britain mutually and reciprocally pledge their faith to either, that they will not take, use, hold, occupy nor exercise dominion oyer any part of Central America henceforth and forever.

2. They further agree not to establish nor maintain any fortifications nor military posts upon or within said country.

3. Each Government pledges itself to respect, and to use its best offices to cause to be respected by other nations, the complete and perpetual neutrality of the ports on the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, which shall be the termini respectively of the proposed ship canal through Central America.

4. They will also respect, and use their best offices to cause to be respected by others, the perpetual neutrality of said ship canal, the vessels navigating it, and everything pertaining thereto.

5. They further agree to respect the neutrality of all vessels within a reasonable distance of either terminus of said ship canal, [no distance yet agreed, but two degrees, or one hundred and twenty geographical miles have been suggested, and met with no objection,] and to endeavor to procure a general recognition of such neutrality by all nations whatsoever.

6. They mutually agree to protect and secure the operations of such company as, under the authority of the State of Nicaragua, shall construct and maintain the proposed ship sanal.

7. If the company now holding a contract with the State of Nicaragua, for the construction of the ship canal uniting the two oceans, shall within twelve months demonstrate to the satistaction of the two governments, its ability to construct said canal, the foregoing stipulations shall enure to its benefit; but if not, then any other company, duly authorised by Nicaragua, and who can satisfy the two governments of its ability to make the canal, shall enjoy all the benefits which this treaty is intended to guaranty to the constructors of the canal.

8. The contracting parties reciprocally pledge themselves to use their good offices respectively with the several State governments of Central America, to induce them to enter into stipulations based upon and according with the foregoing.

9. Each party pledges to the other that it will interpose its good offices for the amicasettlement of any disputes which may arise respecting the construction of the ship canal, or its management thereafter.

10. The two governments are not to infere with the construction or management of the canal, except that either government, should tolls be levied on vessels passing through it which in its view are exorbitant and oppressive, reserves the right of withdrawing from the company all the protection and favor which this treaty pledges it to afford; but this will not affect the international stipulations of the treaty.

11. By a proctocol to the treaty, the two nations covenant with each other not to claim or exercise under the cover of a protectorate of, or allegiance with any Central American State or tribe, any power which they have disclaimed or renounced in the foregoing article.

NEW YORK, May 6.

The Empire City brings news from San Francisco to 1st April, inclusive, being one month later. The steamer California left San Francisco on the afternoon of 1st April, with regular mails and 420 passengers for Panama, which port she reached on the 23d April, and her passengers set off immediately for Chagres. She brought $1,700,000, all in gold, on freight. The miners are commencing their summer operations: it is estimated that over 100,000 are at or on the way to the mines. Money continues scarce, the scarcest of any article—the exorbitant rate of 10 per cent. per month being still the current rate of interest. Lumber is still depressed and great quantities are arriving. The current price is $80@$100 per M. for American. Furniture of all kinds very high. The price of passage per steamer, from San Francisco to Sacramento City is still high, $20. There have been a number of failures among the merchants, among which is that of the house of Frank, Ward, & Co., one of the heaviest houses in San Francisco.

The Empire City brings 30 passengers, but no gold.

Under the head of advancement the papers say, that the condition of San Francisco is as progressive as a locomotive engine under full headway. We have seen two theatres nightly open; concerts, balls, dinner parties and splendid military suppers. The shop windows exhibit all the elegance that civilization has produced in all quarters of the globe.

Lieut. Nuer, of U. S. N., has in contemplation the erection of a telegraph to communicate with the sea coast from this place—the sites for staffs are well selected, and his enterprise has the encouragement of the mercantile community of San Francisco. Spring now approaches, and the southren towns are beginning to be deserted, the population flocking to the mine. The roads are fast becoming passable in the north and south.

Another Steamboat Explosion—Four Men Killed and four wounded.

MAYSVILLE, May 3.

The steamer Ironton, Capt. Shingle, collapsed both flues of her larboard boiler, yesterday, at 1 P. M., about 95 miles above this city, and one mile from Vanceburg. The explosion resulted in the instant killing of three or four of the crew or passengers, and wounding four others.

The wreck was towed down to the mouth of the Licking river, where she now lies.

It has not been ascertained who the killed and wounded are.

The Ironton was a new boat, with the exception of her machinery, which has been transferred to her from the steamer Northern Light.

THE FLOOD IN THE CUMBERLAND AND TRIBUTARIES—GREAT LOSS OF PROPERTY.—The Nashville Whig, of Tuesday say:

The river, from Sunday morning, till yesterday noon, was at a dead stand—wanting 22 inches of being up to the high freshet of December, 1847. The water on one side of the city is up to Wilson's Spring, and on the other side, a few inches over the Charlotte turpike—a large number of houses on either side so far submerged as to be entirely tenantless. Also several business houses at and near the mouth of Broad street.

The Murfreesboro' (Tenn.) Telegraph states that the East Fork of Stone's river, one of the tributaries of the Cumberland, was higher than it had been for fifty years. The water had swept away nine mills, four bridges, cotton gins, &c. The farms had suffered greatly, and nearly all the fences had been carried off. The Telegrarh estimates the loss at from $100,000 to $150,000. Two Brothers named Bewer were drowned.

Great Fire at Laguayra, South America—The City in Ruins—Immense Loss of Property.

NEW ORLEANS, Thursday, April 5th.

News has just been received here from Campeachy, announcing that a great conflagration had occurred at the City of Laguayra, Venezuela, which broke out on the 18th of March, and consumed almost the entire city, but two buildings being left standing.

The greatest distress prevailed among the inhabitants, who were not only houseless, but in danger of starvation.

The loss by this conflagration is not far short of Two millions of dollars.

FOOD FOR REFLECTION.—There are now in jail in St. Louis only thirteen murderers, and four out on bail. Two of these, Cassidy and Landsdown have been sentenced to death.

Why is a lady's hair like a bee-hive? It holds the comb.

COUNCIL BLUFFS FERRY,

Across the Missouri River.

THIS Ferry chartered by the Legislature of the State of Iowa, and licensed by the Superintendant of Indian affairs, has been in successful operation for the last year. We are now prepared with good boats and experienced watermen to cross emigrants with safety and despatch. The location and facilities of this crossing are too well known to require a description at our hands. The fact of its being under the eye of the Agent and approved by the Indians to whom we make Semi-Annual payments for the privilege of having a road through their country, ensures their good will towards the Emigrants. The North side of Platte river is now acknowledged to be the Healthiest, Nearest and Best route to the gold mines. We can cross at Council Bluffs, one hundred or more teams per day having three good boats.

POETRY.

Bless God for Rain.

BY GEO. W. BUNCAY.

"Bless God for Rain," the good man said,
And wiped away a grateful tear—
That we may have our daily bread,
He drops a shower upon us here.
Our Father, Thou who dwell'st in heaven,
We thank Thee for the pearly shower,
The blessed present Thou hast given
To man and beast and bird and flower.

The dusty earth, with lips apart,
Looked up where rolled an orb of flame,
As though a prayer came from its heart
For rain to come; and lo, it came.
The Indian corn with silken plume,
And flowers with tiny pitchers filled,
Send up their praise of sweet perfume,
For precious drops the clouds distilled.

The modest grass is fresh and green—
The brooklet swells its song again;
Methinks an angel wing is seen
In every cloud that brings us Rain.
There is a rainbow in the sky,
Upon the arch where the tempests trod;
God wrote it ere the world was dry—
It is the autograph of God.

Up where the heavy thunders rolled,
And clouds on fire were swept along,
The sun rides in a car of gold,
And soaring larks dissolve in song.
The rills that gush from mountains rude,
Flow trickling to the verdant base—
Just like the tears of gratitude
That often stain a good man's face.

Great King of Peace, deign now to bless;
The windows of the sky unbar;
Shower down the rain of Righteousness,
And wash away the stain of War;
And let the radiant bow of Love
In beauty mark our moral sky,
Like that fair sign unrolled above,
But not like it to fade and die.

MISCELLANY.

From the Yankee Blade.

Surprising the Camp! or the Irish Ranger in quest of the Camanches.

A Scene from Life in Prairie Land.

BY FALCONERIDGE.

Irish are everywhere. You may find Pat where even a live Yankee is unknown, and yet the Yankees can be found wherever the sun rises and sets, and grass grows. No few of the first settlers in Texas were Irish, at least on the coast; the American army is nearly one-fourth Irish, and when the Texan revolution broke out, scores of Southern Irishmen enlisted in the Texan ranks and no braver, and quicker soldiers, for such warfare could be desired, than those "ready-to-fight" Irishmen.

There was a bullet-headed, square built Paddy, in the Ranger service, named Darby Kelley; and an active and jolly, witty and brave fellow who never began to know what danger or fear looked like, except they came at him in the shape of copper-heads or rattlesnakes—and those reptiles were about the only living "critters" that could ever start a hair on Darby's cocoa-nut. In the same company or squad, with Darby, was another noted individual, named Ben Burns, but who was more generally known as "Black Hawk," from the fact of his having presumed to assert that he was one of the captors of the famous Indian chief Black Hawk," in the frontiers of the United States, some years previous. "Black Hawk" was none of your common men; he was tall and straight as an Indian; an immense jumper, wrestler, horse-breaker, and all those things, besides being an elegant marksman, and the most dashing and fearless equestrian you ever saw on horse flesh. Black Hawk and Darby were messmates, and thrice sworn friends. Darby was not by nature, or the force of art, very well versed in Indian manners and customs, although he had some brushes with the red skins. For them he entertained the liveliest contempt and hate, and he would no more have hesitated to ride into a regiment of them, with a good shillelah, than he would to have entered a "grocery" with a dime in his pocket. Darby's contempt for Camanches cost him some trouble, as the sequel will prove.

Towards sunset, one clear and bracing October day, a small party of the Rangers, after a long, toilsome scout in the Camanche country, halted at a spring, and dismounting, from the pleasantness of the spot and the fatigue of the party, they determined to bivouac there for the night, and preparations were made accordingly.

Darby Kelly was one of the party—his friend Black Hawk was with another squad, who were to join them the next day. After such a repast as a Ranger might indulge in such a place and at such a time, the horses being secured, the Rangers took a smoke, and throwing themselves upon old Mother Earth, seven of the nine slept—leaving Darby and a comrade to keep guard.

Night had not far advanced when the nodding sentinels were aroused by the snorting of the horses, and the manner of their "cavorting" around indicated that there was mischief in the wind.

"Up, boys! up!" says Darby, arousing his sleeping companions in arms. "There's game of some ssa-shee or other about; up! boys, and be wide awake!"

And Darby's words of warning were hardly from his lips when a body of those red, dare-devil horsemen, swift as the whirlwind, pounced upon the little camp, knocked it into "next week," stampeding the horses, severely wounding two of the Rangers, and carrying off Darby Kelly's beautiful red Mexican blanket, which the heroic Irishman hurled into the face of one of the Indians's horses, to keep him from jumping on to him, while he pulled fast and strong at the trigger of his revolver, materially altered some of the notes of the assailants.

"Husu-oo-ep! Whoo-o-o-oo-ep!"

The performance was all over, and the assailants a mile off, before Darby could say—

"Did ye'es iver see the like o' that in yer travels afore?"

The wounded were attended to, and two of the little party despatched to a certain point, where the other party of the Rangers—some ten mounted and well equipped men—were supposed to be camped. Darby for his fast traveling qualities, and devotion to danger, was one of the messengers, and about day-light he and his comrade found the camp of their friends, and then they all made a break for the scene of the disaster, where a council of war was held, a camp was decided upon for the wounded and unhorsed, and ten of the best men, including Black Hawk and Darby, were started to make reprisal upon the thieving Camanches.

They kept the trial of the Indians faithfully all day, and towards sun-down struck a tributary of the Trinity river, and then the trail divided—the stolen horses evidently being taken by a small portion of the Indians to a remote spot, to escape re-capture should pursuit be made. The Rangers were anxious to have a "flirt" with their copper-colored enemies, but just then the capture of their horses was a more important matter. The Indian camp was found about midnight, under the brow of a small mountain, and Black Hawk took a reconnoisance and returned to the party in the course of an hour, reporting that ten or twelve of the red-skins were encamped, with over twenty horses.

"And did ye spy anything like my ould grey, among 'em?" says Darby in a whisper.

"Couldn't make out the critters," Black Hawk replies, "but, Darby one of the copper-headed cusses is asleep on your red blanket by the fire!"

"His-s-she-e," says Black Hawk, raising his great bony hand for Darby to keep quiet "Now, boys, look sharp! There's to be a mighty tight scrimmage here pooty darned sudden. Somebody's to be hurt, but we've got to take them critters, and the red devils won't like it, nuther. Now you Bill Brown and Dick Manifee, take care of these critters; hold on to 'em like life to a possum; eight of us will fix the flints of that thieving gang, in short metre. Bill and Dick, you hang by the critters. So, boys, look sharp, and keep your tools handy; quiet, look sharp."

An hour's crawling and feeling along through the brush and grass, finally brought the Indian camp in view. The horses were all tightly picketed; a dull fire exhibited some ten or twelve Indians stretched out, or sitting around, and eight were selected as targets by the Rangers' rifles; but before they let drive at them, the wary Indians smelt a rat, and quicker than thought, they jumped—flew to their horses, and snapping the lariats with their knives, they dashed away like lightning, with a yell and a small shower of bullets after them.

Darby's whole mind and energies had been fixed upon the copper-headed gentleman who was reposing on his much loved red blanket, and when that individual took the cue to fly, he did not forget the blanket, which he stuck to, and Darby after him. "Bang!" went Darby's rifle, the ball slightly scathing the Indian's hide, and as he mounted one horse, Darby leaped like a double-strung cat upon another, and away went Darby and his charger, furious as the tornado, after the Indian, who was yelling like blue blazes, and Darby peppering him with his revolver! Before Black Hawk and his companions could mount their horses, Darby and the Indians were miles off; and Darby found all of a sudden, that he had gone a little too far, and fallen into dangerous company, for he was captured as well as his red blanket.

Black Hawk and his companions secured several horses, and followed the flying Indians some miles; but as much as he disliked to do so, he was forced to keep up the pursuit, and leave poor Darby and his blanket to their fate, knowing that as long as life lasted, the heroic Irishman would be more than a match in cunning and courage for a dozen Camanches.

Many weeks after the above occurrence, Darby Kelly made his appearance early one morning at a "grocery" on the verge of civilized Texas. His dress had undergone considerable alteration, and the Ranger of a few months previous, was cutting a very respectable figure as a decently equipped Camanche chief. The "bould Irishman" bestrode a fine horse, and was the possessor of his much respected red blanket. Darby had won upon the good graces of his captors; his prowess and boisterous nature had quite enraptured the Indians, and 'bedad, it's chafe they made me! So I kept my eye open fur a long time afore I could saze upon me blanket, and get a favorable opportunity to give 'em the slip! but which I at length did, by hitting the spalpeen who had me blanket, a rap on the head at night, and then stepped out!

COULDN'T CURE HIM.—Eel-tea, and all other cures for drunkenness that human science ever tried, were tried in vain on Philander Nicholls, the last-maker. Mrs. Nicholls had used some desperate remedies, such as steeping large quantities of jalap, aloes, ipecac, &c., in Philander's grog: but he continued to drink with undiminished relish, and the consequence of this dosing system were more troublesome to Mrs. Nicholls herself than they were to Philander, her husband. Being dead drunk every afternoon, within half an hour after he began his day's jollification, (so rapidly did he pour down the liquor,) he never felt the slightest sensation on account of the medicines he had swallowed. At last Mrs. Nicholls bethought herself of another plan for making a reformed drunkard of her lord. She engaged a watchman, for a stipulated reward, to carry Philander to the watchhouse, while he was yet in a state of insensibility, and frighten him a little when he recovered. In consequence of this arrangement, Philander waked up about 11 o'clock at night, and found himself lying on a pine bench in a dim and strange apartment. Raising himself on one elbow, he looked around until his eyes rested on a man seated by a stove, and smoking a segar.

"Where am I?" said Philander.

"In the medical college," answered the segar-smoker.

"What a-doing there?"

"Going to be cut up."

"Why, you died yesterday, while you were drunk, and we bought your body to make a 'natomy."

"It's a lie; I am not dead."

"No matter: we bought your carcase from your wife, who had a right to sell it, for it's all the good she could ever make of you. If you're not dead, that's not the fault of the doctors; and they'll cut you up dead or alive."

"You will do it, eh?" asked the old sot.

"Ay, to be sure we will: now directly," was the resolute answer.

"Well, can't you let us have a little something to drink before you begin?"

This last speech satisfied the watchman that Philander was a hopeless case; and as his reward was contingent on his successful treatment of the patient, he was not a little chagrined at the result; so, with no gentle handling, he tumbled the irreformable inebriate out of the watch-house.—[Pennsylvanian.

A recent letter in the Journal of Commerce furnishes the following items concerning the quartz mountains.

Hitherto, and for years to come, the gold hunters will content themselves with working the dilluvial earth, for dust and small pieces of gold, which have been torn from the hills and mountains by the torrents and rains. The gold undoubtedly was originally imbedded in the quartz rock, of which there are literally mountains. Ranges of mountains and hills of auriferous quartz extend the whole length of the Sierra Nevada. From these quartz rocks, Mr. Wright, the member of Congress elect from California, has brought most interesting specimens.

One of his specimens which he considered very interesting is a piece of quartz chipped rudely off from some exposed rocks, and which bears unmistakable marks of time. It is moss-covered, and has been exposed to rains and storms for ages. It chiefly consists of solid gold embedded in the quartz. He has also a number of boulders of gold, with quartz adhering to them; and which, of course, were detached by time and torrents from the mountain mass.

Another set of specimens consists of quartz in which minute particles of gold are distinctly visible to the eye. These are very rich in their product.

The next class of specimens consists of ordinary white and grey quartz, of which there are mountains in California, and in which no gold is very apparent to the eye, but which yields eleven dollars and a half in gold to four pounds of rock.

This has been tested by experiment, and I saw a ball of gold extracted from four pounds of the quartz, worth $11 50.

The gold mountains and placers in California are all public property, except Col. Fremont's mine, which is on a corner of the range and laps on to it. This mine is his own property. All or nearly all the rest belong to the U. S., and are the most valuable of all the public property. Col. F.'s mine is very rich.

When Congress is in a humor to resume legislation, it is probable that their attention will be turned to the regulation, by law, of this property—its sale or lease. Mr. Benton has a project in view, and Mr. Douglass and others; and the California members have plans and views on the subject.

Conversing with some friends, a few days since, on the attempts which have been made and are now making by the clergy, to "stop the mail" on the first day of the week, one of them observed that it would be well to petition Congress to stop the salaries of the clergy on Sunday! If the mail is stopped, we cannot see why the salaries of the clergy should not also be stopped!

"Hallo!" ejaculated an anxious guardian to his lovely niece, as he entered the parlor, and saw her on the sofa, in the arms of a swain, who had just popped the question and sealed it with a smack—"What's the time of day, now?" "I should think it was about half past twelve," was the cool reply, "as you see we are almost ONE."

A NEW TEST OF A MAN'S POLITICS.—"I say Pete some rascally Whig stole half my pig last night."

"How do you know it was a Whig?"

"Because, if it had been a Locofoco he'd have stole the whole of it. Locofocoism always 'goes the whole hog.'"

There are some who live without any design at all, and only pass in the world like straws down a river; they do not go, but they are carried.

The Louisville Journal says that Senator Foote has fought some twenty or thirty duels; has been hit himself, but never had the fortune to hit his opponent.

Schoolmaster.—"Bill Tompkins what is a widow?"

Bill.—"A widoer, sir, is a married woman that haint got a husband, cause he's dead."

Master—"Very well. What is a widower?"

Bill—"A Widdeirrer is a man what runs after the widders."

Master—"Well, Bill, that is not exactly according to Johnson; but it will do.

"YES-SIR-REE!"—One of the B'hoys out west, indited the following enthusiastic lines to his intended bride:

And when the reverend man shall say,
My son take thou this daughter,
I'd answer him in fearless tone,
I won't do nothing shorter.

Will you, my son, support and nourish,
This flower I give to thee?
I'd give my white kid glove a flourish,
And answer—"Yes sir-ree!"

A London scientific journal announces that a new locomotive, to be propelled without steam, gas or electricity—without fuel of any kind—is soon to be introduced to the world, to assist in the wonderful revolution now going on. Who can say such a thing is impossible, in view of the extraordinary developments already made in science and art; or who can estimate the effect such an invention or discovery, will have upon the travel and commerce of earth and sea? The age is pursuing an upward track, and the mind of man is just beginning to bravely grasp the elements of nature. Those elements are yet to be subjected to human uses beyond the most improbable dreams of the present.

STOVES! STOVES!!

MR. DUSTIN AMY, of this town, would respectfully notify the citizens of this county, and particularly that portion of them that expect to emigrate to the Salt Lake, that he intends to have, by the first boat this spring, a heavy and well selected assortment of Cast Iron Cooking Stoves, which he proposes to sell on very favorable terms for ready cash.

As Mr. A. is a tinner by trade, he will fit up the stoves with furniture according to order, and on the shortest notice. He keeps constantly on hand a good assortment of tin ware, and a good supply of all vessels usually called for by Emigrants. He has secured sufficient help to execute almost any job that may be required in his line on very short notice. The experience that he has had in traveling in the West, and also in fitting out emigrants for the last two or three years to journey over the Plains from this place, enable him to anticipate, correctly, the present wants of emigrants; and he has and will, therefore, prepare his stock and articles for sale to suit this frontier Market.

OH YES!

The Old Pioneer on the Track Again!

MR. HENRY W. MILLER, well known in this region, as one of the first western men, has joined me as partner; and we have removed our large stock of English Goods,

Imported Direct from Liverpool,

to our new store opposite our late stand; and in addition to the largest and

Best Stock of Hardware and Smallwares

in Kanesville, we have selected some superior lots of

Dry Goods, Iron, Steel, Springs, Axles, Axes and Holloware,

in the St. Louis Market, expressly for the WINTER TRADE, and the necessities of this community.

We have re-marked all our goods and have agreed to sell off our stock—superior in quality though it be—at prices sufficiently low to induce a continuation and increase of our trade; and to remove an influence existing, not altogether without foundation, that some of the goods of the late firm—Brown & Barham were too high,; in a word, we only want to live among you and desire not to enrich ourselves, at your cost, we wish "to spend and be spent," for the good of the cause, which is to us, as to you the greatest and best. Our motto in business, is and shall be

"Small Profits and Quick Returns."

The truthfulness of which you cannot prove unless you come, see and trade with

BROWN & MILLER.

N. B. All accounts due to the late firm—Brown & Barham, will be received, settled and accounted for by THOMAS D. BROWN,

NEW GOODS!

A. SORLEY,

St. Joseph, Missouri,

IS now receiving a splendid lot of SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS, of every description, of the Latest Style and Patterns. And is prepared to offer Great Inducements to all who may favor him with a call. His stock comprises a general assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, and Bonnets. Also, a large and well selected assortment of Iron and nails.

My plan is to sell for CASH ONLY, and at a small advance on cost; the rate charged for goods at my store, will contrast largely with prices paid by those who buy on time. Many place an undue importance on the credit system, unmindful of the fact, that constitutes a nominal profit, yet when compared with the invariable cash system it is a positive loss.

Selling on time is hazardous under the best circumstances. Those who sell on time must buy on time. Therefore, I will say to my old customers and the public generally, that you will save much by calling and examining my Stock of Goods, before purchasing. A. SORLEY.

From the Millennial Star.

The Earth—Its Fall—Redemption, and Final Destiny—The eternal abode of the Righteous.

The earth was formed to be inhabited—it was designed to be the abode of animated existence—the dwelling place of beings capable of enjoying life and happiness.

At the time of its creation, it was pronounced by its Author to be "very good." The term "very good," could have no meaning, unless spoken with reference to beings who should be capable of experiencing some benefit from its construction. However beautifully formed—however grand and magnificent its motions—however skillfully its elements are combined, or its parts proportioned to each other, yet, if not designed for perceptive beings, the earth could not be pronounced good. A mass of inanimate elements cannot be organized in any possible form or proportion so as to benefit or injure itself, and therefore cannot be good nor bad with reference to itself. Goodness and its opposite quality, when applied to unconscious matter, always have reference to conscious beings capable of deriving happiness or misery from these qualities. This was the meaning of the Creator when he ascribed the quality of goodness to the earth; it contained every necessary ingredient to render happiness to the beings who were designed to occupy it.

After having made every necessary preparation, countless species of living, moving beings came from the spirit world to inhabit earthly bodies, and take up their abode upon this magnificent creation. Among the rest, man—the offspring of deity—left his ancient home—his brother and sister spirits, and came to a world most beautifully adapted to his future wants. Here he entered a tabernacle of flesh and bones, and received dominion and authority over all the lower orders of existence. Here immortality reigned, and death had no dominion. The elements were so wisely arranged and proportioned, that life was derived from all things ordained for the use of man or beast, fowl or fish. The nourishing element of life was diffused through the earth, the ocean, and the air. Life pervaded every vegetable and fruit not forbidden to man. Life reigned triumphantly throughout this vast creation. Death was unknown; it had not been seen, heard of, nor experienced in all the varied ranks of earthly beings.

Here then was a creation "very good," inhabited by beings capable of eternal existence, both body and spirit. Here was a creation adapted to the wants of all its inhabitants, calculated to preserve unchanged that immortality with which they were endowed. Here, then, was a creation worth possessing as an eternal abode. Such was the inheritance given to man, with its vast treasures and sumptuous luxuries—such was the gift of heaven under certain restrictions. These restrictions were not complied with—man fell—a great change came over the fair face of creation—the earth was cursed—sickness, pain, and misery ensued—immortality yielded to mortality —— death reigned triumphantly throughout the animal kingdom—the everlasting inheritance on the newly-formed earth was forfeited—all seemed to be lost—forever lost! While all creation groaned in utter despair and death, a voice was heard, not a voice of wrath and indignation, but the voice of mercy and compassion—the voice of the Creator, proclaiming himself the Redeemer; love flowed through every sentence—man listened with eagerness—the door of hope was opened—despair fled away—all things again assumed a new aspect. The earth, though cursed, was to be redeemed—the body, though corruptible, was again to put on incorruption—all things lost by the first transgression were to be restored again in their primitive excellence and beauty.—Though this great redemption was to be universal, yet the change was to be gradual or progressive, not immediate; the effects of the fall were to continue for a season, until all the inhabitants of the spirit world, designed for this creation, should learn by bitter experience, the unhappy consequences of sin. Hence, the whole world still groans under the sad effects of the original transgression. Sorrow, mourning, death still prevail—the aged, middle-aged, an infant still feel the force of these evils—all are made partakers in a greater or less degree of the wretchedness and miseries of the fall—none escape—none can proclaim themselves immortal, or free from these direful effects.

The universal redemption of the posterity of Adam from the fall will be fully accomplished after the earth has been filled with its measure of inhabitants, and all men have been redeemed from the grave to immortality, and the earth itself has been changed and made entirely new.

But a universal redemption from the effects of original sin, has nothing to do with redemption from our personal sins; for the original sin of Adam and the personal sins of his children, are two different things. The first was committed by man in his immortal state; the second was committed by man in a mortal state: the former was committed in a state of ignorance of good or evil; the latter was committed by man, having a knowedge of both good and evil. As the sins are different, and committed entirely under different circumstances, so the penalties are different also. The penalty of the first transgression was an eternal separation of body and spirit, and eternal banishment from the presence of Jehovah; while the penalty of our own transgressions does not involve a disunion of body and spirit, but only eternal banishment. The first penalty not only shut man out from the presence of God, but deprived him eternally of a body; the second penalty permits him to retain his body, though in a banished condition. As the penalties are different, so also is the redemption. Redemption from the first penalty is unconditional on the part of man: Redemption from the second penalty is conditional. Unconditional redemption is universal; it takes within its scope all mankind; it is as unlimited as the fall; it redeems men from all its effects; it restores to them their bodies; it restores them to the presence of God.

The children of Adam had no agency in the transgression of their first parents, and therefore they are not required to exercise any agency in their redemption from its penalty. They are redeemed from it without faith, repentance, baptism, or any other act, either of the mind or body.

Conditional redemption is also universal in its nature; it is offered to all, but not received by all: it is a universal gift, though not universally accepted: its benefits can be obtained only through faith, repentance, baptism, the laying on of the hands, and obedience to all other requirements of the gospel. Unconditional redemption is a gift forced upon mankind which they cannot reject, though they were disposed. Not so with conditional redemption; it can be received or rejected according to the will of the creature.

Redemption from the original sin is without faith or works: redemption from our own sins is given through faith and works. Both are the gifts of free grace; but while one is a gift forced upon us unconditionally, the other is a gift merely offered to us conditionally. The reception of the one is compulsory; the reception of the other is voluntary. Man cannot, by any possible act, prevent his redemption from the fall; but he can utterly refuse and prevent his redemption from the penalty of his own sins.

The earth, like the posterity of Adam, was cursed because of the original sin, and like them, it will be redeemed unconditionally, and restored again into the presence of God. So far as the original sin is concerned, mankind and the earth, keep pace with each other. When one falls the other falls also. When one is redeemed, the other is redeemed also.

Had there been no other sin but that of Adam's, the redeemed earth would have become the eternal abode of all the posterity of Adam, without one exception. But both man and the earth have been still further corrupted by other sins. The posterity of Adam have transgressed the code of laws given since the fall, and subjected themselves to its penalty. The penalty does not interfere with the first penalty. Man will be redeemed from the first before the second will be fully inflicted. When his redemption from the first death is completed, then comes the judgment, when his own sins will be enquired into, and not Adam's. As he stands before the judgment seat, he will find himself entirely innocent of Adam's transgression, and entirely redeemed from the effects of it, but he still finds himself guilty of his own individual sins the penalty of which is a second death, not a disolution of body and spirit like that of the first death, but a banishment from the presence of God, and from the glory of his power.

Redemption from the second death, as we have already observed, is conditional. Man having voluntarily committed sin, must voluntarily comply with the conditions of redemption; otherwise, he must suffer the penalty. If any should feel disposed to doubt whether the second penalty will be inflicted, let them look at the infliction of the first, during the last 6,000 years. The first death with all its attendant evils, has extended its ravages among all nations and generations since the first law was broken. If God, then, has fulfilled his word in the first provocation to the very letter, why should any one suppose that he will not inflict the second death as a penalty of the second provocation? All generations bear witness to the faithfulness of his word spoken in the garden of Eden; why, then, should we suppose that justice shall be frustrated, and his word become null and void in regard to any future penalty with which the sinner is threatened! If the sin of one man brought the first death upon unnumbered millions, why not the sin of each man bring the second death upon himself? There is no escape for the sinner from the second death, only through the conditions of the gospel. All who believe in Christ, and repent of their sins, and be baptized by immersion for the remission of them, and receive the Holy Ghost through the ordinance of the laying on of hands, and continue faithful in all things unto the end, shall escape the penalty of the second death. All who reject these conditions must suffer it; for the word of God cannot become void, and justice be thwarted from its stern decrees.

Though all mankind are to be fully redeemed from the effects of the original sin, yet, we have great reason to fear, that but a few will be redeemed from their own sins. Those few who are redeemed will receive the earth for an eternal inheritance; for the earth, as we have already observed, will be unconditionally redeemed from the curse of the original sin, and so far as that sin is concerned, it will be no obstacle to the earth's entering into the presence of God. But as the earth has been corrupted by other sins than the original, it must partake of the curses of the second death after it is redeemed from the curses of the first, unless God has provided a way for its sanctification and redemption therefrom. It has seemed good unto the great Redeemer to institute ordinances for the cleansing, sanctification, and eternal redemption of the the earth, not from the orignal sin, but from the sins of the prosperity of Adam.

The first ordinance instituted for the cleansing of the earth, was that of immersion in water; it was buried in the liquid element, and all things sinful upon the face of it were washed away. As it came forth from the ocean flood, like the new-born child, it was innocent, it arose to newness of life; it was its second birth from the womb of mighty waters—a new world issuing from the ruins of the old, clothed with all the innocency of its first creation. As man cannot be born again of water, without an administrator, so the earth required an agency independant of itself, to administer this grand cleansing ordinance, and restore it to its infant purity. That administrator was the Redeemer himself.

The second ordinance instituted for the sanctification of the earth, is that of fire and the Holy Ghost. The day will come "when it shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, and all that do wickedly shall be as stubble;" after which "the glory of God shall cover the earth, as the waters cover the deep." Here, then, is a baptism of fire first, then of the Holy Sprit. As man receives the baptism of fire and the Holy Spirit through the laying on of hands of a legal administrator, so the earth receives the same, not through its own agency, but through the agencies ordained of God. As man becomes a new creature by being born again, first of water, then of the spirit, so the earth becomes a new earth by being born again of these cleansing and purifying elements. As man becomes a righteous man by the new birth, so the earth becomes a righteous earth through the same process. Righteousness will abide upon its face, during a thousand years, and the Savior will bless it with his personal presence. After which the end soon comes, and the earth itself will die, and its elements be dissolved through the agency of fire. This death or dissolution of the earth is a penalty of the original sin. Infants and righteous men die, not as a penalty of their own sins, but because Adam sinned; so the earth dies or undergoes a similar change, not because of the transgression of the children of Adam, but because of the original transgression. But all mankind are made alive from the first death through the resurrection, so the earth will again be renewed; its elements will again be collected, they will again be recombined and reorganized as when it first issued from the womb of chaos. As the bodies of the righteous are made immortal, eternal, unchangeable, and glorious, so the earth itself will be so constructed as to be capable of everlasting endurance. Immortality will be indelibly stamped upon every department of this creation. It will be crowned with the presence of God the Father, and shine forth in all the splendors of celestial glory. But who will be its inhabitants! Those who have passed through the same process of purification, and none else. As all who partake of the second death, must be banished from the presence of God, it necessarily follows that they must be banished from the glorified earth; for that is redeemed into the presence of God, and enjoys the glory of his power; and no beings can inhabit it but those who are sanctified by the same ordinances and law.

As the earth passes through its great last change, two of its principal cities,—the Old Jerusalem of the eastern continent, and the New Jerusalem of the western continent will be preserved from the general conflagration, being caught up into the heaven. These two cities, with all their glorified throng will descend upon the redeemed earth, being the grand capitals of the New Creation. "Without," (or exterior to these holy cities, and upon other creations of an inferior order, far separated from the glorified earth,)—"will be dogs and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie." (Rev. xxii. 15.) These are they who are banished from the presence of God, and from the glory of a celestial earth.

It is the meek only who shall receive the promised inheritance,—they are the lawful heirs. "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth, was the promise of the Great Redeemer.

But who are the meek? By what peculiarities are they distinguished from other men? There must be some qualities about them far superior to the generality of mankind, or they would not become the exclusive heirs of the new earth. The law of meekness includes all the laws of the gospel with its ordinances and blessings, priesthood and powers, through obedience to which mankind become justified, sanctified, purified, and glorified. Such are the meek of the earth, and none others. And as the gospel has not been preached nor administered by authority on the eastern hemisphere for the last seventeen centuries, consequently, during that time, there have been none possessed of the requisite qualities of meekness sufficient to entitle them to the promised inheritance upon the new earth. A few only will saved—a few only will receive the law of meekness and continue therein.

Different portions of the earth have been pointed out by the Almighty, from time to time, to his children, as their everlasting inheritance. As instances,—Abraham and his posterity, that were worthy, were promised Palestine. Moab and Ammon—the children of righteous Lot—were promised a portion not far from the boundaries of the twelve tribes. The meek among the Jaredites, together with a remnant of the tribe of Joseph, were promised the great western continent. The righteous of all nations who shall in this dispensation be gathered to that land, will receive their inheritance in common with the meek who formerly sojourned upon the land. In the resurrection, the meek of all ages and nations will be restored to that portion of the earth previously promised to them. Thus, all the different portions of the earth have been and will be disposed of to the lawful heirs; while those who cannot prove their heirship to be legal, or who cannot prove that they have received any portion of the earth by promise, will be cast out into some other kingdom or world, where, if they ever get an inheritance, they will have to earn it by keeping the law of meekness, during another probation.

How great will be the disappointment to the rich—the high, and the noble, who have rejected the message of eternal truth, sent forth in different ages for the redemption of men, when they find that there is not a foot of the new earth that they can call their own; the whole of it having been lawfully disposed of to the poor and the meek. Howl, then, ye rich men, who reject the message of the servants of God; for your portion is in this life, and you have no claim upon the everlasting inheritance. God will rescue the earth from under your dominion, and give it to those unto whom it is promised. Howl, for the miseries that shall come upon you!

It has been conjectured by some, that the earth will not be sufficiently capacious to accommodate the nations of the righteous. But such a conjecture will appear erroneous to any one who will exercise his reasoning powers sufficient to calculate the superficial contents of our globe, and compare the same with the probable number of inhabitants who are destined for this creation.

In round numbers, the surface of our terrestrial spheroid contains one hundred and ninety-seven millions of square miles, or over one hundred and twenty-six thousand millions of acres. Now, if from the creation of the earth, to its final glorification, there should elapse a period of eight thousand years, or eighty centuries, and if we should suppose the population to average one thousand millions per century, (which is probably an average far too great) yet there would be an abundance of room upon the new earth, for all this vast multitude. There would be over one acre and a half for every soul. But when we reflect how few will be saved—how few have received the plan of redemption, even when it has been proclaimed by authority in their ears, any how many generations have passed away unto whom the Almighty has sent no message, we are compelled to believe that not one out of a hundred will receive an inheritance upon the new earth. But even though we suppose one per cent. of all this immensity of population shall through obedience to the gospel, become lawful heirs to the new earth, then there will be over one hundred and fifty acers for every soul. If the new earth contains only the same proportion of land as the old, there would still be about forty acres for every redeemed soul. But the new earth is represented by the apostle John, as being without any sea, which increases its capacity for inhabitants above the old four fold. The farmer who is looking forward to the new earth for his everlasting inheritance, need have no fears of being too much limited in his possessions. There will be ample room for the delightful pursuits of the agriculturist. He can have his pleasure grounds—his orchards of the most delicious fruits; his gardens decorated with the loviest flowers; and still have land enough for the raising of the more staple articles, such as manna to eat, and flax for the making of fine robes, &c.

Who, in looking upon the earth as it ascends in the scale of the universe, does not desire to keep pace with it? that when it shall be classed in its turn, among the dazzling orbs of the blue vault of heaven, shining forth in all the splendors of celestial glory, he may find himself proportionably advanced in the scale of intellectual and moral excellence? Who, but the most abandoned, does not desire to be counted worthy to associate with those higher orders of being who have been redeemed, exalted, and glorified together with the worlds they inhabit, ages before the foundations of our earth was laid? O man, remember the future destiny and glory of the earth, and secure thine everlasting inheritance upon the same, that when it shall be glorious, thou shalt be glorious also.

Song—The Mountain Dell.

We'll plow, and sow, and joyful reap,
The land our God has given;
To bless our friends, to bless our foes,
And make one home—a heaven.
CHORUS—Away, away to the mountain dell,
The valley of the free;
Where faith has broke the tyrant's yoke,
That bound fair liberty.

No famished children there shall pine,
Nor frantic mother wild,
Ere seek to take that life away,
She gave her infant child!
Away, away, &c,

We'll sooth and calm the widow's heart,
And dry the orphan's tear!
Till their bright mirthful eyes impart,
A joy, devoid of fear!
Away, away, &c.

We'll nurse the bloom of maiden love,
In chastity when young.
There faithless boast, shall never prove
A jest for ribbald tongue.
Away, away, &c.

Where red men trail the buffalo's track,
O'er mountain's desert sand—
We'll tell them of their father's acts,
Who once possessed the land.
Away, away, &c.

Blest with the priesthood from above,
Where truth on truth shall flow:
Till every land and every clime,
Beneath its mandates bow!
Away, away, &c.

Then while this hour of vengeance low'r,
And sinners find no rest;
Then hie ye home, ye Saints who roam,
Your hope is in the west.
Away, away, &c.

Reflections on Truth.

Truth is the great universal law, whose end is to effect the greatest good, to the greatest number, in the best and most economi- manner

It is humanity's compass o'er the ocean of eternity, it is light shining in a dark place.

Truth is eternal and unchangeable, its nature simple, its character progressive, its power almighty, its value inestimable, its march onward, its path undeviating. Nothing preceded it, its priority is obsolute; it had no origin, it will have no end; it was, and is, and is to be; the Alpha and Omega of all existence. It remains unchanged amid all the mutations of this ever-changing universe, the alone immoveable, amid all moveable things. Empires may rise and fall, nations may flourish and pass away, thrones may totter and crumble to dust, yet diamond truth still lives and reigns, its power unabated, its nature unchanged. The land and sea may change their places, and the foundations of the earth be restored to their primitive chaos and confusion, the sun and moon may be clothed in blackness, the stars in wild confusion start from their orbits, the heavens and the earth "depart as a scroll," while "the elements melt with fervent heat," and the "crash of worlds" takes place; still truth retains its beauty and its brightness, unsullied and unimpaired as ever, while purity and perfection mark its path, and stamp its features with a bold relief.

Men may speculate and theorise, propound and plan, and heap up monuments of their impious folly, while the tide of human opinions may ebb and flow, grow stormy and tempestuous, spreading on shore of time its foam and filth; yet, truth, like a towering rock still braves its fury, and stands forth with a bold prominency, the fatal reef on which false systems wreck. As it was in the beginning, "when the morning stars sang together, and the sons of God shouted for joy," so it is now, and ever will be, even after the mighty angel hath declared that "time shall be no more."

Truth is so simple that "whoever runs may read," and a wayfaring man, though a fool in other respects, need not err in this; here the meanest capacity, and the mightiest intellect are placed upon a level, that no man may glory in himself. The beauty of romance, and the pleasures of imagination fade by contrast with the sublime simplicity of eternal truth. Through its simpliciy are the privileges and responsibilities of all made equal, and the justice, wisdom and mercy of God magnified and greatly extolled. Nought can withstand the force of truth, for it is quick and powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing, even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. "Like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces," "it is mighty and effectual, even to the pulling down of the strongholds of sin and satan, and a spiritual wickedness in high places."

Darkness and doubt, ignorance and superstition flee before it, as morning mists before the orb of day. Despots and tyrants fail at its coming; the sceptre of dominion and the reins of government fall from their trembling hands, while the captive and the prisoner burst their bonds, rejoicing in the freedom of the sons of God. "It converteth the soul, it maketh wise the simple, it rejoiceth the heart, and enlighteneth the eyes."

When other things shall loose their value, and grow insipid to the minds of men, truth shall shine forth with redoubled splendour, its lustre and magnificence heightened by the contrast. Its price exceedeth that of rubies, and its glory surpasseth that of the diamond as light excelleth darkness.

Its goeth forth conquering and to conquer, it runeth swifuly and its course is glorified; it turneth not to the right nor to the left, but perseversin its onward path, its reward with it, and its work before it.

It is the highest interest of man to come in possession of truth, and his most boundeu duty to act strictly in accordance with her golden rules, that by so doing he may become entitled to those blessings which are held in reversion for her faithful and obedient followers. Opposition to the truth has been in all ages the prolific source of all our evils; while on the other hand, obedience thereto is the highway to holiness and peace, happiness and exaltation, knowledge, power and eternal life. Eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive, the rewards she hath in store for them that love her; joys unspeakable and full of glory; treasures incorruptible and undefiled, communion with Gods and angels; immortality and eternal life; thrones and dominions, principalities and powers, are among the number she hath been pleased to reveal.

Just in proportion to our knowledge of truth is our responsibility, and just in proportion to our obedience thereto is our righteousness, and according to our diligence in acting upon it, so is our exaltation in the scale of being and intelligence, for there is no righteousness apart from truth, nor honor apart from obedience.

Truth is brighter than the sun, fairer than the moon, and more terrible than an army with banners, "its voice is a voice of majesty and power, mighty in operation.

Happy, yea, thrice happy is the man who is acquainted with truth, far happier he who authorised and sent, turns many to her paths, for he shall shine as the stars of heaven, and as the brightness of the firmament for ever.

"The enjoyment of truth is—liberty. Confidence in truth is — faith. Obedience to truth is—righteousness. The possession of truth is—knowledge. Submission to truth is—humility. The action of truth is—power. The effects of truth are—peace and assurance. The end of truth is—perfection.

JAMES BELL.

Was it Providence!

BY MISS SEDGEWICK.

Take, for example, a young girl, bred delicately in town, shut up in a nursery during her childhood—in a boarding house through her youth, never accustomed to either air or exercise, two things that the law of God makes essential to health. She marries; her strength is not adequate to the demands made upon it. Her beauty fades away. She languishes through her hard offices of giving birth to children, suckling, and watching over them, and dies early.

"What a strange Providence, that a mother should be taken in the midst of life from her children?"

Was it Providence? No. Providence has assigned her three score years and ten; a term long enough to rear children, and see her children's children, but she did not obey the laws on which life depends, and of course she lost it.

A father, too, was cut off in the midst of his days. He is a useful and distinguished citizen, and eminent is his profession. A general buzz rises on every side.

"What a striking Providence!"

This man was in the habit of studying half the night, passing his days in his office and the courts, of eating luxurious dinners and drinking various wines. He has every day violated the laws on which health depends. Did Providence cut him off. The evil never ends here. The diseases of a father are often transmitted; and a feeble mother rarely leaves behind her vigorous children.

It has been customary, in some of our cities, for young ladies to walk in thin shoes and delicate stookings in mid-winter. A healthy, blooming young girl, thus dressed, in violation of Heaven's laws, pays the penalty; a checked circulation, cold, fever, and death.

"What a sad Providence!" exclaim her friends.

Was it Providence, or her own folly?

A beautiful young bride goes night after night to parties made in honor of her marriage. She has a slightly sore throat, perhaps, and the weather is inclement; but she must wear her neck and arms bare; for whoever saw a bride in a close evening dress? She is consequently seized with an inflamation of the lungs, and the grave receives her before her bridal days are over.

"What a Providence!" exclaims the world—"Cut off in the midst of happiness and hope!"

Alas! did she not cut the thread of her own life herself?

A girl in the country, exposed to our changeful climate, gets a new bonnet instead of getting a flannel garment. A rheumatism is the consequence. Should the girl sit down tranquilly, with the idea that Providence has sent it upon her, or should she charge it to her vanity and avoid the folly in future?

Look, my friends, at the mass of diseases that are incurred by intemperance in eating, or in drinking, or in study, or in business; they are also being caused often by neglect of exercise, cleanliness, pure air; by indiscreet dressing, tight lacing, &c.; and all is quietly imputed to Providence! Is there not impiety as well as ignorance in this? Were the physical laws strictly observed from generation to generation, there would be an end to the frightful diseases that cut short life, and of the maladies that make life a torment or a trial.

Mr. Perkins, of Maine, has reached New York with his fifteen pound lump of California gold, in quartz; the gold is supposed to weigh thirteen pounds clear. The quartz, although chrystalized and hard, has been rolled along till all its angular projections have been rounded and worn smooth in its descent from its original mountain locality. Another specimen of quartz has been received in New York, containing 440 pennyweights of gold—the quartz in this lump is also crystalized, and, like that of Mr. Perkins, of a smoky hue.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 1, 1850.

Emigration.

We have attended the organization of 359 wagons of Salt Lake Emigrants up to Saturday 8th inst. Capt. Milo Andrews is ahead with fifty wagons. Next follows, Capt. Benjamin Hawkins with one hundred; Thos S. Johnson, Capt. of 1st Division, and —— Capt. of Second Division. We left them at Council Grove 12 miles from Bethlehem west of the Missouri river, on the morning of the 7th inst. Next in succession is Bishop Aaron Johnson with a train of one hundred wagons. Elisha Everett, Captain of 1st Division, and Matthew Caldwell, Captain of the 2d Division. Next in order is Capt. James Pace with one hundred. Richard Fenton, Captain of 1st Division, and David Bennett, Captain of Second Division. The Emigrants are generally well fitted out with wagons and teams, provisions, &c., &c.

There are some wagons quite too heavy. Those brought from St. Louis are good, but too heavy. A heavy wagon with a stiff tongue is unsuitable for the journey. Let no person hereafter buy a wagon for this trip unless its tongue has a joint in the hind end forward of the axle tree. Light wagons that will bear from sixteen to twenty hundred pounds, are the most suitable for this service. These heavy timber coaches should be left here, and not used by our people, neither by anybody else, unless they choose.

The number of California wagons that have passed this point to about 1500, averaging [illegible] to the wagon, making 1,500 men, and about 22,500 head of horses, mules, oxen and cows.

Our own Emigration to Salt Lake Valley will amount to about 700 wagons as nearly as we, at present, can determine. They take two new carding machines in addition to one sent last year, besides much other valuable machinery. They also take about 1,000 sheep and 5000 head of cattle, horses and mules.

With the facilities for improvement that are already in the Valley, and those that are now going, we may expect to see that hitherto desolate region, growing rapidly into importance, and contributing largely to the West, and to Western enterprize, to Western men and measures! "Let the Wilderness and the solitary place be glad for them, and the desert rejoice and blossom as the rose."

Brief Notice of Mr. ——'s Letter.

We have just glanced at a letter in the St. Louis Organ, signed M. written from Council Bluffs on the 5th ult., giving a description of Kanesville and of matters and things in general. He says, "the power of the Church here is tremendous. Orson Hyde, one of the Twelve apostles of Mormonism, exercises as much authority as any foreign despot. He is the fountain of all law, and does things pretty much as he pleases."

We are only sorry that Mr. M——'s statements are untrue. "He is the fountain of all law." Did he authorize the court at Traders Point before which the "bony specimen of snickerdom" was arraigned, tried, convicted, and sentenced to receive twenty-five lashes or to pay twenty-five dollars? Why sir, you must tell the truth, Mr. M——! If you had said that neither court, jury nor thief were Mormons, you would have told the truth.

If you had said that companies of emigrants sometimes on arriving here would break up, and a part want to go back and a part forward, and because of the ragged and embarrassed condition of their outfits, and the trouble and litigation to which they would be subject, to separate and divide their property, they would sometimes help themselves to a horse or two in the night, break open a trunk in the tent and take money; and sometimes the goneby party would sleep in the night with teams, wagons and entire outfits, and early next morning would be across the river, beyond the reach of law, laughing in their sleeves to think how nicely they had done it over the halting party. Why not tell the truth Mr. M., just as it is, instead of intimating, that "somebody" was committing depredations upon the horses and oxen of the emigrants here. We tell you sir, that unless you cease your false insinuations, you may "catch it"—and the pitch will be hot.

You are proud and bold to say, Mr. M., to you and to the community generally, both Jew and Gentile—that the Mormons have not interrupted the property of the emigrants, [illegible] that of any one else, if we have any correct knowledge or belief on the subject.

Why did you not say that Orson Hyde was a thief and an outlaw? why did you not say that he (Orson) was said might to support himself that he might make a tax upon any one for that purpose? Why did you not say that his upright course in the law won the confidence and esteem of his friends, and secured their good will, upon a principle which foreign despots too seldom avail themselves of. Because you were willing to do the Jews favor, and join in the popular cry, "Away with him! He is not fit to live."

Repent, Mr. M., and properly define your position, and publish yourself as one of the [illegible] that you are the very man that stole Mr. Wheelwright's horses, the very backing out California Emigrant that brought a stolen horse here and sold him, and then stole another from Mr. Parish near this place, to get Mormon and rode him off on [illegible] for a small.

Will Mr. [illegible], the co-operator with Bill Smith, and publisher of a dirty and filthy sheet at Covington, Ky., inform the public why he and Bill have lately fallen out. Tell us after all your united falsehood and lying slander against the church, if the sting of the serpent has poisoned the cup of your domestic bliss? If you will cherish a viper how will pity you if you get stung.

Among the many valuable men who have emigrated from this place this season, are Bishop Aaron Johnson, William Snow, William McLellan and Harlow Redfield. These have stood as minute men in this county, and have been on hand in every emergency with their means and their talents; and while we regret the loss of their society and valuable services, we can but wish them success and prosperity on their journey, knowing that our loss is the gain of the friends in the Valley. There are others also who are equally good and valuable men.

The vacancies in the High Council occasioned by the removal of these men, will now have to be filled up. We will here state, that whatever may be said of any member of this body detrimental to his official acts, by prejudiced persons going to the Valley or to any other place we are fully assured that they have done only their duty, and have done right. They have showed themselves men of God; and proved that they are not to be frightened nor rode rough shod; but have put on a dignity and an independance of character that have made them respected and honored in their place by good men, and hated by those who wanted to outgrow their cloth.

Whoever enters a complaint in the Valley against any member of this body, touching his official acts, in our opinion, himself is the very person that merits the rebuke he seeks to procure for others.

Latest Fashion.

On returning from meeting the other day, we met a lady and gentleman in a carriage, apparently on a pleasure ride. We noticed a white veil, splendid and flowing attire; and as this was an uncommon appearance for our poor back-woods country girls to assume, curiosity led us to gaze with some intensity upon the passing figure. But not understanding the latest fashion, we were somewhat disappointed; for just as we were discovered, the hand of the lady was immediately placed before her face to cover it, as though she was ashamed of herself. We confess that we were ashamed of her, and we do not think she would be ashamed of herself, if she had not good cause for it. But as it happened, we knew them both; and since then, we have learned just enough to advise such folks to go down the river just as quick as water and steam can carry them. They are not wanted here, and we hope they will take their departure before they get a stronger invitation to do it. Affected wealth, affected refinement and accomplishments, where rottenness and corruption manifestly dwell, are as disgusting and revolting to us as the stench from a putrid carcass. "They shall gather out of His kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity. Then shall the righteous [illegible] in the Kingdom of their Father." For heaven's sake, go and leave us!

We publish this that all such characters may know that this is an unwelcome and an unsafe harbor for them. If people come among us for conscience sake, and for the sake of salvation; and show a disposition to endure hardness and privation for Christ's sake, we are glad to receive them, and shall be happy to do all we can for their comfort and prosperity. But cursed is the man or the woman that comes here to practice iniquity and corruption. They shall feel the speedy and marked displeasure of Heaven in the name of the God of Israel—and of all his people say: Amen!

Whig Nomination.

We learn that George G. Wright, Esq., of Keosauqua, late Senator in the Iowa Legislature is the Whig candidate for Congress, in the 1st Congressional District, at the next election. We are not personally acquainted with this gentleman, but fully believe him to be one of those Whigs that reverence the rights of men. Daniel F. Miller, Esq. if a candidate, would be likely to get the most votes in this section; and probably from the fact that he is more generally known in this county.

News in Advance of the Mail.

The Valley Mail left Salt Lake City on the 18th of April last. Two or three men have arrived in advance, bringing the General Epistle of the Presidency there, which we publish to-day. The news is generally good—met the 1st emigrants on the 14th of May near the South Pass. Found plenty of grass from the Sweet Water. Emigrants generally getting along well,—heard of no particular disease among them. They lost not so many animals as we anticipated they would. Prospects for plenty of wheat this year, were good. No particular lack of provisions there—still they bore golden prices. Corn $2 50 per bushel—flour $12 00 per hundred pounds—fresh beef from 7 to 8 cents per pound—potatoes $2 00 per bushel—sugar 50 cents—coffee from 30 to 50 cts per pound. No sugar in the place.

News Expected by the Horn Telegraph.

The Valley Mail, we hear, is on the way by ox-teams, and may be expected in about ten days at this place.

A Box in Store.

A box of merchandise shipped to our care by Beach & Eddy, of St. Louis, marked John Hudson, Salt Lake City, with $14 charges upon it, without papers or letters of instruction. The contents of the box will be sold to pay the charges if the owner does not soon look to it. It is frequently the case that property is shipped to our care, and to be forwarded to Salt Lake with freight and charges upon it, and no funds to forward it. Persons who send goods in this way, deceive themselves. It will be sold here to pay charges, unless funds are sent to insure their being forwarded, &c.

Arrived.

Elder, Martin L. Benson, his family, and his company, arrived here safely a few days since, in good health and spirit. They are westward bound, and are from Granger, Allegany County, New York.

The timely remittance by him of our friends in the section from which he comes, are not passed over unnoticed; and he justly merits our cordial good-will for his activity and diligence in obtaining subscribers, and in collecting funds for various purposes in the Church, and also the people in that section for responding to the various calls made through him.

For the Frontier Guardian.

KANESVILLE, June 8, 1850.

Having been on my appointed mission to the Eastern States and British Provinces for the last two years, which portion of the vineyard has been like the gathering of grapes after the vintage is done. I have summed up the amount of gleanings from that quarter, during this time, and I can count about 200 which we have baptised in the various branches, and near 500 which have emigrated to the West, bound for the Salt Lake Valley. The Eastern Emigration this spring left mostly in two companies, one company left Philadelphia about the 1st of April, consisting of over one hundred souls under the care of Elder Gibson, who arrived here in safety and good health and spirits. I left Boston on the 9th of April, with 200 souls; came via Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, and landed at Deseret Depot in Bethlehem, 18 miles below Kanesville, on the 15th day of May in good health and spirits. I am happy to say we have been blessed and prospered on our journey. We have met with good accommodation and kind treatment from most of the officers and men of the various boats where we have traveled, especially, Capt. Devinney, of the Dewit Clinton, from Pittsburgh to St. Louis, used every exertion in his power to make us comfortable and happy. Also, Captain Baker, of the Sacramento, from St. Louis to Kanesville, should be patronized by the Saints who wish to be dealt with honorably and kindly, or travel in safety on the dangerous waters of the Missouri, will not be disappointed who embark with Capt. Baker; at least as far as the care and duties of the captain and officers of the boat are concerned.

Since my arrival in Kanesville, I have had the pleasure of sitting in Council and Conference with Elders Orson Hyde and Orson Pratt, and of meeting many of my old friends and acquaintances, which is truly a treat after being separated for two years. We have had two deaths in our company since we left Boston. Sister Margaret Bird, wife of James Bird, of Cambridgeport, Mass, died at St. Louis, after a few hours illness, on the 2d day of May. Also a child of Brother and Sister Branch, before named in the Guardian. There was also one birth on the DeWit Clinton, mother and daughter well.

In consequence of the high price of Oxen, and the difficulty of obtaining them, our companies could not be ready to cross the river quite as soon as we could have wished, but we now expect to be ready to organize and start in few days, and hope that the preserving care, peace and blessings of our Heavenly Father may attend all the Camp of Israel in our journeyings to the mountains and abide with all the faithful is the prayer of W. WOODRUFF.

School Meeting.

The citizens of Kanesville interested in a School are requested to meet in the Music Hall, on Friday evening next, at early candlelight, for the purpose of making the necessary arrangements for a school.

The following candidates have been nominated by the Whig State Convention, for State Officers to be balloted for at the coming August election:

FOR GOVERNOR.
JAMES HARLAN,
Of Johnson County.

FOR SECRETARY OF STATE.
ISAAC COOK,
Of Linn County.

FOR AUDITOR.
WM. H. SEEVERS,
Of Mahaska County.

FOR TREASURER.
EVAN JAY,
Of Henry County.

FOR TREASURER OF BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS.
DR. JAMES NOBLER,
Of Wapello County.

FOR CONGRESS, 1ST DISTRICT.
GEORGE C. WRIGHT,
Of Van Buren County.

FOR CONGRESS, 2D DISTRICT.
COL. WM. H. HENDERSON,
Of Johnson County.

Mr. Underwood, clerk of the steamer Robert Campbell, will accept our thanks for late St. Louis papers.

Invasion of Cuba.

NEW YORK, May 24—5 P. M.

The Ohio, from the Havana, whence she sailed on the 7th, arrived this afternoon. Gen Lopez landed at Cardenas on the 17th, and with 500 men took the two garrisons. Six hundred surrendered, after losing three of their number. General excitement prevailed at Havana. The city was under martial law. Several thousand militia had been enrolled. Troops had been dispatched to Matanzas. It was reported that troops were collected at Women's Island; several vessels had started for that place. The Spanish steamer Pizarro had returned with 105 prisoners—French and German. The Ohio, Falcon and Georgia were compelled to anchor at the entrance of the harbor.

Gen. Lopez landed from a steamer which left New Orleans on the 7th. Several other vessels, containing in all some 1200 or 1500 men, had left New Orleans previous to the Creole, but where they are to land is not known.

Arms were being delivered to the militia. Resident foreigners and all were called to enrol. There were 500 troops in Matanzas; 500 more were dispatched from Havana [illegible] A. M. to reinforce them, and march against Gen. Lopez.

Rumor says that the force under Lopez had increased to two thousand—that he was already half way to Matanzas.

On the 16th, news was received at the Havana, that a large force was collected at Women's Island, near Cape Cartouche, Yucatan. A General of Marines, with several vessels, and about 3000 men, started immediately for that place. The force on the Creole with Lopez, which effected a landing, was only a small part of the expedition. It is known that some ten or twelve vessels have left New Orleans and different parts of the Gulf, probably to land simultaneously at different points.

It is reported that Gen. Lopez had broken up the railroad to Cardenas in several places. The mercantile, bankers, &c., in Havana, were removing the money, plate, into the Fort for safety. Captain Schenck protested, through the American Consul, to the Captain General, and demanded safe anchorage; he was refused, and told that if he did not like it, he might go to sea as soon as he pleased—the Spanish Government would not be responsible for the safety of his ship. None of the passengers, except those having passports, were permitted to go on shore. No communication was allowed between the passengers while in port; not even between the officers; without a permit was obtained from the Captain General.

Indians.

These pests are harbored among us by those who are willing to make a dime at the expense of hundreds of dollars to other men. There are several horses lately missing from this neighborhood, and probably these red skins have got them.

We recommend a company to be formed forthwith, armed with good hickorys, and with something stronger if necessary, and follow up the red jackets till they will be sick of stealing horses. They are now about to go on their summer's hunt, and they are here to pick up horses for that purpose. We are not disposed to encourage stealing, but if those who lose horses by the Indians can make up there losses from those who are known to trade with them and entice them here, we shall not be sorry.

THIRD GENERAL EPISTLE OF THE PRESIDENCY

Of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, from the Great Salt Lake Valley, to the Saints scattered throughout the Earth,

GREETING:

Beloved Brethern: When we contemplate your diversified situations, in connection with the great work in which you have enlisted, it is one of our highest sources of enjoyment for the time to arrive when we can communicate to you by letter, what we would make known by tongue, were you with us; and if you, being filled with the same spirit, shall enjoy as much in reading as we do in writing, we shall feel that our labors have not been in vain; for we should thereby have the assurance, that brotherly love, and kindred feeling, necessary for the peace and prosperity of the church are sure and steadfast, and on the increase among those who profess to love Jesus Christ.

We are here in the mountains, far removed from the revolutions and daily intelligence of the nations, and have heard nothing from them; or from our brethern who dwell afar; since September: but, though separated from our kindred of Adam's posterity, and dependent a large portion of the time on our own resources for information and enjoyment, we have the pleasing consolation that we are located near "the tops of the everlasting hills," and higher upon the mountains than any other people; consequently we are nearer the heavens, those regions of light and glory from whence we derive intelligence, and from whence all blessings flow.

The welfare of scattered Israel lies near our hearts: it is our theme by day and by night; in meditation, in council, in prayer, in action; we are at home no where, only as we are engaged in building up the kingdom of God; and it is one of the greatest sources of our joy, to be permitted to be servants unto the Saints, and we ever seek the earliest opportunity to communicate the situation of the brethern in the valley, and to diffuse that light, of which our heavenly Father is pleased to make us the recipients, that we may all be edified and grow up together in the knowledge of God, and be prepared for celestial glory.

Some emigrants from Michigan, arrived at this place on the 15th of November, accompanied by Mr. Vasques, bringing letters from the elders then going east, who were at Little Sandy, October 30th, all well: and on the 22d of the same month, snow covered the Valley from one and a half to two inches; and on the 24th it was about three and a half feet in Mill Creek Kanyon; and on the same day, Elder Parley P. Pratt, with a company of about fifty men, left the most southern settlement of this Valley, where they had rendezvoused the day previous, for the purpose of exploring the south country, to learn its geography, history, climate, and locations for settlements.

Nineteen emigrants arrived December 1st, in a very destitute situation, having left their wagons more than forty miles back, and their teams about twenty; themselves without provision. They reported having left the States on the 24th of September, and having passed Elder Taylor's company at Independence Rock, November 6th; but so closely were they pressed by the snow, they did not bring us one news paper, though they said they had many in their wagons.

An Express was sent by Captain Stansbury, of the United States Topographical Engineers, stationed at this place, to Fort Hall, some time in December, but so deep was the snow it was obliged to return, without accomplishing its object, and business generally was suspended in the Valley during this month, though a few milder days near the last, permitted the raising of the roofing timbers of the council house, which had been prepared in the Bowery, which has been occupied as a great work shop during the cold weather.

On the 5th of January, Captain Stansbury sent a second Express to Fort Hall, which accomplished its mission, and returned after a tedious journey, together with the paymaster and some other officers of the U. S. Army from Fort Hall, who reported but little snow in the vicinity of the Fort, but immense quantities on the route; and that a large portion of Government cattle, at Cache Valley, had died through the severity of the weather and snow, which fell in this Valley from ten inches, to two feet deep on the 18th and 19th, and in some of the adjoining Kanyons, six or eight feet deep. On the morning of the 24th of the same month, a terrible wind swept over our Valley from the South, and continued about twenty-four hours, driving all animals before it, the snow being so deep and light as to be subject to its influence, piercing through the thickest clothing, causing men to seek shelter in the house, and cattle to gather in hollows, and under cliffs, where, in some instances they were buried, suffocated and frozen in heaps.

The snow having commenced somewhat earlier than usual, found the brethren nearly destitute of wood, and about the time last mentioned, it was reported in the city, that fifteen sleighs were buried in the snow, in Dry Kanyon; but in the evening, the men and teams came into the city all safe. The facts were, the brethren had passed the Kanyon in the morning, and while loading their sleds on the the mountain side, an avalanche or slide of snow came down on their track, and filled the Kanyon, some fifty or sixty feet deep, and prevented their passage; but by leaving their wood, and making a pass on the side of the mountain, drivers and teams were all saved. We mention this as one of the pleasures, inconveniences, or casualities, that the Saints in the mountains are liable to experience, when they have not provided their winter's wood in the summer; and the snow has been from six to twenty feet deep in our Kanyons a great share of the past winter.

On the 30th of January, four men arrived from Fort Bridger, having left their goods and remaining pack animals in Weber Kanyon, a portion of their horses having died on the way before reaching the Kanyon. This was the second attempt of the same company to pass from the Fort to the Valley, and their goods remained in the Kanyon on the 30th of March.

During the past season, the winter weather has been longer by four or five weeks, than the season previous, and more snow, but not so severely cold, and the prospect for grain is good. It is generally believed that there is as much good looking wheat now on the ground, as grew here last year; and there are large quantities of the best California, and Tous wheat ready for sowing. There are also large quantities of California barley, a valuable article, and many other choice seeds, which will greatly enhance the farming interest the present season: and no exertion will be wanting on the part of the brethren here, to raise food for those who may come to the harvest.

The snow in the Valley was nearly dispersed, in the latter part of February; but frequent falls since, and night frosts through the month of March, prevented ploughing to any great extent, till near the first of April; when the earth was bare, spring rains began to fall, and the farmers began to improve the cheering return of seed time, in the confidence of an abundant harvest; and we would still urge upon the brethren, who have choice and rare seeds, to bring them with them, for although there are a great variety of seeds in the Valley, there are many good varieties on the earth, which we have no yet obtained, and if we had abundance of the white Silesia, or choicest kinds of sugar beet seed, at this time, there would be no necessity of our importing sugar and molasses after the present season, for the vegetables of the Valley are richer in saccharine matter, than in any other place of our acquaintance.

As we anticipated in our last letter, about sixty families, under the presidency of Patriarch Isaac Morley, left this place in October, and commenced a settlement at San Pete (Sand-pitch) Valley, one hundred and thirty-four miles south. The have suffered, many inconveniences through the deep snows, and severe frosts, for want of houses, and other necessaries common in old settlements, and have lost many of their cattle; but they have laid the foundation of a great and glorious work, and those who persevere to the end in the following counsel of heaven, will find themselves a thousand fold richer than those who have made gold their counsellor, and worshipped it as their God. Their cattle, now living, have been sustained by their shoveling snow from the grass, and feeding their provision and seed grain, and we have sent them loaded teams, to supply their necessities until after seed-time.

They have been surrounded by a tribe of Indians who appear friendly; and who have suffered much from the measles since they have been among them, and many have died, as have also, most, or all of the tribes in the mountains, and those who live, urge the brethren to remain among them, and learn them how to raise grain and make bread; for having tasted a little during their afflictions, they want a full supply. There is plenty of fire wood, easy of access; some of the best of pine, bituminous coal, salt, and plaster of Paris, at this settlement or its immediate vicinity.

The Utah Lake Indians, have been very troublesome for a long time; and even before the pioneers arrived in this valley, we were told by all the mountaineers we met, that "they were bad Indians, and that we could not live near them in peace, and that other clans of the Utah nation did not like them." On acquaintance we found all these statements true; and particularly since our last communication, they have been very hostile, killed many horses of our cattle, stolen horses, waylaid and shot at the brethren at Utah, until self defence demanded immediate action.

Their doings were presented to Captain Stansbury, also the paymaster and such officers of the U. S. Army, stationed at Fort Hall, as were here at the time, and they were unanimous in their decision, that it was necessary that those Indians should be chastised, and that it belonged to U. S. troops at Fort Hall to do it, but the snow was so deep, the troops could not come hither; therefore, it became necessary for the citizens to proceed against them, which they did, advised by all, and accompanied by some of the said national officers; when a portion of the Indians, entrenched in a deep ravine, covered with thick brush, near Fort Utah, and fought desperately two days, the 8th and 9th of February, with the loss of several of their warriors. One of our brethren was killed, and a few wounded, who have since recovered: after a few more skirmishes, in which none of the brethren were killed or wounded; peace was restored.

There are many tribes, of the Utah Indians, or many clans of that tribe, from whom we have heard; and they appear satisfied with our course, and say "It is good, the Lakes were bad Indians," and there is no probability that the remaining Utes, will offer any further violence at present, and we hope never.

Elder Pratt returned about the middle of February, with a part of the exploring company, and left the remainder with the teams in Yoab Valley; the snow being so deep oxen could not travel; but with much difficulty a portion of the way, they all arrived in safety about the 28th of March. The company went south more than three hundred miles, and over the rim of the Basin, into the borders of the Valley of the Colorado, passing trackless mountains, covered with deep snow, and followed by excessively cold weather, the mercury in several instances falling 20 deg. below Zero. They found some small valleys, with little or no snow, warm and pleasant, desirable for settlements; one of which is Little Salt Lake, where we design a settlement the present season; good water, iron ore, and wood are abundant. Little, comparatively, could be learned of the vegetable or mineral productions of the country through which they passed; but they saw enough to know that popular geographers have hitherto known less of its prominent features. Suffice it to say, there is yet room, in the valleys of the mountains, for all who can be contented with honest industry, peace, and seclusion.

On the 22d of February, the shock of an earthquake was sensibly felt in the valley, to a great extent; causing houses to jar, and crockery and furniture to move considerably. The report of Volcanic eruptions, or cannon lows of the earth, resembling the discharge of distant cannon, are not unfrequent in the mountains.

The health of the Saints in general, is good, and there has never been any prevailing sickness in our midst, and but very few deaths. Since last mail, Brothers Absalom Perkins, George W. Langley, Erastus Snow's eldest son, Claudius V. Spencer's wife, Sisters Jane Hall, Turley, Steward and Thompson, are all we recollect, and those mostly from consumption, and other symptoms of disease contracted long before they came to the Valley.

The General Assembly of Deseret, have held an adjourned session, at intervals, through the winter, and transacted much important business, such as dividing the different settlement into Weber, Great Salt Lake, Utah, Sanpete, Yoab, and Tuille, counties; and establishing County Courts, with their Judges, Clerks and Sheriffs; and Justices and Constables, in the several precincts: Also a Supreme Court, to hold its annual session at Great Salt Lake City, attended by a State Marshall, and Attorney; and instituting a general jurisprudence, so that every case, whether criminal or civil, may be attended to by officers of State, according to law, justice and equity; without delay.

They have also chartered a State University, on the most liberal principles, to be located at Great Salt Lake City, with branches throughout the State, if wanted; and appropriated for its benefit five thousand dollars per annum, for twenty years, out of the public treasury; all of which will be under the supervision, direction and control of a Chancellor, twelve Regents, Secretary and Treasurer, who will, no doubt, publish their intentions by this mail.

On account of the severe weather, little has been done on the public buildings since last fall. The foundations of the public store house and stores are laid, and the aqueducts, from the warm spring to the public baths, are rapidly progressing, and they will be ready for use in a short time.

Captain Stansbury, with his Topographical Engineers, are surveying Great Salt Lake, and the adjacent country, for the purpose of mapping, which, when completed, will unquestionably be very interesting to our friends abroad, for by it they will better understand our relative locations.

Many brethren have gone to the gold mines, and many are about going, and all "by council," as they say, and no doubt truly. A few have gone according to the advice, of those whose right it is to counsel the saints; and such are right, inasmuch as they do right; but much the greater portion have gone according to the counsel of their own wills, and covetous feelings; such might have done more good by staying in the Valley, and laboring to prepare the way for the reception of the brethren, but it is not too late for them to do good, and be saved if they will do right in their present sphere of action, although they will not get so great a reward, as they would have done, had they performed the greater good.

If at the mines, they will listen to the counsel of those men who have been appointed to counsel them; and when they return, work righteousness, and do as they would be done unto, and acknowledge God in all their ways, they may yet attain unto great glory; but if they shall cease to hearken to counsel, and lose God their God, and return among the saints filled with avarice, and refuse to lend, give, or suffer their money to be used unless they can make a great speculation thereby, and will see their poor brethren, who have toiled all the day, in want, and in perplexity; and they will not relieve, but keep the rust corroding in their purses; it had been better for them if a mill stone had been hanged about their necks, and they had been drowned in the depths of the sea, before they had departed from the right ways of the Lord, for if they shall continue thus to harden their hearts, and to shut up their bowels of compassion against the needy, they will go down to the pit, with all idolaters, in a moment they are not aware; with as little pity as they have manifested to their poor brethren, who would have borrowed of them, but have been sent empty away.

Gold is good in its place—it is good in the hands of good a man to do good with, but in the hands of a wicked man it often proves a curse instead of a blessing. Gold is a good servant, but a miserable, blind, and helpless God, and, at last, will have to be purified by fire, with all its followers.

Elders Amasa Lyman and Chas. C. Rich will continue their operations at Western California, according to previous instructions, and not only keep an accurate account of all tidings and of the general proceedings of all faithful brethren, that we may know of their good works, and hail them as brethren when we meet, but keep a perfect history of all who profess to be saints, and do not follow their counsel, pay tithing, and do their duty; and report the same to us, every mail, that they and their works may be entered in a book of remembrance in Zion; that they may be judged therefrom, and not impose upon the faithful; for it is not uncommon for men to say, "I can do more good, if I go to the mines, than I can to stay here," and we want to prove such, and know whether they are true men, or liars.

When men, professing to be brethren, go to the mines, according to their own counsel, we want them to stay until they are satisfied; until they have obtained enough to make them comfortable; and have some to do good with, and a disposition to use it for that purpose, and not run back here in a few months, pick up their gold, boast how much they have made, doing no good themselves, and hindering every body else from doing good over whom they have an influence; curse and deny the Holy Ghost, and when spring opens, run to the mines again, as some have done. Let such men remember that they are not wanted in our midst; for unless they speedily repent, the wrath of an offended God will suddenly overtake them, and no power can stay it. Let such leave their carcasses where they do their work, we want not our burial grounds polluted with such hypocrites; but we have it in our hearts to bless all men who will do right, whatever their occupation; and our arms are ever open to embrace such, and we pray for all men who are ignorant, or out of the right way, that our Heavenly Father will give them his spirit, that they may learn and do right.

To those who may fear coming to the Valley on account of the scarcity of timber, we would say, there is now four times more timber known within reasonable distance of this city, than there was one year since, and every season opens new stores of wood, in the surrounding mountains; and all the difficulty is the scarcity of help, to remove the wood and timber to the valley, before the falling of snow; beside, coal has been discovered, from whence it can be brought on a railway, easily constructed, and there is more, and nearer in prospect.

Furnaces and forges are much needed here, for the furnishing of mill irons, machinery, farming utensils, culinary vessels, railway tracks, and many other things, and we hope that Elder Pratt has already sent on men, who will be here to start the business this season; if he has not, we trust he will not lose sight of this important object against another winter.

Elders Orson Pratt and George D. Watt are wanted at this place, with their families; and we shall expect them as early in 1851, as circumstances will permit. At such time as Elder Pratt shall find it convenient or necessary to facilitate his return, he will call to his assistance Elder F. D. Richards, who will succeed him in the Presidency of the church on the British Isles; and we would suggest Elders George B. Wallace and Levi Richards for his counsellors. So far as we have been informed, Elder Pratt has done a great and good work in England, but his labors are now needed at home—and if the Saints should mourn his loss, we would say be comforted and come with him, or follow him as fast as you can; but if you cannot at present, you will find in his successor, Elder Richards, a counsellor, president and friend, and worthy of your prayers and confidence.

Elders Wilford Woodruff, and Amasa Lyman, are expected here this season. We anticipate a visit from Elder Orson Hyde, who, we hope, will bring a host of Saints with him; for the labors of the valley are great, compared to the number of laborers. A greater harvest is near at hand than there will be reapers to gather. Let those who start, be prepared to come through without assistance from the valley, for we shall have no men to spare during harvest, to help emigrants. Companies are already organized and ready to start for Green and Platte Rivers, to keep ferries during the high waters, for the accommodation of the emigration.

We would urge upon all Saints the importance of keeping in view the Perpetual Emigrating Fund, and of adding thereto, all in their power, the present season; for every succeeding year will be more and more eventful in the progress of the work of God, and more and more Saints will be ready and want to gather to Zion. We warmly anticipate that such will be the interest felt, and the funds collected in the British Isles, that we can commence bringing forward the Saints from that region, one year hence; and the Presidency in England, will take special care to be ready to act on future instructions on this subject.

Elders of Israel be faithful in your calling; feed the sheep; feed the lambs of the flock, and proclaim the gospel in all simplicity, meekness, and love, whenever you have the opportunity as it shall be given you by the power of the Holy Ghost which you will always have for your counsellor if you are faithful; and let all the Saints give diligent heed unto the counsel of those who are over them in the Lord, upholding them by the prayer of faith, keeping themselves pure and humble; and they will never lack wisdom from above; and by faith and works search out your way to Zion.

Several elders have been appointed missions to England, Scotland, the Society Islands, the States, and Western California, as will be seen by the minutes of the general conference, of the 6th of April, to which we refer for particulars, concerning any business then transacted.

We are happy in saying to all, that a brighter day is dawning on the intellectual prosperity of Zion; that the university recently established by the State of Deseret, bids fair to accomplish the object for which it was instituted; that it is under the supervision of faithful and intelligent men, who will consider no labor to great, to carry out the wishes and greatest possible good of those for whose benefit the institution was founded; and we earnestly solicit the co-operation of all the Saints, and particularly the elders in all nations, to gather, as they may have the opportunity, books in all languages, and on every science, apparatus, and rare specimens of art and nature, and every thing that may tend to beautify and make useful; and forward or bring the same to the Regents of our university, for the benefit of all such as may hereafter seek intelligence at their hands.

Brethren, farewell. May the blessings of heaven and earth be multiplied unto you, and your hearts be warm to receive and improve upon the same in righteousness, and the time hasten that we may meet you in this land of peace, is the constant prayer of your brethren in the gospel of Jesus Christ. Amen.

From the Plains.—During the past week several persons have return from the Plains: some from as far out as Fort Laramie. They report grass plenty, and the emigrants are generally getting along well. Some few cases of cholera, smal' pox, and measles, and a few deaths. They bring no news particularly interesting.—[Adventure.

The St. Louis Intelligencer of the 5th says: During the past three or four days not less than one thousand emigrants of the Mormon persuasion have passed this city on their way to the Great Salt Lake. They are mostly English emigrants, and from appearances, quite intelligent as a body, and such as would make good citizens in any country.

The Baltimore Sun, of the 13th, contains the following in relation to the Cuban Expedition:

The Cuban Expedition.—A letter received from St. Helena, dated March 14th, says that a passenger arrived from New Orleans, in the schooner Mary Ellen, states that a barque came out of the Balize ahead of them with 250 to 300 men on board, bound ostensibly for Chagres, but the pilot said there were three colonels on board, and that she had taken the men on board after leaving the city, and that she was not bound to Chagres. Both vessels kept company for three days, when they parted off Tortugas.

The New York Sun, of Saturday morning, flaunts its flags, and arrays its artillery of big type over "Highly Important Intelligence—Departure of the Epedition against Cuba—Expected News of a Great Battle," &c., &c. It professes to be in the receipt of important intelligence from the last head-quarters of the Cuban patriots, and announces that they are, without doubt, at this moment hovering on the coast of Cuba. It expects by the next arrival, tidings of the first battle.

The Louisville Journal of Commerce of the 18th contains the following which is more definite than the eastern news:

From the Cuba Expedition.—We yesterday received a letter from a gentleman connected with this expedition. We make the following extracts:

"The finest body of men are now collected here that ever left the country for warlike purposes. They are mostly from Kentucky and are all tried veterans of the Mexican war. We shall in the course of the next two weeks conclude all of our preparations and light down on the 'Island' and give the 'Dons' a touch of our quality."

"Our arms have reached us safely, and we shall be ready to commence operations by the 14th. You will then perhaps hear from us. Our enterprise is hazardous, extremely so. We all know it, but we have weighed everything well. We have studied our ground, and we are 'bound to win.' The motto of 'set' is, crowned with laurels, or buried in cypress.'"

The letter was written on the 31 of May, but we are not at liberty to mention the place at which it was written.

In a few days, possibly next week, we shall hear something definite. We shall then give not only the place of writing but the whole particulars of the expedition and the name of the writer.

The Fire Annihilator.—Mr. Phillips, the inventor of this new apparatus, recently gave an exhibition of its power to a large company assembled at the London Gas works. The Philadelphia American says:

After some preliminary remarks on the vast losses from fire, amounting, annually, in the three kingdoms to £2,000,000, and the inefficiency of water in quenching a furious conflagration, he set fire to a compartment of a large open building, filled with partitions and temporary joisting of light wood, daubed with pitch and turpentine, and hung with rags soaked with the same combustibles. The flames ascended, roaring with such vehemence as to repel the spectators to a distance of forty feet, reaching, apparently, beyond all remedy by water; when Mr. P. with one of his hand machines, somewhat larger than a good sized coffee pot, from which a volume of gas and vapor was discharged, extinguishing the flames in "half a minute;" and then, to prove that there was no noxious quality in the resulting air, immediately walked through the building with a lighted candle in his hand. A company has been formed to manufacture these new styled fire engines; which if they answer as well in practice as they seem to do in experiment, will soon make their way to this country, and find their field of operation in subduing fire.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

STOVES! STOVES!!

MR. DUSTIN AMY, of this town, would respectfully notify the citizens of this county, and particularly that portion of them that expect to emigrate to the Salt Lake, that he intends to have, by the first boat this spring, a heavy and well selected assortment of Cast Iron Cooking Stoves, which he proposes to sell on very favorable terms for ready cash.

As Mr. A. is a tinner by trade, he will fit up the stoves with furniture according to order, and on the shortest notice. He keeps constantly on hand a good assortment of tin ware, and a good supply of all vessels usually called for by Emigrants. He has secured sufficient help to execute almost any job that may be required in his line on very short notice. The experience that he has had in traveling in the West, and also in fitting out emigrants for the last two or three years to journey over the Plains from this place, enable him to anticipate, correctly, the present wants of emigrants; and he has and will, therefore, prepare his stock and articles for sale to suit this frontier Market.

OH YES!

The Old Pioneer on the Track Again!

MR. HENRY W. MILLER, well known in this region, as one of the first western men, has joined me as partner; and we have removed our large stock of English Goods,

Imported Direct from Liverpool,

to our new store opposite our late stand; and in addition to the largest and

Best Stock of Hardware and Smallwares

in Kanesville, we have selected some superior lots of

Dry Goods, Iron, Steel, Springs, Axles, Axes and Holloware,

in the St. Louis Market, expressly for the WINTER TRADE, and the necessities of this community.

We have re-marked all our goods and have agreed to sell off our stock—superior in quality though it be—at prices sufficiently low to induce a continuation and increase of our trade; and to remove an influence existing, not altogether without foundation, that some of the goods of the late firm—Brown & Barham were too high,; in a word, We only want to live among you and desire not to enrich ourselves, at your cost, we wish "to spend and be spent," for the good of the cause, which is to us, as to you the greatest and best. Our motto in business, is and shall be

"Small Profits and Quick Returns."

The truthfulness of which you cannot prove unless you come, see and trade with

BROWN & MILLER.

N. B. All accounts due to the late firm—Brown & Barham, will be received, settled and accounted for by THOMAS D. BROWN, at Brown & Millers store.

NEW GOODS!

A. SORLEY,

St. Joseph, Missouri,

IS now receiving a splendid lot of SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS, of every description, of the Latest Style and Patterns. And is prepared to offer Great Inducements to all who may favor him with a call. His stock comprises a general assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, and Bonnets. Also, a large and well selected assortment of Iron and nails.

My plan is to sell for Cash Only, and at a small advance on cost; the rate charged for goods at my store, will contrast largely with prices paid by those who buy on time. Many place an undue importance on the credit system, unmindful of the fact, that constitutes a nominal profit, yet when compared with the invariable cash system it is a positive loss.

Selling on time is hazardous under the best circumstances. Those who sell on time must buy on time. Therefore, I will say to my old customers and the public generally, that you will save much by calling and examining my Stock of Goods, before purchasing. A. SORLEY.

POETRY.

My Cottage Home.

As Sung by S. C. Aldrich, at the Music Hall, in Kanesville, May 8th, 1850.

I dream'd a dream the other night,
When all around was still,
I thought I saw my cottage white,
Upon yon flow'ry hill,
The grass platt green before the door,
The porch with vine o'ergrown,
Were lovely as they were before,
When that home was my own.

CHORUS—Oh! Rumseller, that home, that home of thine,
That pleasant home, that happy home,
That cottage home was mine.

The gravel'd walk so white and straight,
With flow'ry banks on each side,
That led down to the wicket gate,
Where Willie used to ride,
The locusts o'er the path that grew,
The willow boughs that sway'd,
All told me with a tongue o'er true,
That there my Mary played.

CHORUS—Oh! Rumseller, &c.

The silver lake so calm and clear,
Along whose bank I've strayed,
So often with my lady dear,
To watch the sun light fade,
The brook that purling sweetly ran
The gardens foot along,
And murmuring fount as bright as then,
Still sang the same lov'd song.

CHORUS—Oh! Rumseller, &c.

The window towards the garden gate,
That looks out on the west,
Where that lov'd being used to wait;
Who made my home so blest,
Was closed the sombre curtains hung,
And no lov'd face was there,
Nor voice the evening song that sung,
Or breathed the morning prayer,

CHORUS—Oh! Rumseller, &c.

Silence hung round that happy home,
Where once so light and free,
My laughing children used to come
And dance upon my knee,
Where she who was my homes dear light,
In constant beauty shone,
Around that cheerful heath stone bright,
All now is still and lone

CHORUS—Oh! Rumseller, &c.

Yes that lov'd wife has gone to rest,
In death her heart is bound,
Her babes are sleeping o'er her heart,
Beneath yon grassy mound,
And I am wandering lone and strange,
Nor master of my will,
My home, my cottage home is changed,
To a hut behind the still,

CHORUS—Oh! Rumseller, that home, that home of thine,
That pleasant home, that happy home,
That cottage home was mine.

MISCELLANY.

From the Lancaster (Pa.) Literary Gazette.

An Allegorical Story.

BY LYDIA JANE PIERSON.

A beautiful child dwelt in a crystal palace, the gate of which was strong and fast locked, and the key committed to his own keeper: though he had a companion who was constituted his guardian, but with no power but to counsel and reprove.

The child was named Young Innocence, and the name of the guardian, who was an angel of God was Conscience. And they dwelt happily together, for Conscience remembered many glorious things of the mansion of Heaven, and the garden of God—with the river of eternal life, and the trees of immortal fruit, and the flowery wilderness of Paradise, where the spirits of young maidens sit rocking in the blossoms, and breathing their adoration in inconceivable fragrance; where the souls of tiny intants flit like birds among the branches, warbling melodious gladness; and the spirits that have sinned and wept on earth, sit groups beneath the trees speaking with joy and wonder of the power of Grace, which loosed their bonds, healed their griefs, and brought them to such blessedness and beauty. Where the spirits which in this world sought with meekness to understand the work of Omnipotence, stand in bright companies upon the jewel crested mountains, and watched the mighty angels, going forth and returning in the performance of Jehovah's picture of wheels within a wheel, each with its myriad eyes, guided by the "living creature"—the strong angels that propel in their courses; —while the swift messengers sweep past on the rushing comet, their robes of light steaming on the blue ether.

Where every soul drinks of the waters of perfect blessedness which fill it to its utmost capacity with joy, love and adoration.

And Young Innocence loved to listen to these tales of Heaven, and longed only to be admitted to that perfect bliss. But as the spring advanced the child beheld the flowers of earth blooming by the walls of this crystal palace, and he sometimes almost wished to touch their glowing petals. But his guardian said to him.

"These are vile weeds, true flowers bloom but in Heaven."

One day, a very beautiful creature came to the crystal portal, bearing a very cunningly blended garland of various tinted dyes. There were the red rose, and the golden cocorus, the white lily and the golden commeline, the violets and the pinks, and clusters of forget-me-nots. And the syren that brought them was named Pleasure and she pleaded:

"Open the gate to me Young Innocence. My offerings are quite harmless, beautiful and fragrant children of Earth; they will cheer thee, and tell thee of the richer flowers of Heaven."

And the child said, "I long for those beautiful flowers. May I not have them, my Guardian?"

And the Guardian answered, "I know that those flowers are fragile, that they will perish and leave thee; and I know that they have bloomed in thorny branches, and that the thorns will become harder and keener as the blossoms fall away. And I fear thou wilt forget in their short lived enjoyment the flowers that bloom in Paradise, the gem of which it is thine to cultivate here below."

Then the syren brought with her an advocate whose name she called Human Reason, and who pleaded to Young Innocence.

"Take the offering of Pleasure, dear child. They are God's creatures; formed to beautify life, and cheer the rough ways in which we must walk toward Heaven. The wisest of man have worn them; the holiest of the prophets have enjoyed them. Let us in, and thou wilt rejoice in our company."

And the tempters smiled sweetly and the garlands looked glorious—and Young Innocence with trembling hand placed the golden key in the lock, withdrew the bolts, and admitted the guests with their offering.

And he placed the flowers upon his brow and bosom, and danced with pleasure to the sound of her merry singing. He felt that there were thorns among the flowers, which ever and anon wounded his bosom and temples, yet the garlands were so sweet he would not cast them from him.

His guardian besought him to put them away and attend to the young plants which he had been commanded to rear, as a token by which alone he could claim admittance to the threshold of Paradise.

He bade her keep silence, and finally shut her up in a cell from whence her voice could scarcely be heard in the silence of the night hours.

But the garland of Pleasure began to wither. The flowers gave forth their dying breath sweeter than all their living incense, and fell in broken beauty around him. But the branches that formed the chaplet clung closer to his temples, and pressed their thorns deeper as the balm and beauty passed away. Then Pleasure sought to repair the wreath and artificial flowers—but they were cold and rough and had no fragrance.

Then he who had been called Young Innocence went and sat down weeping at the feet of Conscience, and pleaded:

"Tell me how I may be delivered from these sorrows and regain the peace that I have lost?"

And she said, "thy sorrow cannot be removed. Thou must endure them meekly and with self abasement. And we will send Penitence, the angel that is my handmaid, to plead with Eternal Mercy that she may restore thy peace. But thy name henceforth is not Innocence, but Folly."

While he was weeping, a person of noble mein, lofty bearing, and intense eye, persented herself at the gate, and said:

"Behold, my name is Ambition. Let me come in and I will make thee great. I have in my casket the treasures of learning, the garlands of Civil Honor and Military Fame. These are the only treasures worthy the pursuit of immortal intellect. If thou shalt possess either of these, all men shall do thee honor, and sing thy praise; and thy name shall be remembered as long as the world endureth." And the pleader showed him beautiful volumes and golden pens, plumed with laurels; and civic wreaths, and finely wrought gold hilted swords; and chairs of state, and sceptres.

And he was dazzled, and shut Conscience again into her closet, but still he heard her voice and was afraid to open the door.

But Pleasure and Human Reason, who were already inmates, recognized in Ambition a brother, and joined their voices in his favor. He was admitted. And he spread his treasure before him who once was Young Innocence, but who had become Folly, and exhorted him to purchase them and be wise.

And he said, "must I buy of thee? Pleasure gave her treasures freely."

And Ambition said, "they are not worth thy acceptance. These are worthy of long years of toil."

So Folly labored day and night for the meed of Ambition, and when he had won some few jewels Pride stood at the gate, and said.

"Let me come in, and I will arrange those glorious gems, and show thee how much nobler thou art than man."

And he said, "I have heard that thou art a devil."

But Ambition replied, "He is my servant. Thou shalt admire him."

And Pleasure and Human Reason insisted also; and poor Folly opened his gate to Pride. And Pride said:

"Thou art exceedingly glorious, and capable of ruling all men. If thou wilt admit my comrades Deciet and Falsehood, Oppression and Avarice, thou mayest bind all mankind to thy footstool."

And Folly knew that these were demons, but he had admitted so many that he was not forced to do as they commanded, and the new comers were admitted.

Then all the inmates of his palace placed him high upon an altar, and sang pæans to his name, and burnt incense before him; and he was intoxicated and shouted his own praise, and deemed himself a God. But the gold that was spread around him was rusted by the sweat of the unrewarded toilers; his drink was bitter with the tears of the slandered and the oppressed—and his laurels were foul with human blood, clotted beneath their leaves and dripping from their blossoms. And he heard men, women and children groaning and weeping and mingling his name with curses—and crying, "The God who careth for us will reward thee according to thy works."

And he was afraid before God, and hated his accusers. Then a dark spirit stood at his gate and said—

"I will rid thee of thy terrors. Let me in, and I will convince thee that there is no higher than thou."

And he felt his soul shudder, and said, "I will not open to thee, thou liar! I know there is a God, and though I have blasphemed him, I will not deny his name."

And Unbelief sneered and mocked at him, and said, "Poor Young Innocence, go and ask thy guardian to tell thee again the nursery tales of heaven that used to amuse thy childhood. Perchance thou art silly enough to listen and believe, though all wise men know they are fables." And the vile spirits that were within, joined in his taunting, and supported his arguments, and forced him, who should have been master of the mansion, to admit Unbelief, and to assume the name of Atheist.

But Human Reason was not wholly depraved, and he said, "Thou art a fool, notwithstanding all thy learning. There is a God, as all creation teacheth. Thou hast done wickedly as well as foolishly. Go and ask thy guardian if I have spoken truth."

And Atheist went trembling to the place where he had confined Conscience, and when he looked upon her, he said, "She is dead. I am past hope. I will go and revel while I am able."

Divine Mercy saw, and a tear fell from her eye, which penetrated the crystal and dropped upon the face of Conscience. Immediately she arose, filled with indignation, and reproached him who had so fearfully sinned against God and her. And she scourged him with whips, and said, "Thou art accursed; thou hast undone thyself." And all the demons that were in the house derided him and said, "Ah thou wast easily overcome. We have deceived thee effectually."

And he cried to Conscience, "Is there no hope."

And she answered, "None."

And he fell down at her feet and said, "afflict me as thou wilt; I deserve all thy torment."

And Divine Mercy said unto him from heaven, "Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners."

And he said, "Where is this Savior, that I may kneel before him, for I am in great agony. The sharp thorns of Pleasure's withered garland, are piercing my brain—the gold that I have gathered by Avarice, is cankering my heart. The honors that I have gotten by Deciet, and the laurels that grew out of bloodshed are fire and wormwood to my soul; and Conscience says they shall be my torment forever."

And Divine Mercy said, "thou shalt endure them until thou meet the angel Death. But go thou to Mount Calvary, in the sight of all the world, and sit down at the feet of Jesus. He will commission his angels Faith, Hope and Charity to sustain, comfort and counsel thee. Thou shalt follow their counsels, and listen to all the suggestions and reproaches of the guardian of thy youth, who knoweth all thy ways and wickedness. So mayest thou enjoy the quiet of Humanity until Death shall free thee from all thy painful trophies, and bring thee to the entrance of Paradise. There, if thou hast walked worthily with the angels of Immanuel, I will meet thee and thou shalt drink of the waters of Eternal joy.

"But beware of the fiends whom thou didst foolishly admit into thy dwelling. They cannot be expelled, and they will taunt thee and tempt thee. Hold fast thy Faith, let Hope sustain thee, and give to Charity thy heart and all thy gold to do with as she pleases. So shall it be well with thee at last. He who letteth in one sin will soon have his house full of demons."

Connubial Felicities.

SCENE—SITTING ROOM. GOOD FIRE. WIFE ON ONE SIDE. HUSBAND THE OTHER.

Wife, What are you going to give me for a Christmas present, this year, dear?

Husband, Christmas present, my love! How can you ask for such a thing, when you know how much I am pushed for money to pay my honest debts? I told you this morning that I would be obliged to raise a large sum against New Year's day, and as yet know not where it is to come from.

W. I know you did, my dear; but then you know a few dollars won't make any difference.

H. Jane, you talk in a very ridiculous manner. Anybody else might say the same to me with equal justice, and I have many friends and poor neighbors, whom, if possible, I feel it my duty to assist at this season of the year. Now you don't really require anything. You have everything comfortable around you, as far as I can judge.

W. As far as you can judge. Let me tell you, Mr. Penguin, that you have no judgement at all, in household affairs. Don't you suppose I wish to be considered as respectable as those I associate with? Now I have invited company to be here on New Year's day, and I want to let them see that Jane Penguin can have as good a set out as they can. I called on Mrs. McShew this morning, and she showed me the prettiest pair of vases that her husband gave her yesterday, and Mrs. Flare has got the neatest and most becoming stair carpet, and Mrs Setall one of the most magnificent mahogany extension tables I every saw, and they took so much pride in showing them to me, that I felt cheap to think my husband could'nt show as much attention to me as other gentlemen do to their wives.

H. My dear Jane, you are getting yourself in a passion.

W. No I ain't any such thing; it is you who are in a rage, because I asked you for a Christmas present.

H. Well, my dear, as I said before, you need nothing, and I would feel myself really guilty were I to yield to your notions on this subject, which, I see, originate solely in a desire of rivalry. Now, if I had a few dollars to spare, which I have not, I would esteem it my first duty to relieve the distresses of those whom I know to be in indigent circumstances. There was poor Mrs. Grooly who has been sick for a long time. I called to see how she was yesterday, and found the poor creature with her daughter, sitting up and sewing, without a particle of fire to warm her chilled, attenuated frame with, and—

W. I suppose you opened your heart and sent her some wood, didn't you?

H. Yes, my love! I did, and I felt a glow of pride and happiness thrill through me to think that I had been the humble instrument of sending comfort to their hearth.

W. And pray how old is her daughter?

H. Well—about seventeen, I should think.

W. Is she pretty.

H. Uncommonly.

W. (In a rage.) There, I thought so. I guessed that all this charity wasn't without some motive. Ah! you hypocrite! I see it all now. You the humble instrument. You are the devil's instrument! Where does this woman live? I insist, Mr. Penguin, upon knowing where she and her vile daughter live.

H. You must excuse me from telling you, my dear, in your present excited state.

W. That's right! Heap insult on insult. Add to your villiany by abusing your wife. But I see how it is! I won't live with you any longer! I'll quit you and go home, so I will. I'll not be treated in this way any longer! You base man you! [Exit wife in tears.]

Husband, solus. This is pleasant! What a cursed fool I was to get married, to be sure! [Exit to bed.]

FROM CUBA.—A correspondent of the New York Herald writing from Matanzas, under date of March 21st, says:

Before this island can be annexed to the Union, war, with horrors hardly ever dreamed of, will leave it a waste. The number of troops now on the island amounts to over 25,000, and this number is daily increased by new levies from Spain. They are well clothed and fed, and in the highest state of discipline. During the last three months, they have been, and are still practising "Guerrilla warfare." The marine has been increased by additions from Spain. The foils, castles and defences have been put in order, the troops in the interior have been ordered to the coast, and paixan shell guns have been, to a large number, added to the already well prepared defences. There is a large number of natives of old Spain scattered throughout the island; every town, village and hamlet contains its quota and they are mostly men accustomed to the use of arms. These men hate the Creoles or Cubans, with an intensity beyond belief. This deep hatred pervades both parties, throughout all grades and all ranks. These old Spaniards have declared that, should an expedition come from the United States, their first act would be to arm the negroes, even if they should perish all together. The Creoles, generally, are in favor of annexation, but the old Spaniards would lose their last drop of blood in maintaining their sway over this island, the last remnant of their once great American possessions. It is their California—their Dorado—everything, without which they would be nothing. Every two or three years, swarms of office-holders arrive here from Spain, and in a few years return in affluence; and about six millions are annually drawn from this island to support the mother country.

If we are to be annexed, it must be peaceably; if by force, England and France, I think, would have to interfere. English capitalists have about thirty millions or more invested in this island, which would be every cent lost, in case of civil war.

If annexation could be brought about by acts of the pen, instead of the sword, it would be to us a great blessing. Our bays would then be crowded with vessels, instead of being, as some now are, entirely deserted. Our beautiful island would be crossed in every direction by railroads; towns would spring up where there but a few palm-leaf huts. The great resources of our splendid plantations would then be fully developed, and our commerce would then be increased in a tenfold degree. These These are a few of the great blessings which we think, would result from annexation. But it must be done by diplomacy. If force be employed, this beautiful island will become another San Domingo.

SALT AND EMIGRANTS.—By the arrival a New Orleans on the 22d ult., of several ships from Liverpool, the large number of 1,319 emigrants and 33,500 sacks of salt were brought to that port.

MRS. PARTINGTON'S LAST.—"I verily believe," exclaimed the old lady, "that all those bills they talk about in Congress, are counterfeit they are so hard to pass.

A MAMMOTH CAVE.—The citizens of Dane Co., Wisconsin are all at fever-heat relative to the discoveries made by an exploring party, who after five days journeying in a cave in that county, returned, laden with some extravagant stories and a few specimens of silver and lead. According to their account of the matter, it is a perfect cabinet of wealth and wonders.

SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY.—A quotation from the Pacific News, says: we hear from a friend, that travel towards the southern mines is increasing daily, and the prospects of that region for the coming season are more flattering than last year. New placers are discovered as explorations are made by our adventurous citizens, and new towns laid out as population increases. Stockton is said to be growing rapidly, and business is becoming brisk as the road to the mines become passable. The new city of San Joaquin, of which we have before spoken favorably, is increasing with magic speed, and will become this season a town of great importance and extensive trade. We know of no new city in the Valley or State, that is more advantageously situated on high and beautiful ground, or one which offers a greater inducement for profitable investment.

"If you ever marry," said a Roman Consul to his son, "let it be to a woman who has judgment enough to superintend the getting of a meal of victuals—taste enough to dress herself—pride enough to wash her face before breakfast, and sense enough to hold her toungue when she has nothing to say.

KISS COTILLONS.—The editor of the Windsor Journal learns that the Professors of Dancing in New York, have recently introduced a new style of cotillon, called the "Kiss Cotillon," the peculiar feature of which is, that you kiss the lady as you swing corners.

"Remember me!"—Dear girl, in vain
May you repeat those words again;
For I, while you and I are two,
Shall always be for getting you.

BRAVO! JENNY LIND!—Jenny Lind was offered some thirty thousand pounds to sing at the Imperial concerts at the court of Russia. Jenny's significant negative to the offer was—"Hungary!"

If the spring puts forth no blossoms, in summer there will be no beauty, and in the autumn no fruit. So if youth be trifled away without improvement, ripe years will be contemptible, and old age miserable.

At the gate which suspicion enters, love goes out.

Some persons are capable of making sacrifices, but few are capable of concealing how much the effort has cost them; and it is this concealment that constitutes their value.

It is merit and not title, which give importance. It is usefulness and not grandeur, which makes the world happy.

COUNCIL BLUFFS FERRY,

Across the Missouri River.

THIS Ferry chartered by the Legislature of the State of Iowa, and licensed by the Superintendant of Indian affairs, has been in successful operation for the last year. We are now prepared with good boats and experienced watermen to cross emigrants with safety and despatch. The location and facilities of this crossing are too well known to require a description at our hands. The fact of its being under the eye of the Agent and approved by the Indians to whom we make Semi-Annual payments for the privilege of having a road through their country, ensures their good will towards the Emigrants. The North side of Platte river is now acknowledged to be the Healthiest, Nearest and Best route to the gold mines. We can cross at Council Bluffs, one hundred or more teams per day having three good boats.

Minutes of the General Conference, held at Great Salt Lake City, Deseret, April 6th, 1850.

Present of the First Presidency—Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards.

Patriarch—John Smith.

Of the Twelve Apostles—P. P. Pratt, G. A. Smith, E. T. Benson.

Presidency of the Seventies—Levi W. Hancock, Zera Pulsipher, Henry Herriman, A. P. Rockwood.

Presidency of the Stake—Daniel Spencer, David Fullmer Willard Snow.

High Priests Quorum—John Young, R. Cahoon.

Presiding Bishop—Newel K. Whitney.

Clerk of Conference—Thomas Bullock.

The Conference was called to order by Elder David Fullmer. The choir sung a hymn. Prayer by Elder Fullmer, and singing.

Elder P. P. Pratt then arose to present the business of the day, and without any preliminaries, on motion, President Brigham Young was sustained as the first President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, by unanimous vote, and also Heber C. Kimball, as first, and Willard Richards, as second Counsellor to President Young.

Moved that John Smith be sustained as Patriarch of the whole Church; carried.

Moved that Orson Hyde be the President of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles; carried; also P. P. Pratt, Orson Pratt, Wilford Woodruff, John Taylor, George A. Smith, Amasa Lyman, E. T. Benson, Charles C. Rich, Lorenzo Snow, Erastus Snow, and Franklin D. Richards, as members of the same; carried.

Moved that Willard Richards, be sustained as Historian, and General Church Recorder; carried.

Moved that John Young, be sustained as the President of the High Priests' Quorum, also Reynolds Cahoon, and George B. Wallace as his Counsellors; carried.

Moved that Joseph Young, be sustained as the first President, Levi W. Hancock second, Henry Herriman third, Zera Pulsifer fourth, A. P. Rockwood fifth, Benjamin L. Clapp sixth, and Jedediah M. Grant seventh, Presidents of all the Quorums of the Seventies; carried.

Moved that Daniel Spencer be sustained as the President of this stake of Zion, also David Fullmore and Willard Snow as his Counsellors; carried Moved that Henry G. Sherwood be sustained as President of the High Council, and Eleazer Miller, John Kempton, Heman Hyde, Lewis Abott, W. W. Major, Levi Jackman, Elisha H. Groves, Ira Eldredge, John Vance, Edwin D. Wooley and Thomas Grover, members of said Council; carried.

Moved that Newel K. Whitney be sustained as the Presiding Bishop of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; carried.

On motion, John Neibeker was sustained as President of the Elder's Quorum, also James H. Smith and Aaron Sceva his Counsellors.

On motion, Joseph Harker was sustained as President of the Priest's Quorum, also Simeon Howd and James A. Chesney, his Counsellors.

On motion, McGee Harris was sustained as President of the Teacher's Quorum, also John Vance and Reuben Perkins his Counsellors.

On motion, Wm. C. Smithson was sustained as President of the Deacon's Quorum, also Gehiel McConnell and Gilburd Summe his Counsellors.

Elder Pratt remarked that all are in duty bound, in covenant before God, to sustain these several men in their offices, and those who refuse to support them will be found breaking their covenants.

President Heber C. Kimball preached a long and faithful discourse on the present situation of the Saints, comparing it with our former persecutions, drivings, sickness and poverty; he exhorted the Saints to faithfulness, and to be obedient to the counsel of these men, whom we have this day covenanted to obey; warned them of the danger of falling into the ways of the world, worshiping the God of Mammon, and forsaking the God of their salvation; exhorted them to faithfulness over our mortal bodies, that we may be rewarded with immortal bodies in the world to come, and expressed himself decidedly, that every individual may travel faster than they now do, if they will be obedient to what they are told, and concluded by blessing the people, that peace might rest in their hearts forever, and ever, amen.

The choir sung a hymn—Benediction by Elder Benson.

Half past one P. M.

Conference assembled and called to order by Daniel Spencer, choir sung a hymn prayer by Elder Orson Spencer, and singing.

Elder Parley P. Pratt, arose and occupied nearly two hours in bringing to the notice of the Saints, many scenes he had passed through, on the first establishment of this church on the earth, and several visible manifestations of the Providence of God, in the various movements of this Church for the past twenty years and of the manner in which they have been sustained. Enquired, for what purpose is this advancement of knowledge? to qualify the Saints for the great and marvelous work, the restoration of the whole house of Israel; and showed examples, from among the Jews and Lamanites. He showed clearly that the scriptures had done him a great deal of good, and when he read them he wished to emulate the examples of Joseph, David and Sampson. He rejoiced in reading the doctrines and teachings of our Lord Jesus Christ, and completely refuted the doctrine as taught by Moses Martin, that the five senses were the counsellors of man. He said the great book of Nature has been open in all its sublime grandeur to the Utes, Shoshones and other Indians, and they had the five senses to lead them; compared their low situation with those who were cleanly and industrious, and who believe in the divine oracles of God; he exhorted the Saints to teach their children faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, repentance towards God, that they might be prepared to be baptized when eight years old; and exhorted them to meet often, and partake of the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of our Lord and Savior.

Many persons are very anxious to hear preaching about the resurrection; he said he had not the keys of the resurrection, but he knew what was written about it, as he had been searching diligently for the last twenty years, and as he now sees more light upon it, he argued that he saw through a glass dimly, but twenty years hence he might have more light upon the subject; some persons have the idea, that when a Saint of God dies, when he rises from the dead he will go among the Gods, and do as they do—but, said he, I have not the idea that a man goes straight into celestial glory, but that he will come on the earth, and improve in the things of God, until he is perfected; he enquired what was the meaning of that scripture, which saith they are sown a mortal, but raised a spiritual body? they are natural, because they die, and it is right to call them spiritual, because they are quickened by the spirit of God; they are temporal, because they belong to things that are temporal; it is time, because the earth has not passed away. When the earth is purified time will be no more; what we call the end of time, is the winding up scene of this earth; it is made new and eternity commences; the earth passes away, and becomes celestialized. It is one thing to remove the curse from the earth, and another to purify it; and there is a great difference in being free from death, pain, and misery; and being restored to the glory and splendor of youth. He exhorted the faithful Saints to read their patriarchial blessings, claim the promises therein, and add all the good things they can think of, and that is not all they will have; for Jesus has promised, that whosoever forsakes father, mother, wife, or children, lands or possessions for his sake, shall receive in this time an hundred fold, and in the worlds to come life eternal. He said that death and resurrection was like going to sleep at night, and waking up in the morning, this opens that scripture which says, "I created all things, first spiritual then temporal; again, first temporal then spiritual; for to myself my work has no beginning or ending." We were firstly spiritual, then fell under the curse; then take a higher temporal degree, and finally a higher spiritual degree; I would like to rise and see things improve, see those mountains leveled, those barren sage plains turn out their pools of water, and all the swords, spears, and gun-barrels gathered into the blacksmith's shop, and made into implements to till the earth; have one thousand years of peace, gather up my poor scattered children, cheer up the hearts of the widow and the fatherless, and say, here is your hundred fold that you have suffered for the gospel's sake, when you were in the latter day on the earth. Not having seen these things twenty years ago, shows me, that I now only see through a glass dimly; but if I had a voice like a trumpet, I would say, repent and prepare for the great restitution of all Israel—Amen.

Choir sung, "Come let us anew."

President Young requested all the High Priests and Elders to meet in the Bowery at five o'clock, P. M., to transact some business with Samuel Russel and Moses Martin.

Half past five o'clock, P. M.

The Elders met, and were called to order by Elder Pratt, after singing a hymn, and prayer by Elder Carter; President Young called for Samuel Russell to come to the Stand and explain some remarks he had made, in regard to his faith in the gospel of salvation, when Russell said; "there may be some points of Mormonism, I believe; but as for believing in the principle of Revelation, as the Latter-day Saints do, I do not. I believe that Joseph Smith was as great a prophet as ever was on the earth; but I have no confidence in the Bible, or the Book of Mormon, or the Book of Revelations, as being revelations from the Almighty. I may have made light of the Holy Ghost; I have asked what was the Holy Ghost? and said that the only time the Holy Ghost was ever seen, was in the form of a pigeon, and it might be that I did ask, if it was good to eat? Gentlemen, I have spoken my sentiments; the brethren have all used me like gentlemen; I might have withdrawn, but did not think it would do any good."

Levi W. Hancock arose and said, I do know that Russell once enjoyed the spirit of God, and he has felt that this was the Church of God. I believe that the man has not prayed, but has been negligent; or he would know that Joseph was a prophet of God, and that Brigham Young is the prophet now. I move that Samuel Russell be cut off from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, seconded by A. P. Rockwood, and carried unanimously.

President B. Young, after some preliminaries said, Mr. Russell has tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, and now to forsake that God who has sustained him, and offered him eternal life, and now to turn away from God, and make light of those things, is detestible to my feelings, (turning to him, he said,) inasmuch as we have severed this branch from the tree, I say unto you, Samuel Russell, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ of Nazareth, you shall feel the heavy hand of God; I deliver you over into the hands of Satan; you have covenanted to serve your God; as you now forsake him, you shall feel the wrath of God, and shall know there is Revelation, and if it does not burn you up, you will wish it would.

I now call up the case of Moses Martin—when he came into the valley a year ago last fall, he had not the spirit of the Lord with him that I could perceive; nothing was said to him, or about him, till last summer, when the Presidents of the Seventies called him in question; they examined his feelings, and I know that he lied in the name of the Lord: I said he was a wicked man: he is. I can prove he is guilty of adultery, and the Doctrine and Covenants says: a man who commits adultery, and does not speedily repent, will lose the spirit of the Lord, and will deny the faith; I would not sustain him were he my own father or brother; a year ago I asked him in Council, Br. Moses, I ask you in the name of the Lord, did you keep yourself virtuous and pure, until you returned to your family? After about five minutes' hesitation, and conversation, he said, yes. He lied, and that too, in the name of the Lord; he is a liar, and I know it; he has always been like a wild bull in the net; I am on hand to prove him guilty of adultery.

President H. C. Kimball moved that Moses Martin be cut off from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, for his wickedness; carried unanimously.

President Young said, there were many going to the mines; he would rather they would stay here and raise grain, and not run after the God of this world—when I see some of the brethren going away, I feel like a mother seeing her darling child in the midst of the ocean, or in the roaring flames. He then requested the mechanics to commence working their labor tithing, and enquired what rate their wages should be; and appointed a meeting of all the mechanics, for the purpose of deciding what should be the standard of wages the coming season.

As I came here this morning—I said to my teams rest—to my family rest; while I go up to worship the Lord, in this comfortable tabernacle, and get the warming influence of His Holy Spirit, that we may be prepared to go to the nations of the earth, and build up the kingdom of our God. If you all felt as I do, you would want to come here, but not hurry to go away again; let us spend a few days and worship; the heavens are full of days, and we have nothing to do but to enjoy them.

Benediction by John Murdock, when the congregation dispersed.

SUNDAY, April 7, 1850.

Conference convened at ten A. M.,—called to order by G. A. Smith.

Choir sung a hymn, prayer by Elder Benson, and singing.

The house was very crowded.

Elder Kimball said he hoped the brethren would begin to find out the inconvenience of building such small houses, and hoped the brethren would build larger, so as to accommodate all who came.

Elder George A. Smith requested the prayers of the Saints, as he did not expect to preach when he came here this morning. The intelligence we receive directly from our Heavenly Father, in answer to prayer, is calculated to guide, direct, and lead us in the path, that we have undertaken to travel. He compared the present improvement, in this valley, to the time when he first entered it as a pioneer, when it was inhabited with innumerable hosts of large black crickets, and a few half-starved Indians; it appeared to him a miracle; ancient history has no parallel to such an undertaking as we accomplished, and is something more than human nature alone could accomplish. God has guided us, and sustained, and guarded us to the present time, and we are now in more prosperous circumstances than ever we were. It is in accordance with the revelations of our Savior Jesus Christ, through the prophet Joseph Smith, that his Saints should be tried in all things. This people has been driven from the State of New York, next from Jackson county, then from Clay; the same persecution drove us from Ohio, and the exterminating order of Governor Boggs drove us from Missouri; we left that State willingly, because we were obliged to, and we had the privilege of settling down in the most sickly, deathly swamps in Illinois, at Nauvoo; the Gentiles rejoiced, for they thought it would surely kill off the Saints; but when we had drained the swamps, and made it healthy, we must be driven from our improvements, and in as miraculous a manner as the children of Israel were delivered from Pharaoh, were we led to this place. When a ship is at sea, running without the danger of shoals, rocks, or shallows, she can ride a boisterous sea in safety; the captain and officers all feel contented, but if a sudden squall rises and takes her in the bows, it would very likely dismast the vessel, or sink her. We have rode through a sea of poverty, sickness, disease and death; but the storm has always been in our rear, and we could sail through it safely; but here there is danger from a heavy head wind. One of my personal friends, Samuel Russell, came to this Stand yesterday, and pronounced himself an unbeliever in the revelations of God; we are now in a situation to be tried by a heavy head wind, and it may dismast some part of the vessel; while we were at school in Kirtland, it was the desire of every elder to qualify himself to be a messenger of peace to all nations, kingdoms, tongues, and people, until the Lord should say it is enough. We have had but little time to preach since then, having been continually broken up, and driven about from place to place, as vagabonds on the earth, which has made us look out a place where we could make our families comfortable for a season; some of those elders now want to make themselves rich; but I do not want to see any man having the Holy Spirit, have his heart set on farms, cattle, or gold. I say, just as soon as by the blessing of the Almighty, and the blessing of my brethren, I can provide a reasonable means of subsistence for my family, I am ready, and my heart beats high, to go and bear this gospel to some people who never heard it, where the gospel never was preached, and where they are in darkness altogether; then I am on hand, and I trust in the Almighty that I may fulfil the work which God requires at my hands. Elders of Israel, and Saints of God, should always consider what they are about! never do a thing, that the spirit of truth suggests is not right! Moses Martin was yesterday disfellowshipped, and I will warrant, that when he put forth his hand to do evil, the still small voice cried out, "Moses, that is not right." Never do a thing that you are not convinced is right; every elder must retain his integrity before the Lord, or they will be damned. Remember the words of the Savior: "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all things shall be added unto you;" consider all that we have, and are, is at the service of the Almighty; and all that we do, to his glory, and in his name, and every thing we put our hands to will prosper; but if we conclude we have suffered enough, and labored enough, and stick stakes as apostates do, that they will go thus far and no farther, they will go down swiftly to destruction, and be eternally ruined. I desire to bear testimony to the truth of this work. This people have got to be cultivated until they are governed by the will of the Almighty, and the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, organized twenty years ago yesterday, is the only true Church, and the only possible way of salvation, and I know it: if a man sacrifices his own talents to his own corruption, he seals himself up to ruin. This is the only Church that will lead you to celestial glory; I know it is so; Joseph has died for it; Hyrum, David, and many others died for it; I know it is the truth. I desire my brethren to treasure these remarks, for I know they are true, and may the Lord God of Hosts preserve us all, until we arrive in the celestial kingdom of God, which is my prayer, even so, amen.

Moved that George Pitkin, Alvarus Hanks, Thomas Tomkins, Julian Moses, and Joseph Buzby, go to the Society Islands, to the assistance of Addison Pratt, and preach the gospel—carried.

Moved that Robert Campbell, John O. Angus and James Works go to England, and preach the gospel, under the direction of the Presidency there; carried.

Moved that Hiram Clark and William D. Huntington, go to California, to assist Amasa Lyman and Charles C. Rich.

Moved that Jessee Molan go to the States on a mission; carried.

Benediction by Daniel Spencer.

Two o'clock, P. M.

Conference again assembled and called to order by Elder Benson, Choir sung a hymn, prayer by E. T. Benson, and singing.

President Young arose and said, with joy and gratitude to my Heavenly Father, I look upon this congregation with admiration; I rejoice to see my brethren and my sisters congregate together to worship the Lord. It is a feast to me to look upon the Saints. It is a joy and gladness to mingle in their society. I feel thankful for the goodly number that are safely landed in the mountains. I look forward to the day when scores of thousands will join us in our secluded retreat. It is a matter of consolation to me to have the privilege of looking at the Saints. I can truly say it is sweeter to me than the honey comb; the greatest luxury I can enjoy, is to associate with those who delight to serve the Lord with all their hearts, and in the midst of all afflictions and privations, we have the privilege that we never before had, of assembling unmolested from our oppressors. I esteem the providences of God as a fresh manifestation of his kindness in removing the Saints to this place, to suffer the wickedness of the wicked to remove us to this place. I hope we will improve on the same; I would be thankful if I could have my feelings satisfied at this Conference; to a certain degree they are, and will be. When I realize what a struggle and labor we have undergone; I would rejoice at the privilege to look at my brethren for days and days. It is a place of happiness to me, the day I have long looked for, to enjoy the privileges now around me. I can truly say ten or fifteen years ago, I looked upon this people with an expectation that every man and woman would be worn into the grave, their lives spent in preaching, in watching their houses and protecting their families, before we could enjoy the present privilege. I expected it would be enjoyed by my children, but not by me, I am disappointed: it is all I could have anticipated; my life, my labor, all that I could anticipate eight or ten years ago, is now realized by me. The providences of the Almighty speak volumes to me, and says to Israel, be on the look out: Latter-day Saints be on the watch tower. The providences of God as they are dealt out to the earth speak to us, and should be realized as peals of thunder, that the Lord will cut short his work in righteousness, for a short work will he do on the earth.

I can say to all Israel, it is time we should awake from our lethargy, from our drowsy and sleepy feelings; awake to righteousness, and hasten the work that is upon us, for in a day and hour that we are not aware of, behold the Son of man cometh, as fast as the wheels of time roll round, to bring calamities, famine, fire, pestilence, sword, and the destroyer that walks abroad at noon day, or at midnight, and lays waste its thousands; nations are revolutionized, kingdoms are tottering and falling; a whole world is in commotion, what can we say? I can say, watch! watch! brethren! and be faithful! When I came here yesterday morning, my feelings were peculiar; I realized that for years we had been deprived of such a privilege to meet together to worship the Lord; this is the most comfortable place I have ever seen for the Saints to hold their meetings in at our gathering place: when I have been abroad in the world, we have had splendid halls, but at the gathering place, this is the best. What next brethren? some think I will go to conference, but if I do, I cannot stay there: I must go to the Kanyons or hunt my cattle; I would like to go to conference but I want to plough my lot, or fence my field, or go to mill, or to my farm. This I feel, I felt it yesterday. I have the same cares that other men have, the care of my family, my daily labor is upon me, my business is before me, but I said to my flocks and herds and teams, now rest; workmen stop your business, all hands; my family prepare to entertain those who call upon us, do the best you can, prepare the best to feed them with; and to all around me I said rest, while I go and worship the Lord; it has been a great struggle, like two immense armies contending; the enemy of all righteousness contending by storms and thunder, that we should not prepare a place to meet; we have been fighting and struggling for years. I recollect four years last February, we left Nauvoo; from that time to this we have been struggling to build a place to assemble in, we were thwarted in getting a Council House, we have not got it yet; we have been two winters idle, and some of the elders have forgotten there is a God, they have forgotten their covenants, their vows, and their prayers, they have forgotten what they once remembered, as the first and foremost in their hearts. I will draw cuts with any man who would go and plough to morrow, which grows the most wheat, by staying here to-morrow and getting our hearts warmed, or go ploughing; I have seen it tried, and proved, that when the Lord requires any thing of his Saints, and they do it, he can give the increase better, than if they served themselves; there is not the first man who has gained the first picayune by going to a Kanyon on Sunday, or by laboring on the Sabbath day; necessity does not drive a man to do it, no such thing, but it is their own dispositions, and the spirit that is in them. There is no more necessity to go to the Kanyons or hunt your cattle on the Sabbath day, you might as well plough; but some feel that they cannot spend time on a week day. We have tried it in traveling since we left Nauvoo, and not one time having traveled on the Sabbath day have we gained by it, but we have lost a day or two the next week to pay for it. What is the harm? It proves that you treat lightly the rules of the God of nature, the God we serve. The Lord that organized the elements knows what they can endure, he said to man, when you have labored six days, rest one, to refresh your bodies; let your horses and cattle that labor rest, your men and women, let them rest; I don't mean to rest like Christians, ride ten miles to a meeting, and then ride twenty-five miles for pleasure; but I mean a Saints Sabbath: there is not a nation or a people that keep the Sabbath, not a christian from the Pope to the latest reformer, there is not one who keep it, no not one, unless sick, if there is one it is by mistake or by accident. Now you gain nothing by transforming the ordinances of nature to your own desires; let them all rest, and when the earth has brought forth six years let it rest the seventh; you will not make any thing by transgressing any rule of the God of nature, and if our eastern neighbors had done so, their land would have been as good as when they first saw it. I would as soon rest a whole week and let every thing rest a week; for have we not worked more than six Sabbaths? If we tarry a whole week, it would not pay the debt, and the God of nature will bring it all back again. If I hurry this Conference, I have got to hurry every business transaction and every speech, and then the spirit would not abide with us. I want you to feel as I feel, stay right here and spend a week in Conference if necessary! A great many persons feel that they are so poor they have to go to the gold mines, they will be in such a hurry they will forget to pray; another cannot spend a week-day to go after wood or hunt his cattle, you can see the example, poor they are and poor they will be, and by and by they will wake up in hell. It is not a polite expression, but it is true doctrine, they will go down to hell proverty stricken and naked; are those who go to meeting every Sabbath going to get rich? not just yet! they will have more wheat, you may take economy and rest on the seventh day, and he will be the best off. I am not going to desire anything but the will of my Father in Heaven; if my Father makes me rich I will be contented, and if I am poor I will be contented still, and I will be content with all good men and good people. It is disgusting to me to see a person love this world in its present organization; look at kings on their thrones, their crowns fall at their feet, their almighty dollars do them no good, their wealth and opulence are gone, nation after nation are dethroned and crumble to ashes. Take the very youth of beauty; it is laid low in the grave!—Riches take the wings of the morning and fly away; it is beneath the heart of a man who loves God and His spirit.

I wish the brethren to listen to the principles this morning set forth on speculation, and their daily walk, we are here and it is our duty to sustain ourselves in this place and also, those who will come to us;—we have a duty to perform to our brethren; we are under holy christian covenants to assist our brethren who are left in the States, until they are gathered here; remember the poor who are yet in bondage and say what we can do for our poor brethren this season; it is one of the most important things that we can do, to raise grain to sustain ourselves and those who come here.

I have a few words to say on Mormonism as it is called, but to us, the doctrine of salvation; I can say I know it is true. I have known for years and years that Joseph was a prophet. I did not embrace Mormonism because I hoped it was true, but because it was that principle that would save all the human family, that would obey it, and it would make them righteous. Joseph Smith lived and died a prophet, and sealed his testimony with his blood; he lived a good man, and died a good man, and he was as good a man as ever lived, and the voice of the Lord is still heard for this people; for myself I am here just as I was in the days of Joseph. I never pretended to be Joseph Smith. I am not the man that brought forth the Book of Mormon, but I do testify to the truth of it. I am an apostle to bear testimony to the Gentiles of this last dispensation, and also to the Jews. I can say the heart of man is always eager for something, just like little children, we often see children when they have been feasted on pumpkin pie and sweet cake and other good things, eat until they are filled with pain and cry for more. The Elders have had so much revelation that it has put them in pain because they did not know how to digest it, and yet they cry for more. You live and see the time that kings and prophets have desired to see, but have died without the sight. It is your privilege, and it is mine, to receive revelation, and my privilege to dictate the church. Here are a cloud of witnesses from the death of Joseph to the return of the Twelve to Nauvoo, all things have been dictated by the Twelve with your humble servant at their head; could it have been bettered? was this people or any other people ever led, fed, or administered to more kindly and faithfully than this people have been by the Twelve and those who helped them? no! not even in the days of Joseph! From the day that I was baptized until this present time, I have felt as if I was in another world, in another existence. I never look back upon the old world but it is like looking into Hell. I have only one desire, and that is to do the will of my God, and that is all the will I ever had. I do chastise my brethren, find fault with them, and give them counsel, but the counsel I give, let any one say it is not right; I am at the defiance of any one to say I have not told them just right.

Next thing! Just as soon as any of the Twelve become dissatisfied, they lop off, they have not the boldness to go to the Council and say "good bye, I am going to hell my own road;" no not even John E. Page! I remember once at the commencement of this church, a necromancer embraced it, but he could not be satisfied, he came and said he had fingered and handled the perverted priesthood so much, the course I have taken is downwards, the devil hast too fast hold of me, I cannot go with you: but the rest slide off.

Let me tell you it is the truth of the Lord God Almighty, and if a man will not do right, God will remove him out of his place forthwith.

I never was afraid of Joseph, although many would falter and feared Joseph would go astray. I did not serve Joseph, but I pattern after the doctrine the Lord has revealed through him! There was no possibility of Joseph leading the people astray! If I thought God would suffer a man to lead a righteous people astray, I would not serve him, I would leave him and seek another; I serve the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and Jacob, the God of our fathers; he has called Joseph and will never let him lead this people astray, but when he has done his work he will take him to himself. I never was afraid of my friends! and you need not be; the Lord Almighty will never suffer his people to go astray unless they as a people want to follow iniquity, never! no never! no never!

Do you know the word of the Lord when you hear it? It is the will of the Lord that he wants his people to do! As for revelation, some say it has ceased; it has no such thing! I could give you revelation as fast as a man could run, I am in the midst of revelation! Do you want more revelation written! wait till you obey what is already written.

The last two years of Joseph's life, Joseph laid out as much work as we can do for twenty years. I have no disposition to seek for more, until I see those we have, obeyed. I tell you one thing, if we obey the word of the Lord, this people have got to quit drinking whisky, and leave of using so much tobacco, tea and coffee. It is not religion to spend our time in light visits, or squandering your time as many have. When I look at the world and hear the blasts of the Devil, I say blow away. I trust that I shall live to accomplish my designs of fighting the Devil, and if I do not live, there are other men who will step into my place who are just as good for a hang on, as I am, or Joseph was.

My feelings are the same as they were when I was baptized, to do the will of my God! When we have the spirit of the Lord, we work together in oneness, and we shall accomplish the design sooner or later. Joseph used to say, "do not be scared, I have not apostatized yet!" and he did not! I say brethren I have not apostatized! and there are a good many who have not! We have got to gather Israel, and see the redemption of Israel, and if do not live to accomplish it, I shall come back to enjoy it. I say come on ye Elders of Israel and preach the mysteries of the Kingdom. When a principle comes to your understanding, it is no more a mystery, but behold the mystery has flown and all things are easy to be comprehended; all is simple, all is childlike, and all is Godlike.

Moved that Claudius Spencer take a mission to England; carried.

Moved that Simeon A. Dunn and Uriah B. Powell go to the Society Islands; carried.

The Band played a lively tune.

President H. C. Kimball inquired if it was the feelings of the people to continue the Conference another day, it was his feelings, that we should stay here a few days. On motion the Conference continues another day; carried.

The Choir sung a hymn. Benediction by G. A. Smith.

Monday, April 8th, 10 A. M.,

Conference met pursuant to adjournment. Choir sung a hymn, prayer by W. W. Phelps, and singing.

Moved that Isaac C. Haight, Moses Clawson, Appleton M. Harmon, Jesse Crosby, and William Burton, go on missions to England to preach the Gospel; carried.

Moved that Jonathan Crosby go on a mission to the Society Islands, and James Bay to Ohio; carried.

President Kimball gave them some instruction, and advised all the elders when they start on missions, to leave their families at home, and then their minds will be more free to serve the Lord.

A great deal of local business was attended to, and instructions given on various duties.

Afterwards President Young gave some instruction on the law of tithing. The Lord himself instituted the principle through Joseph the Prophet, and that is for all the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, to pay one tenth of all they have, to begin with, and afterwards one tenth of their increase. After making some further observation, he said we want to build a large house and farm to place the poor on, as soon as they arrive here. We want only your tenth. I ask not that of my brethren, but what I am willing to give myself; and what I do as your leader, or president, you should be willing to do the same.

We want to build a large store house, and I trust I shall see the day, when we want a few teams or a few thousand bushels of grain, to send to the relief of the poor; all we shall have to do will be to go to the store house of the Lord, without calling on the brethren to contribute. We shall yet see the day that we have not a poor person in our midst and the invalids and indigent persons will be in a comfortable situation for food and raiment, &c.

He then made a few remarks on the subject of mesmerism, and witchcraft in the days of old, showing that the power of the mesmerizers are perfectly harmless to the faithful elders of Israel.

Elder G. A. Smith made some remarks on the severity of the weather in the mountains in the fall of the year, and the prospect of sending forth a great number of Elders; and in order to avoid a great deal of suffering by them, passing through the mountains. He moved that we adjourn this conference to the first Friday in September, then to meet at the Bowery, in Great Salt Lake City, at 10 A. M.; carried unanimously.

The Band played a lively tune.

Benediction by Elder David Fullmer, when the conference was adjourned by President Young, blessing the people in the name of the Lord.

THOMAS BULLOCK.
Clerk of Conference.

The Cuba Business.

A telegraphic despatch from Washington states the expectation that a proclamation will shortly appear that Sir Henry Bulwer has had a conference with Mr. Secretary Clayton, in which it is stated that there is a secret treaty between Spain and England, which will require the latter to interfere, even if the Island is liberated. It is apprehended that this will lead to a blockade of the whole coast by England, and that some chance of a collision with the American flag will end in war. It is supposed that this business will hurry on the compromise with the north, while the south will go for delay. — [Baltimore Clipper.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE, 26, 1850.

Counsel.

We would advise and recommend our friends to sow all the wheat they can from the 15th of August to the 15th of September. Fall wheat is generally a sure and certain crop in this country. Break up the prairie in June and July—set the drags in operation in the fore part of August and break down the rough and uneven places, and let a mould soft and mellow be formed on the top, then sow on your wheat and drag or harrow it in and you will be pretty certain to reap an hundred fold.

Cut and put up all the hay you can, from the 4th day of July to the 15th day of September. The prairies abound with it; and do not forget that it was worth twenty dollars per ton last year. Save all your corn fodder before frost, if consistent. Secure your crops in the best possible manner from rain, and from the depredations of animals. Let there be schools established in every branch of the Church, if in any way consistent. Employ the best teachers you can get, either male or female. The High Council will direct the affairs of the Church in our absence. The Bishop and his Counsellors will attend to the temporal concerns of the Church under the direction of the High Council; and Elder Lyman Stoddard will attend to the spiritual affairs of the same under the superintendance of that body. The High Council will continue to meet on every other Saturday to attend to all necessary business, and to review the condition and affairs of the Church.

Brs. Mackintosh and Gooch will conduct the Guardian while we are gone on a visit to the Valley, and to sit in counsel with our friends there. It is expected that the Saints will go diligently to work and mind their own business,—get the general tenor of advice from the High Council, and fill up the little vacancies by their own good judgment, and spend their time more in prayer and in thanksgiving and watchfulness, than in seeking counsel of the President—which, when they get, they too often violate.

With regard to politics we would say: attend punctually to your duty as American citizens on this important question. You will not forget that some poor silly tools,—hirelings of a dominant and oppressive party, charged us with selling the Mormon vote, and sought to turn you away from the counsel of your legitimate adviser. After bearing this false and wicked testimony, they salute us with the appellation of brother! Poor, miserable tools. They have neither the honor or manhood to apologise for their statements; and yet possess hypocrisy enough to say Br. Hyde. If such characters only knew with what sublime contempt we regarded them, they would enter their temple, (a grog-shop) and "go no more out;" but worship their always.

You will remember that your votes have been cast out, and that every device and stratagem have been resorted to by the party in power to disfranchise you. You are called "aliens"—you are styled "roving gipsies:" In short, you are styled every thing that is base and dishonorable. Remember that the President of a Locofoco Senate, proposed to head a mob once and drive us away when we were poor, hungry, naked, and not a place to lay our head. While, therefore, we cherish no hostility to the Locofoco party, we do cherish a deep sympathy for our Whig friends, who, when the poisoned dagger grasped by the hand of revenge, aimed at our vitals, and ready to be driven by the nerve of vindictive hatred, a voice like one from above, cried: "Stay thy hand." Our Whig friends parried the thrust, and we were not sacrificed. Ye Saints of God, remember this! and return the compliment at the polls, in a manner that becomes you—that witnesses your gratitude, and that proves your devotion to your country's best good. Suffer not yourselves to be diverted from your course by any soft, smooth or plausible words. But remember your God, your country and yourselves. Act like freemen, and carry out your measures with a dignity and an independance that will make sycophants ashamed, and angels proud to own you as brethren.

Mormon Temple at Salt Lake.

Some of our exchanges affirm that a Mormon has declared in their section, that the Mormons at Salt Lake are building a wonderful Temple. They have collected a large amount of gold for that purpose, &c., and are collecting more. It is stated that we believe the gold of California was placed there on purpose to build our Temple. This is a mistake! We calculate to build our temple of agate and carbuncle, and take the gold of California to pave the streets of the city and for cow-bells. Poh! What next?

Salt Lake Mail.

Why is it that men have come through from the Salt Lake by express, and left our mail behind to come by ox teams? Are they so insensible to our interests that our wants are forgotten through an over anxiety to avail themselves of every advantage of trade? We are glad to see all good men supported: and if they are supported, we think they ought, in turn, to strengthen the props that sustain them. Every wise and good man will rise by considering the interests and welfare of others On this principle, he rises no more to fall

Public Documents.

Thanks to Hon. Truman Smith and Hon. Fitz Henry Warren for valuable Public Documents. Annual message, accompanying documents, and the report of the Secretary of War.

Gov. Ujhazy, and suite, from Hungary, left St. Louis on the 12th inst., for their new home in this State.

Emigration.

We feel highly gratified to see our emigrants so well fitted out as they are. They generally have two good yoke of oxen, and from one to three yoke of cows to each wagon. The average freight of each wagon is 1850 pounds. The average amount of bread stuffs to the person, old or young, is one hundred and twenty-five pounds—bacon, sugar, coffee, tea, rice, dried fruit, and other little necessaries in proportion.

To see a people who, three or four years ago, had to sell their all to get bread to last till they could raise it; and now see them with from one to four wagons each, with plenty of good team, thousands of sheep and loose cattle, horses, mules, and machinery of various kinds; wagons all new, and stock all young and thrifty, is gratifying in the extreme.

This people are naturally industrious; necessity has forced them to acquire this habit. Public frown upon a poor miserable lounger in our streets is so severe, that he is compelled to go to work or clear out. This is just as it should be. A lounger should be served as drones are served in the hive, or the vagrant law put in force against them.

It has been our aim continually to encourage industry, and inspire every able person to labor steadily and faithfully, in the most advantageous way, pointing out a field for every man to labor in. And it affords us unbounded satisfaction to behold the result in part. Between seven and eight hundred wagons well fitted out for the mountains, are gone from this point this year. May the Guardian ever continue to encourage industry and economy—to suppress vice and promote virtue—to exalt the honest and industrious,—and to scourge and abase the viscious, the idle, and such as are too short of good and redeeming qualities! And may those who love this stand which the Guardian has taken, subscribe for it themselves, and influence as many others to follow their example as they can. It is true that some have found fault with the strictness of our course, and pronounced us overbearing and tyrannical. But we have this consolation that such as find fault with us, are either idle and wish to live at the expense of others, that are always borrowing, begging, loungin g, and never producing anything useful by their own industry and economy. They can sell whisky, and by it, corrupt the morals of society. They can gather pecuniary strength enough by this foul traffic to become very insolent and saucy, as least some of t hem; they can see every thing but the hook they are swallowing, which, one day, will pull them out of the water, and hold them up in the sun's rays to dry in the sight of all. All men living are now on the stage and are acting their part. Happy is he that chooses that part that will secure to himself the applauses of wise and competent judges!

We received a communication from Elder N. H. Felt at a late hour, which will appear in our next.

It is expected that Elder Hyde will deliver his farewell address on Sunday next in this town, previous to his leaving for the Valley.

Estray Animals.

It has sometimes been the case that people have discovered animals that have strayed from their owners, and they neglect or refuse to give information as to where they can be found, until a reward is offered: then they are ready to turn out and hunt for them and find them. We do not say that some men have driven animals away and secreted them with the hope of getting a reward for finding them. Yet if we should say it, we might not greatly err.

This is only another way of stealing—it is too contemptible and mean to think about. The man who will refuse to give information of his neighbors' horse, ox, cow, mule, or any other animal that may have strayed away, if he knows where the animal is, the reward that he gets by this way of extorting it, shall be a curse on his house until the third generation. It is a crime akin to that of turning a blind man out of the path: And he that will intentionally secrete his neighbor's property with the design of extorting money for the recovery of the same, the people shall curse him, and if he repent and restore not, his name shall perish from the earth.

Learn to do as you would like others to do unto you. Take pains to give all needful information that may benefit your neighbor and that may do him good; and if you get no other reward, you will have the reward of a good conscience, and the assurance that you have done your duty. Let every man show himself kind, generous and noble in all these things, and it will yield the more lasting profit, joy and good-will. Life is made up of little favors and kindnesses, and he that will show the most of them, enjoys the greater portion of life, and a far superior quality.

Pay Attention.

The citizens of Pottawatamie County, and adjacent regions who have lost horses, mules, oxen or cows by the Indians living directly opposite us, on the West side of the Missouri river, are requested to register their names at this office, with the amount and kind of property they have lost, which they know and verily believe the Indians on the West side of the river have stolen.

We feel disposed to make a trial in behalf of the sufferers to have their losses made up. Those who are now residents of the Salt Lake Valley, who have suffered losses by the depredations of the Indians here, are requested to register their names with the kind and amount of property they have lost, at the Secretary's office, Salt Lake City, immediately on receiving this notice. We expect to be the bearer of this request to that country, and to be present to superintend the registry. If property has been stolen by white men, we want no account of that. Maj. John Miller, the former Indian Agent, at Council Bluffs, is very well acquainted with the depredations of the Indians on the property of the citizens of this section of country. Maj. Barrow, the present Agent, also has some knowledge of the history of the past, touching this matter, we presume.

Let no person lay anything to the charge of the Indians except what he has good and substantial reason to believe them guilty of doing. If white men will steal, they must be punished by law, if they can be caught. The owners of the property stolen in such cases can have no claim on the General Government for redress. But where men of other tribes or nations commit depredations upon the property of quiet and peaceable citizens, it is the right of those citizens to ask their government redress for losses, and for protection against future encroachments. There should be a small garrison and military post established on the West side of the river, opposite us, to keep things right. Old Fort Kearney is of little use where it is. It is an unnecessary expense to Government, and does the country no good by way of protection, because it is not where the trouble is.

August Election.

It should not be forgotten that on the 1st Monday of August next, an election for State and County officers, and for a representative in Congress takes place; and it is expected that every legal voter in the country will be found at the polls in good season in his respective precinct: and we think the good sense of this community will not allow them to force their votes upon that party that have resorted to such dishonorable measures to suppress them in a time gone by, and to prove them illegal. Remember that you are called "aliens! foreigners! Not twenty-one years of age!" Will you endorse these sentiments uttered by one of the highest functionaries of the Locofoco party upon the floor of Congress from this State, by giving them your votes? No! not for a moment!! Rally to the standard from whose penant top streams the banner of your protection! When clouds dark and murky gathered thick over you heads, and the east winds bore on their angry pinions the dismal cry of "extermination;" Remember! Yes, remember! that the breath of Whig oratory, and the "grape" shot of truth from the Whig ranks, carried consternation into the lines of the foe. Their nerve was unstrung, and the poor Mormons live to enjoy the sunshine of hope!

In times of prosperity, it is comfortable and pleasing to have friends, though they may not be particularly needed. But in the times of adversity, when wretchedness and woe stare us in the face, when threatened annihilation inspires despair, then the friendly hand held out,—the hand of protection and comfort, is an act that should be forever engraved on the heart of every grateful man. The Whigs extended their fostering hand at the very crisis when it was needed; and we wish our friends to remember this at the polls, when they reach out their hands to cast their votes; and you, who take no particular interest in politics, and often feel that you will not go to an election, we say; turn out and pay a debt of gratitude if no other motive will prompt you!

Legal voters are such as were born in the United States, or foreigners that have been duly naturalized according to law, provided they are not "minors," and are white male citizens who have resided six months in the State, and twenty days in the precinct where they vote next preceding the election. The regular Whig ticket for Candidates for State and County officers, and for a Representative to Congress, will appear in the next Guardian. We hope to be off for the Valley before another issue. Yet "Zion expects every man to do his duty." We hope to return by the 1st of October.

Think of These Things!

When the cares of the world, a little damp weather, or a sluggardly spirit keeps you from public meetings on the Sabbath day, then know that a scourge is preparing by an Almighty hand, to stir you up. Do you think to cheat the Lord by riding out and visiting on Sunday, because you cannot afford to take any other time for it? Suffer us to exhort you, dear friends, to faithfulness and diligence in all your religious duties. Be constant in prayer, in watching, in the assembling of yourselves together on the Lord's day, and at all other suitable times. Partake of the Sacrament as often as consistent, and neglect it not. Refrain from vice, and intemperance. Profane not the holy name by which we are called! do good unto one another: Be kind, forgiving, and generous. As far as is in your power, owe no man any thing but love and good-will. Remember that he whose name is written in heaven, never seeks to evade a just demand: neither seeks to make an unjust one. He that is faithful and true in dollars and cents, which may be called the "unrighteous mammon," is faithful in much: But if he is not faithful and true in this, can he be trusted with things of greater value? It is our unqualified opinion that every honest man will be saved! An honest man is one who will not reject the truth when he hears it. He will not run away and leave his neighbor in debt. If he cannot pay, he will say, "here I am, do with me as you will." This man will see many happier days, have a more honorable and interesting family, more "dodger" to eat, and truer hearts that beat with warmer friendship towards him, than he who meanly defrauds a just and honorable creditor, though he should gain hundreds or thousands by the operation: Wealth gotten by fraud and dishonesty, either takes wings and flies away, or leads its possessor or his children after him into the slough of dishonor and snare of wretchedness; and perhaps both. Instead of watching so diligently to see where you can get the advantage of your neighbor in a trade, suppose you watch with equal diligence to discover some place to benefit him and to do him good, and learn what the final result will be?

How beautiful it is to see all the inhabitants of a place zealous to go to the house of worship on the morning of the first day of the week. The very scene carries conviction to the stranger. But in common or ordinary times, to see men at labor, mechanics shops and stores open, and trade going on, on a Sunday, appears heathenish, selfish and unchristian. In times of emigration and heavy press of business, these things are more or less unavoidable: But when the press and rush are over, these habits are unnecessarily and criminally perpetuated.

When Moses went up upon the mountain to counsel with his Father and his God, Israel made a calf. Who, in Pottawatamie County, will make a calf while your brother and humble servant is gone to the mountains to sit in counsel with his superiors? We shall see!

Remember the Printer.

We shall regard it as a particular favor at this time if our friends who are in arrears will help us a little, and if such as intend to subscribe for the Guardian, will do it now and pay in advance; and if those who have not calculated to subscribe for it, will now alter their calculation and take it, they will help us to meet some liabilities which we have contracted in the shape of loans of money to help some of our merchants off to the Valley with their goods.

We have no fault to find with our subscribers. As a general thing, they cash over at the call, and even before very frequently: but we are now a little inclined towards the "hard up;" and we do not like to owe borrowed money. So we ask you again to subscribe for the Guardian, and we will again swing out clear.

The Mayor of St. Louis has memoralized Congress upon the necessity of some regulations to restrict the number of deck passengers on steamboats; and to require a registry of the passengers to be deposited at New Orleans and another to be brought to the Custom House in St. Louis, so that the law cannot be invaded, and that an accurate list of names may be presented in case of accident to the boat.

Schools.

It is to be hoped that vigorous efforts will be made through the county to establish schools in every neighborhood, with as little delay as possible. It is the positive command of Heaven that schools should be established, and that learning should be sought from the "best books." In vain may parents think to wear a celestial crown, while their representatives, (children) on earth, are suffered to grow up in ignorance.

Any person that will take away or secrete any horse, ox, mule or other animal with the design of extorting a reward for their recovery, shall be cursed and his house until he repents, confesses, and restores four fold: and let all Israel say, Amen!

Franklin H. Ellmore, U. S. Senator, from South Carolina, died last night.

Private Despatches For the Republican.

KEY WEST, May 21

The American steamer Creole, with six hundred men on board, this day ran into Key West, after having landed at Cardenas, in Cuba. She was chased into port by the Spanish man-of-war Pizarro. About fifteen Americans were left on shore, having, it is supposed, went to sleep from excessive fatigue. The people of the Creole made fast their vessel to the wharf, and delivered her and themselves over to the Naval authorities.

The collector has seized the Creole for violation of the revenue laws, and the people have been assigned to the vacant United States barracks for quarters. The Creole has had a very narrow escape; it was their intention to have her blown up rather than be taken. The Captain of the Spanish steamer Pizarro states that he captured the barque and brig which accompanied the Creole, and took possession of the letters and communications containing full plans of the expedition to Cardenas and of other divisions of the expedition, not heard from.

John Lay of the Cuban junta, and editor of the La Verdad, Spanish paper at N. York, was arrested there under an order from Washington, charged with being the supporter and aider of Lopez's expedition.

NEW YORK, June 12, M.

Gen. Lopez arrived at New Orleans on Thursday, and was arrested by the United States' authorities, and held to bail in $1,000 for trial before the United States commissioners. Seventeen of Lopez's men reached Savannah from Key West on Saturday, they express great anxiety to re-enlist in another expedition against Cuba.

The boy executed at Cardenas was named Wm. Kelly, from Cincinnati; he had embarked with the belief of going to California. The steamer Isabel sailed from Havana on Friday and arrived at Charleston yesterday; she reports the prisoners, officers, and crew of Georgiana and S. Loud undergoing trial; the trial was not concluded when the Isabel sailed; it was thought that the Captains of the vessels would be punished and the crew cleared. The United States steamer Saranak arrived at Norfolk yesterday; her commander, Capt. Tatnall, passed through Baltimore this morning for Washington; he left Havana on the 6th; before leaving that city Captain Tatnall received assurance from the Spanish authorities that the prisoners captured by them would be honorably dealt with until advices were received from Washington.

The report that the Saranak had been placed at the disposal of the authorities in Cuba, and that the American Consul had been arrested was entirely without foundation. The persons captured in the late invading expedition were treated with great kindness.

The report of the shooting five prisoners is incorrect. The prisoners are at Havana, and will be sent home.

NAVAL FORCE FOR CUBA—The President's Action.—The Government having ordered the home squadron and several other vessels to Cuba, it becomes interesting to know the amount of the force designated to be sent thither. The Philadelphia Bulletin states as follows:

Saranac, steamer, Capt. Tatnall,	6	guns.
Vixen, steamer, Lt. Com'g Ward,	2	"
Water Witch, steamer, Lt. Com. Totten,	1	"
Raritan, Frigate, Capt. Page,	60	"
Congress " Capt. ——,	60	"
Albany, sloop of war, Commr. Randolph,	24	"
Germantown. do., Com. Lowndes,	24	"
Flirt, schooner, Lt. Com'g. Farrand,	2	"

This is a pretty formidable force, but the Bulletin says:

There will be some delay, however, in getting some of the vessels fitted out. The crew of the Raritan were paid off lately at Norfolk, and she, and perhaps others, will require time to make up their complement. Moreover, this force can only interfere with forces and supplies under the American flag, and the invaders have doubtless been wary enough to sail under some other colors.

A Purse Lost.

Mr. Solon Foster, lost a few days since, in the streets or in some store in this town, a purse containing about twenty dollars cash, some foreign gold and some silver, we believe. Whoever will return said purse and contents at this office will be suitably rewarded.

MARRIED.

At Macedonia Camp, on Sunday, 16th inst., by Elder George Coulson, Mr. JAMES UDY, (late from England,) to Miss ISABELLA ANN COWLEY, both of this County.

Long may this couple in union be blended,
And share of the blessing which from it doth flow;
May VIRTUE, forever, prove their defendant,
And HONOR, sustain them wherever they go.

DIED,

In this town on Wednesday Morning, June 19th, of Cholera, Mrs. HANNAH MARTIN, formerly of Brooklyn, N. Y., and wife of John Martin, aged 33 years.

Also, on board steamer Pocahontas, near Jefferson City, on the 10th ult., LOUISA, twin child of John and Hannah Martin, of St. Louis, aged 3 weeks.

At Kanesville, on the 15th inst., of Diarrhœa and Teething, MARY, daughter of Elijah and Anna B Fordham, aged 1 year 6 months and 15 days.

So fades the lovely blooming flower,
Sweet smiling solace of an hour.

SLOW PROGRESS IN THE METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCHES.—It appears that in 31 Annual Conferences, of the Methodist Protestant Church, as reported at their Quadrennial Conference of the United States, held at Baltimore, the 16th ult., there is a ministerial connection of 1,471, and a membership of 63,303; a comparison with the returns of 1846, shows an increase in four years of only a small fraction over 3,000—not 3 to each minister within the church, or not 4 to each one belonging to the travelling connection. This "astounding fact" which presents an alarming aspect of the state of the church," they attribute "to the failure of the church to carry out the principle of Christ's teaching in reference to the down-trodden race. If you quit quarreling about slavery it will have no effect in regard to the increase of your numbers.

M., of the 1st day of July, 1850, to be decided the same day:

MISSOURI.

No. 4965. From Independence, Missouri, by Fort Kearney, Fort Laramie, Fort Bridger, Fort Smith, Salt Lake, Fort Hall, Fort Boise, Grand Ronde, and The Dalles, to Oregon City, Oregon Territory, 1,900 miles, and back four times a year;

Leave Independence on the 1st day of July, October, January, and April in each year at 6 A. M.;

Arrive at Oregon City in 60 days thereafter by 6 P. M.;

Leave Oregon City on the 1st day of July, October, January, and April in each year at 6. A. M.;

Arrive at Independence in 60 days thereafter by 6 P. M.;

Proposals to carry the mail upon the most direct route from Independence, by Salt Lake, to Oregon City will be considered; also, seperate proposals for so much of the foregoing service, either on the most direct road or by the forts named, as lies between Independence and Salt Lake and between Salt Lake and Oregon City, will be considered; also, for service to Salt Lake and back twelve times a year, leaving Independence and Salt Lake on the first day of each month and arriving at the other end of the route on the last day of same month; and also for eight trips a year.

Proposals to commence the route at Kane, Iowa, or at St. Joseph's, Missouri, instead of Independence, will be considered.

For notes see general advertisement and the following, viz:

FORM FOR A BID

Where no change from advertisement is contemplated by the bidder:

"I (or we, as the case may be) [here write the name or names in full] of [here state the residence or residences] hereby propose to carry the mail on No.——from——to——as often as the advertisement requires, in the time stated in the schedules, and by the following mode of conveyance, to wit: [Here state how it is to be conveyed,] for the annual sum of $——."

Dated

Form of a guaranty to accompany each bid.

"The undersigned [here insert the name of the guarantor or guarantors] guaranties that [here insert the name of the bidder or names of bidders, as the case may be] if his (or their) bid for carrying the mail from——to——be accepted by the Postmaster General, shall enter into an obligation prior to the first day of August next, with good and sufficient sureties, to perform the service proposed."

Dated

Form of certificate.

The undersigned, postmaster of——, certifies that the guarantors above named are sufficient and able to make good their guaranty.

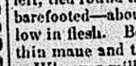
Dated

The bid should be sent under seal, addressed to the First Assistant Postmaster General, with "Mail Proposals in [name the State and Territory,"] written on the face of the letter; and should be despatched in time to be received by or before the 1st day of July next at 10 o'clock A. M. It should be guarantied, and the sufficiency of the guarantors should be duly certified.

A bidder may offer, where the transportation called for in the advertisement is difficult or impracticable at certain seasons, to substitute an inferior mode of conveyance or to intermit service a specified number of days, weeks, or months. He may propose to omit an office that is inaccessible, or is not on the stage road, the railway, or at a steamboat landing, as the case may be; or he may offer to substitute an inferior mode of supply in such cases. He may propose different days and hours of departure and arrival, provided no more running time is asked, and is obvious that no mail connexion or other public accommodation is prejudiced. He may ask for more running time to the trip, during a specified number of days, at certain seasons of peculiar bad roads; but beyond these changes a proposal for service different from the advertisement will prevent its being considered in competition with a regular bid not set aside for extravagance; and where a bid contains any of the above alterations their disadvantages will be estimated in comparing it with other proposals.

J. COLLAMER,
June 26th, 4t. Postmaster General.

STRAYED OR STOLEN.



FROM a pasture field, one a half miles South-west of Kanesville, on the night of the 14th inst. One sorrel horse, about 15 hands high—six years old this spring—racks under the saddle, sorrel mane and tail—barefooted, and had the appearance of never having been shod—some chafed by the collar—had a small lump on the near hind leg between the gumble and pasture joints—had no very distinguished marks: Also one bay mare, bluzed face, the blaze narrow at the top and grew wider down upon the nose, and a part of the nose white—had on a grass rope halter when she left, tied round the neck and round one fore-foot barefooted—about 14 hands high. Both animals low in flesh. Both hind feet of the mare white—thin mane and tail—she was also six years old.

Whoever will return said horses or give information where they can be found, shall be liberally rewarded by the owner. Enquire at this office.

Bill Smith.

This character, notorious for nothing but lying deception, laziness, intemperance and debauchery, has at length come to the end of his chain. Sheen, his faithful ally and co-worker, has turned against him, because he has had a plain manifestation of his villainy and corruption too near his own home. We cannot have much sympathy or charity for Mr. Sheen; for he just as well knew Smith's villany and corruption before as he does now. And when his lying slanders were poured out against the Church without mitigation, Mr. Sheen could then embrace him, and it was Br. William, Br. William, President Smith, &c., &c." But since this, Br. William has invaded his domestic circle, and the fangs of the monster pierced the fountain of his most sensitive feelings, he cries against Br. William! Ah, friend Sheen, remember "poor tray." You recognized this scoundrel as your brother, when he was lying against the church and slandering it; and we recognise him now as your brother, and you as his. And you may thank yourself for the misery you endure.

The following prediction, concerning Bill Smith was published in this paper of February 6th, last. "But we here predict that his influence will be of short duration, and his race will soon be run. He will yet come out and deny his present position, and those who may now be his friends, will become his enemies; and such as support him the strongest now, will turn to be the most potent against him. When these things come to past, then know that he has most wickedly and maliciously lied against those who would rather be his friends than his enemies, if his conduct were such as to merit our friendship."

The following from the Cincinnati "Daily Nonpariel," shows whether Bill's nearest friends have turned against him and published his private and confidential letters.

Wm. Smith—The Imposter.

Eds. Nonpariel: The subjoined letter will show that the statements which the impostor, Wm. Smith, is now circulating concerning me are false, and will in some degree explain the cause of my renunciation of him and his Church. The iniquity spoken of in the letter is a vindication of adultery and fornication by Wm. Smith. He claims that he has authority from God to raise up posterity from other men's wives, and says it will exalt them and their husbands in the eternal world. His repentance is base hypocrisy, which he proves by his late conduct.

ISAAC SHEEN.

Covington, May 20, 1850.

(STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL.)

Shelburn, Lee Co., Ill., April 29, 1850.

Brother Sheen:—Do not let the devil triumph over us now; we have done a good work, and a very small matter would destroy it all. Br. Sheen, I claim protection at your hand; if I have done wrong in any respect I am willing to make restitution to the last farthing. I claim a right of trial according to the law of God face to face; if I have committed an offence show me my error in a christian spirit—not in the spirit of a savage. I can do no more than to offer my body and life as a sacrifice. I shall come to see you—I must have a talk with you. As to the letter you refer to, like many others, it was written with a view of your correcting what was wrong in doctrine. I am not a good scholar, nor am I a good writer. You was appointed my counsellor not to destroy me, but to save me by counsel, and counsel is what I ask of you; and then if I commit an error in judgment I will retrace my steps. Now, Brother Sheen, I ask you in the name of God to hold until I can see you. I will, upon my sacred honor, make all things right.

I was wrong, and confess my error; will you forgive me? I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ I have always esteemed you as an honest man, and have therefore enstrusted you with my affairs and with my letters. I am more inclined than ever to favor your opinion about many things, yet it seems that I must learn by experience, and by the things that I suffer. I wish to do right, when I am made sensible of what is right. * * * Now, Br. Sheen, I ask again, give me a chance for repentance. * * * Do not understand that I justify myself; no, not in the least. * * * Brother Sheen, I want to see you now more than ever. I am determined by the grace of God to set my face against all sin, and do the full works of the law, God being my helper. I will do as I have said in this respect, if it takes my life. Every evil shall go by the board. I am resolved, so give me a chance, and I will do all that is in my power to reconcile your feelings. My letters, Brother Sheen, do not open them, but keep them safe for me. I do not wish that my wife should have the perusal of all my letters. She is easy excited; keep then those things sacred until I come. I hope that none of our difficulty will be named to her; that all may remain in quiet. As to the letter on marriage, I wrote it when I was quite sick, and I wish you to correct the errors, if any, and do it for my good and not for my injury. I can do no more than to offer my life as a sacrifice, which I am willing to do, and claim your protection.

WILLIAM SMITH.

In the Guardian of April 17th last, the following prediction concerning Bill Smith was published. "The Saints shall see and acknowledge that his exertions against Deseret, shall turn to their good, and to his condemnation. Ye wise men at Washington City, mark what we have said; and when it comes to pass, come out to Deseret and see us if you can. We will not butcher you if you will come, but give you our best dodger and smoke the pipe with you. If this should not be convenient remain in Washington City, when our words come to pass if you can."

The following from the Washington Union of May 17th will show if Bill's doings will not recoil upon his own head and condemn him; and whether his exertions against Deseret are not likely to turn in favor of the Salt Lake Mormons. It is our testimony before Heaven and earth that the sayings of this notorious villain against the Salt Lake Mormons, are the product of a malicious and revengful heart. The spirit of falsehood alone has prompted him to do as he has done:

The Mormons.

To the Editors of the Union:

I shall consider myself under particular obligations to you, if you will have the goodness to give a conspicuous place in the Union to the note, of the Hon. Richard H. Stanton, of the House of Representatives, and of the Hon. Joseph R. Underwood, of the United States Senate, and to the accompanying extracts of a letter from Mr. Isaac Sheen, of Kentucky.

Respectfully, yours,
JOHN M. BERNHISEL.

Washington, May 15, 1850.

House of Representatives, May 14, 1850.

Sir: It is proper I should submit to you the enclosed letter from Mr. Isaac Sheen, one of the signers of a petition which I presented to the House at an early part of the present session, remonstrating against the admission of Deseret into the Union, and charging the Mormon population of that Territory with immorality, treason and other crimes. Mr. Sheen, I presume, desires by this recantation to remove all prejudice against the interests of the people of Deseret which may have been produced by that memorial; and I know of no more effectual means of accomplishing his wishes than by publishing so much of his letter as may be necessary to show his withdrawal of the charges and his reasons for doing so. With much respect, your obedient servant,

R. H. STANTON.

Dr. J. M. Bernhisel.

May 14, 1850.

Sir: Having seen a letter from the Hon. R. H. Stanton to yourself, and which you propose to publish, containing an extract of a letter written by Isaac Sheen, I deem it just to the Mormons in Great Salt Lake Valley to state that I have received a letter from Mr. Sheen to the same purport with that addressed by him to Mr. Stanton. You are authorized to publish this statement, should you think proper to do so. Very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,
J. R. UNDERWOOD.

Dr. J. M. Bernhisel.

Covington, Kentucky, May 4, 1850.

Dear Sir: About 5 months since a memorial was sent to your address, signed by William Smith and several others, to which my name was attached, remonstrating against a State organization for the people of Deseret. Now, sir, permit me to say that although I cannot fellowship the religious doctrines of the people resident there, known as Mormons, yet I have become satisfied that there are many false statements in that memorial, and also in the memorial of Wm. Smith and others from Illinois. It was my firm belief at the time that those false statements were based, could be relied on; but I have ascertained that I have been greatly deceived in regard to his veracity. His complaints against the Desert Mormons are unworthy of any attention. I cannot think of troubling you with a detail of all the disclosures which have been made concerning the hypocrisy licentiousness, treachery, deceit, slanders, and lies of William Smith. * * * I find that his accusations against the Deseret Mormons are the ebullitions of a malicious heart, and have been made by him to divert attention from his own outrageous villany and licentiousness. I have been credibly informed that to the memorial which William Smith sent from Illinois he attached the names of persons who never authorized him to do so. I have the honor of being

Your obedient servant,
ISAAC SHEEN.

From California.

New York, June 5th.

The Cherokee from Chagres arrived this afternoon, bringing $1,442,361 in gold dust, and the California mails to 1st May. The news is of a very interesting character.

Mr. Thomas, late mate of the Crescent City, was recently shot by the barkeeper of an hotel at San Francisco.

Trade has assumed a more lively turn, and as the large amount of gold which has been wintered in the mines comes down, it gives an impetus to all kinds of business.

Another great excitement has taken place at Panama. The officers of the Panama steamer Echo, having been robbed by a colored boy, he was arrested; the natives rushed to the rescue and put the party to flight. Next day upon the occasion of the re-arrest of the boy, a fight took place, in which Mr Simpler of New York, was killed—it is reported that five or six of the natives were shot.

All the Americans become highly exasperated, and turned out, and it was only by the utmost exertions of the Governor and of the American Consul, that a general fight was prevented.

The Legislature of California adjourned after passing 143 acts and 17 joint resolutions.

The Alta California says, the str Panama left about the 4th, with 150 passengers and $150,000 in gold dust; this shipment makes up an amount not less than $335,000, forwarded to the Atlantic States since the 1st of March; in other words over $3,500,000 have been shipped in three steamers from this point.

The Tri-weekly Placer Times of Monday last, has the following: John Berry has lately returned from Trinity. He went from here a short time since with a party of 5 men and 7 mules. The trip each way consumed 16 days; he reports gold in the beds and on the bars of the streams, but very fine, requiring the use of quicksilver machines. A great disposition towards the Middle Fork of the American is manifested; some six thousand persons are said to be high up there among the snows, awaiting for the waters to subside to enable them to commence operation.

The whole country is clamorous for the immediate admission of California into the Union.

Some large operations have lately been made in "Gold Run Creek." We saw a gentleman yesterday, who returns on next steamer, who has just sold out a claim to 150 acres along the river for $10,000, he says it is not as high a figure as some other like claims have been disposed of; an 1/8 of the whole brought $10,000.

Washington, Monday Evening.

Official information has been received of the execution of four Americans at Cuba and the imprisonment of between 100 and 200 others. The Spanish authorities refused to the commander of our squadron permission to see the prisoners, or to allow them to be brought home for trial. The frigate Congress, sailed from Cuba to intercept the Spanish vessel containing a number of Americans, taken prisoners on an Island near Yucatan. She was followed by a Spanish man-of-war. Capt. Randolph in command of the Congress, will rescue the Americans, if he can find the vessel before she reaches Cuba.

Despatches have been sent by this government to the Spanish authorities of Cuba, stating that the arrest of any Americans on any other Island will not be recognized nor permitted. These despatches went from here to Mobile this morning, by telegraph.

Colonel Washington, of New Mexico, arrived here on Saturday night, he brings important news to Government from Santa Fe; the boundary question was creating great excitement there; a serious riot recently took place in consequence. The Union of this morning contains the following: "We understand that despatches have been received by Government from our Consul at Havana, stating that he had demanded 105 prisoners taken by the Spanish ship of war on the Island of Contoy; it is a neutral territory, and the men taken there had not been engaged in open hostilities, and were actually considering on abandoning the enterprize and returning to the United States.

The Governor had made no reply to our Consul who had transmitted despatches to Washington, stating the facts, and calling for additional power to second his demands. Despatches were yesterday sent to such portion of our squadron as could be immediately collected at Havana, to assist in pressing the demand. Should the Spanish Government refuse the Consul, he is instructed to inform our Government, and in the meantime, our vessels of war are to obstruct the communication of all vessels with the port. It is reported that two vessels, with reinforcements for Gen. Lopez, which were commissioned to land at different parts of the Islands, are still at sea; their fate and destination is unknown. It is said that in the event of their vessels being captured by Spanish vessels, our own squadron is instructed to demand them of the Spanish commander, and if he does not give them up to seize them by force.

Congressional.

Washington, May 30,—5 P. M.

Senate.—The reading of the journal was dispensed with.

Mr. Butler, of South Carolina rose and announced the death of his colleague Franklin H. Ellmore. Mr. Butler gave a brief sketch of his life and public services and passed a glowing tribute upon his moral and intellectual worth. In conclusion he offered the usual resolutions in a few eloquent remarks in honor of the deceased. Messrs. Yulee, Webster, and Jefferson Davis also delivered tributes to the memory of the deceased.

The resolutions were adopted, and the Senate adjourned to attend the funeral to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

House.—About 12 members met this morning at 8 o'clock, A. M., Mr. Boyd, in the chair. The journal of yesterday having been read, Mr. Jones moved that the House adjourn till to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

Mr. Booth asked the reason of the motion.

Mr. Jones stated, that Franklin H. Ellmore, Senator from South Carolina, having died last night it will be necessary to meet to make arrangements for the funeral.

The motion was carried and the House adjourned.

Washington, May 31—5, P. M.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock, to attend the funeral of Mr. Ellmore, Senator of South Carolina.

The President, members of the cabinet, diplomatic corps, Speaker and members of the House, having entered the chamber, and taken the seats assigned them, the remains were brought in, in charge of the committee of arrangements, followed by a portion of the family and by several friends of the deceased. Among the spectators on the floor of the Senate Chamber, were the young Sandwich Island Princes, dressed in superb court suits, accompanied by Dr. Judd, James Jackson and James Sparrel commissioners and plenipotentiaries from the Hawaiians.

The funeral services were performed by the Rev. R. R. Gurley, Chaplain of the Senate, who, after reading several portions of Scripture and offering an address to the Throne of Grace, delivered a discourse from the 2d chapter of St. Peter, 11th verse: "Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought to be in all holy conversation and godliness." After the benediction, the procession formed in the Rotunda, and the remains were thence conveyed to the Congressional burying ground, where they were deposited in the receiving vault, to await removal.

House.—The House met at 11 o'clock. A message was received from the Senate, announcing the death of Mr. Ellmore.

Mr. Woodward, of South Carolina, delivered a brief and appropriate eulogy on the character of the deceased, and afterwards offered the usual resolutions of respect and condolence. The resolutions were adopted.

The members then proceeded to the floor of the Senate Chamber, to attend the funeral.

May 31—8 P. M.

Senate.—The ceremonies at the burial ground having been concluded, the Senators returned to the Chamber.

The bill to establish a branch mint in New York, and an assaying office in San Francisco, was read three times and passed. A resolution was offered and adopted, requesting the Vice President to notify the Executive of South Carolina of Ellmore's death, and directing the payment to his widow of balances of pay and mileage due the deceased; also authorizing the committee of arrangements to make suitable arrangements for removing the body to South Carolina.

ARRIVAL OF THE AMERICA.

Halifax, June 4—8 A. M.

The American, Capt. Shannon, has just arrived.

England.

From the manufacturing districts the accounts are satisfactory. The news from India and China has had a favorable tendency and has imparted an increased firmness to trade.

The effect of the withdrawal of the French Ambassador, produced a sensible influence on the funds, but they soon rallied. The belief was generally that this movement on the part of France was a mere ruse of the ministry to enable them to carry the new electoral law.

Circulation has been given to an insulting note from Russia, addressed to Lord Palmerston, condemning, in strong terms, the policy of the English Government in relation to the Greek question; the concluding sentence in the note is as follows: "As the manner in which Lord Palmerston understood the protection due to English subjects in foreign countries, carries with it such serious inconvenience, Russia and Austria will not hereafter grant the liberty of residense to English subjects, but on condition of their renouncing the protection of their Government."

Prussia.

An attempt at assassination of the King of Prussia, has created great sensation throughout Europe; the attempt was made at Potsdam, by a sergeant of artillery, who fired a pistol at his Majesty, and inflicted a wound in his arm.

Memphis, May 22.

On Monday night at 8 o'clock, the steamer Constitution, from St. Louis for New Orleans with 8 or 900 tons of freight, consisting of tobacco, flour, corn, bacon, oats, hemp, lead and beef cattle, caught fire at the wharf, and was totally consumed, setting fire to to the wharf boat of Shaw & Co., and ferry boat, which were burned. The fire spread so rapidly that the boat's papers, money, &c., of the Constitution could not be saved. Several persons are supposed to have been burned or drowned; the barkeeper of the Constitution, is the only person missing belonging to the boat. Beyond this all is uncertainty, although it is believed some three or four others perished as they were seen by persons on the wharf, so surrounded by flames as to exclude all hope of their rescue. Out of 50 cattle, nine made their escape to shore The total loss of property cannot fall short of $100,000. The ferry boat was insured for $2000. Shaw & co's, estimated loss, $25,000, insurance $8000. Constitution valued at $25,000, insured $15,000.

Sensible Talk.—The Brooklyn Advertiser is responsible for the following outrageous paragraph:

"Dip the Atlantic dry with a tea-spoon; stop this journal from going ahead—twist your toe into the heel of your boot—make postmasters perform their promises, and make subscribers pay the printer—send up fishing hooks with balloons and fish for stars get aside of a gossamer and chase a comet—when a rain storm is coming down like a cataract of Niagara, remember where you left your umbrella—choke a musquito with a brickbat—in short, prove all things hitherto considered impossible to be possible, but never coax a woman to say she will when she has made up her mind to say she won't!"

Icarian Community.—We learn that the Icarian Community have just received an addition of fifteen new members, consisting of men, women and children, who embarked at Havre on the 19th of last February, on board the "Scargo." It is also stated that a large additional number had embarked at the same port on the 9th of March last, upon the "Callender," and subsequently upon other vessels. The Society has sent an agent into the pineries of the North to contract for or purchase the large beams necessary for the timber-work of the Temple.—Hancock Patriot.

From the Plains.

The Messrs. Robidoux's, who have a trading post near Fort Laramie, arrived in this place on Wednesday evening from the plains. They left their post, which is fifty miles below Fort Laramie, on the 14th of April, but owing to the great scarcity of grass were unable to travel but very a short distance per day, which accounts for the great length of time they were on the plains. They met the first company of emigrants fifty miles this side of Fort Laramie, on the 26th day of April. Their horses were much reduced, there being little or no grass on the plains. A few days after, they met the second company, and every day afterwards met large numbers of the emigrants. They were getting on well, and appeared to enjoy the trip finely. Their general health was good, there being but very few cases of sickness. They heard of only one person who had the small pox, but did not know of a single case of cholera. As an evidence of the general health of the emigrants, they only saw two graves on their return, and one of these the grave of a child.

They counted on their return 9,200 wagons, immediately on the road. They passed a large number of wagons at the different encampments off the road, which they did not include in their count. Taking into consideration the fact that they passed the Independence road where it intersects the St. Joseph road, before the main body of the emigrants had arrived at that point—and not meeting any of the emigrants who left the Bluffs and old Fort Kearney, they traveling on the other side of the Platte — we should not be surprised if nearly seventy-five thousand emigrants are now on the plains, bound for California. There were never less than four men to a wagon, and frequently some wagons contained five, six, and even seven persons. Allowing four men to a wagon, and they met on their return upwards of 36,000 persons, not including the pack mule companies, besides a large number who were encamped off the road.

The Messrs. Robidoux's took charge of a large number of letters from the emigrants

Terrible Steamboat Explosion—Twenty-five Lives Lost — Forty Scalded.

A terrible steamboat accident occurred on Tuesday night, the 28th, May, a few miles below St. Louis at the Quarantine. The fine steamer St. Louis had stopped at Quarantine Island a short time, for the purpose of putting off some passengers, after which she left for St. Louis. She proceeded but a very little distance from the Quarantine landing, when under way, two of the flues of her boiler gave way with a tremendous explosion, permitting the escape of all the steam and boiling water over her lower decks. The persons instantly killed by this scalding steam and water number some ten persons, and it is thought that several more were blown into the river, and jumped overboard, and were drowned.

A great number of persons, mostly deck passengers, are also badly scalded, some of whom will certainly die from the effects of their injuries.

The name of the engineer on duty was George Buchanan.

The two flues of the starboard boiler gave way or collapsed; the inside one being torn away from both ends. A moment before the explosion the engineer had the mud valve raised and was blowing out.

Nine dead bodies were found on the boat after the accident; and it is supposed several more were either killed, and blown into the river, or lost their lives by jumping overboard. The whole number lost is put down at twenty-five.

No cabin passengers were injured, and the boat herself sustained but very little injury beside the collapsing of her flues.

All the Invaders to be Arrested.

A dispatch from Washington, of Monday week, says:

At an informal cabinet meeting, last night, an animated discussion occurred about the Cuban affair.

Orders were despatched to arrest all persons connected with the expedition, as soon as they land upon any part of the United States.

Orders have been transmitted to the United States District Attorneys at Mobile and New Orleans to put the law of 1818 inforce against Gen. Lopez should he make his appearance in those cities.

The fine steamer Missouri, on her way to New Orleans from St. Louis with a heavy cargo, struck a snag at Lake Providence and sunk. There is not much prospect of her being raised. No lives lost.

On the 7th ult., the citizens of Havanna, were dying at the rate of from 180 to 200 per day of Cholera.

Important.—The Queen of England was safely delivered of a Prince on the 1st of May.

They have established a new society in New York, called the American Vegetarian Association. The objects of this Association as set forth in their preamble are as follows:

To induce habits of abstinence from the flesh of animals as food, by the dissemination of information upon the subject, by means of verbal discussions, tracts, essays and lectures, exhibiting the many advantages of a physical, intellectual and moral character, resulting from Vegetarian habits of diet; and thus to secure through the association, example and efforts of its members, for the adoption of a principle which will tend essentially to true Civilization, to universal Brotherhood, and to the increase of human happiness generally.

For the Guardian.

Farwell to Iowa.

BY LAKE W. GALLUP.

Farewell to Iowa, whose scenes are bright and gay,
We now must leave thee far behind;
And soon be far away to spend the joyous day,
In yonder valley to our mind.

We look upon the view, and lingering bid adieu,
To lands that's been our home awhile,
Then turn and move along, the road before us long,
While other things our time beguile.

Reflect upon the past, and to me stand aghast,
For yonder scene of long ago,
Breaks in upon the mind with all its varied kind,
And forms a picture of our woe.

Behold our foes at hand, whose evil deeds will stand,
For as to view so drear and sad,
But while we move along, let us forgive their wrong,
To make the picture scene more glad.

We leave a land behind which will be bourne in mind,
And years to come when far away,
This parting scene now took of home and its last look,
Will be as if 'twas but yesterday.

So must we part from all, to go at nature's call,
Where're we end our journey here,
To find the destined port, beyond this world of sport,
Among our friends forever dear.

We seek a mountain land, with this our little band,
And bid farewell to Iowa,
But yet we'll have to roam, through life to find a home,
Beyond this earthly one of clay.

'Tis soon we move our way rejoicing with the gay,
That have to cross the distant plain,
Leading to Deseret, where we desire to get,
And with the good and virtuous reign.

And now once more adieu, our lands are lost from view,
So when this life on earth is o'er,
May we in pleasure leave for him who shall receive,
The Saints to live forever more.

MISCELLANY.

Make Yourselves.

If there is a man who has any right to be proud, it is he who can stand up before the world and say, "I have made myself." Relying on no influencial friends, on no inherited wealth, on nothing but indomnitable zeal and spotless virtue. He has wended his way from poverty to wealth—from ignorance to knowledge—from obscurity to distinction. Why should he not be proud? But such men are never lifted up by vanity. They are always meek and humble. They are the men who are safe patterns for all to follow. They never forget the pit whence they were taken, the kind hand of Providence which has led them all the way through trial and sorrow up to the present hour.

If you would gain the honors worth possessing—if you would be beloved and respected by all around you, imitate those who, through patience and zeal and inflexible virtue have risen to the seats of distinction. Be not ambitious to get wealth, or to rise for the sake of power—but let your ambition prompt you to deeds of usefulness. In every transaction with mankind, let strict integrity mark your doings. An inordinate love of money often leads men to the performance of mean acts and deeds of which their families and children never hear the last, and which pain their feelings to the close of life. be careful of meanness—of everything that is not perfectly fair, just and honorable. In this way only can you secure a name which unborn generations will repeat with pleasure. —[Boston Olive Branch.

Evidences of Folly.

To attempt to borrow money on the plea of extreme poverty.

To believe that your own relatives are the best friends you will ever meet with.

To ask a publisher of a new periodical how many copies he sells per week.

To make yourself generally disagreeable, and wonder that no one will visit you unless they gain some advantage by it.

To get drunk and complain next morning of the headache.

To judge people's piety by their attendance at church

To keep your clerks on miserable salaries, and wonder at their robbing you.

Not to go to bed when you are tired and sleepy because it is not bed time.

To make your servants tell lies for you, and afterwards be angry because they tell lies for themselves.

To tell your own secrets, and believe that other people will keep them.

To render a man voluntary service, and expect him to be greatful for it.

To give a school boy pocket money and tell him not to spend it.

To buy a child a drum and punish him for beating it.

Queen Victoria is thirty one years old, and has seven children.

WHAT A GENTLEMAN MAY DO, AND WHAT HE MAY NOT DO.—He may carry a brace of partridges, but not a leg of mutton. He may be seen in the Omnibus box at the opera, but not on the box of an Omnibus. He may be seen in a stall inside a theatre, but not at a stall outside one. He may dust another person's jacket, but must not brush his own. He may kill a man in duel, but he must'nt eat peas with his knife. He may thrash a cold beaver, but he must'nt ask twice for soup. He may pay his debts of honor, but he need not trouble himself about his tradesmen's bills. He may drive a stage coach, but he must'nt take or carry coppers. He may ride a horse as a jockey, but he must'nt exert himself in the least to get his living. He must never forget what he owes to himself as a gentleman, but he need not mind what he owes as a gentleman to his tailor. He may do anything, or anybody, in fact, within the range of a gentleman—go through the insolvent debtor's court, or turn billiard marker, but he must never, on any account, carry a brown paper parcel, or appear in the street without a pair of gloves.—[Phil. Bulletin.

The Questions of the Day.

One step, a long one, has been taken in the attempt to adjust the difficulties of the times. The Committee of Thirteen have made their report. Bills have been presented, covering all the topics of agitation.

The particular action of the committee which will call forth the stoutest resistance and warmest debate, is that joining the three bills, already reported to the Senate, for the admission of California and the establishment of territorial governments without the "Wilmot" for New Mexico and Utah. The reception of the report of the committee by the Senate was not so encouraging as was hoped. The extreme men of the South were prompt in denouncing the report and bills, which will probably meet the decided opposition of the ultra North as well.

Whatever preferences men may have for any particular plan of adjustment of all the existing questions of the day, we believe that an immense majority of the people of the United States will receive with gladness any law which promises to give peace and repose to the country. We would have rejoiced to see the platform of the President carried out specifically. We do not admit that there is any serious discrepancy between the principle of that plan and the measures proposed. They both rest on non-interference by Congress with the slavery question. That of the Executive was non-intervention by non-action—a plan requiring a mutual trust and good faith and understanding between the two sections of the Union, that would be a surer guaranty, did it exist, of the peace and happiness of the country than any law; that of the committee is non-intervention with action on the territorial bills.

We repeat what we have often before said, that the settlement was more important than the plan of settlement; that the healing of the body politic was of greater consequence than the remedies employed in its cure; and we shall not therefore permit our partialities for any other scheme of adjustment to interfere with our anxiety to see concord and fellowship restored by such a bill as will achieve that important, nay, necessary result.

Let there be peace in the land. The time has been when bills prepared by a committee embracing the names of gentlemen held in the highest estimation by both parties and every section of the country, would scarcely meet resistance in their passage through Congress. However discouraging the signs of opposition which they encountered upon the threshold of the Senate, we believe that the present Congress will not adjourn before earning the gratitude of the people by reclaiming the concord and fraternity which seem for the time to have fled the land.—[Republic.

ROME.—Great preparations are said to be taken to preserve the Pope from assassination. No person is allowed to approach him except by permission of Cardinal Antineli. Letters state that the Pope, since his return, has drawn up several decrees, which have been supported by the Cardinals. One account states that His Holiness is little less than an Austrian prisoner. His first regiment of French dragoons has left Rome for France.

From California.

New Orleans papers of the 7th inst., received yesterday, giving us the intelligence brought by the Alabama from Chagres. The California dates by her are no later than those received per Empire City, at New York, being to the 1st April.

The subjoined summary from the Alta California of April 1st, gives what additional intelligence was not received in the Telegraphic news per Empire City, which we published on the 8th instant;

A bill for the charter of San Francisco passed the Legislature. The charter will be presented to the people for their adoption or rejection in a few days. In Sacramento City the animosity between the squatter party and owners of real estate has very nearly subsided. Preparations are being made to guard against another overflow by the immediate construction of a levee along the banks of the Sacremento, which it is computed will cost about $200,000. Half of the amount is already subscribed—This place is rapidly increasing in growth and business. Buildings of a fine substantial character are assuming the places of tents and shanties, and there as here, the indications of permanent prosperity are of the broadest stamp.

The mines of the North and South are now accessible, and traveling is much facilitated by the introduction of steamboats on the upper waters of the principal streams. The San Joaquin district contains some of the rarest deposits of gold ever discovered, and these are being worked with great success at the present time. Many large lumps (the largest weighing 23 pounds, now on exhibition in this city) have been found during the winter in this section of the placer. Parties of miners who have visited the most Southerly extreme of the gold discoveries report continued success in digging. The Sacramento district is unfailing in the rich products of mines. Old diggings have been abandoned and new deposits discovered—The heavy winter rains have caused important changes in the various deposits, and will probably have proved an advantage to the miner on this account, when the waters subside. The gold discoveries on Trinity river are currently reported extremely rich, but we have no means of satisfactorily ascertaining the truth of the many stories in circulation.

About the first of the month, an unprincipled class of white settlers attacked the peaceable Indians of Sanoma and Nappa valleys, slaying a large number of both sexes, and forcing the Indian population to flee into the mountains. The provocation of the murderous outrage is alleged to be the death of two or three white men last fall, at the hands of a tribe inhabiting a remote section of that county. The offenders were arrested and placed on board one of the vessels of war at Benicia, to take their trial in a few days. A disturbance between a party of miners and Indians on the Stanislaus occurred a few days since.

Correspondence of the Baltimore Sun.

WASHINGTON, May 13, 1850.

Mr. Clay's Exposition—Statement of the President's Views—Southern Opposition—The Cabinet, &c.

Mr. Clay's exposition of the principles and objects of the report and scheme presented by the committee of thirteen, was listened to with profound attention by a full auditory. Mr. Clay imparted some portion of his own confidence in the success of the scheme, as a whole, to all who heard him. Like Mr. Clay, the public must be willing to await events, without abating one jot of heart or hope.

Mr. Clay has, with candor and earnestness, stated his views as to the result of the defeat of this plan of compromise. He has stated that, in his opinion, if it do not succeed, the country will be involved in agitation and confusion, from which it cannot, soon or easily escape. He has compared this with all other plans which have been presented to the country, and shown that this alone can restore to us the lost pearl of harmony any peace.

The President's plan, as it is called—meaning the policy indicated in the California message of January 21st—he treated with proper respect, but showed its utter insufficiency for the purposes in view—the fulfilment of the high obligations of the government, in the territories acquired from Mexico, and the restoration of harmony at home. Mr. Clay, I imagine, did not speak without authority, when he said that the President, if he were now to state his views, would present a much wider platform.

I learn from the best sources that such is the fact, and that the President anxiously desires an adjustment of the Mexican subject.

When the President wrote the message of the 21st January, he apprehended that the Wilmot proviso would be attached to any territorial bills. It is avowed that he suggested what has been called the non-action policy as to the territories.

Many persons have objected to Mr. Clay's scheme, on the ground that his territorial bills contain a provision which is equivalent to a Wilmot. This objection is founded on a mistake. The bills reported are clean bills. They have no reservations or qualifications on the subject. The impression is taken from one of the resolutions originally offered by Mr. Clay.

Mr. Berrien, though a member of the committee of thirteen, made an elaborate speech in opposition to the scheme, a week ago, upon the ground that the bills reported, as to the territories, expressed, as a reason for omitting the Wilmot, an opinion, or rather a declaration that slavery did not there exist by law, and never could there be legalized. This would be a Wilmot, but it is not in the bill. Yet, still, it is a fact that Southern gentlemen, visitors in this city, have, within the last two days, urged this objection on the authority of Mr. Berrien's speech.

I have the best reason for believing that Gen. Taylor will not invite changes in his Cabinet. If Mr. Crawford should go over—and that is not at all certain—another Georgian will take his place—and thus the unity of the Cabinet will be preserved. An administration that contemplates no future, can stand a good deal of dissatisfaction. If they can please themselves, they need care little for the whig party, and its supposed interests.

RECEIPT FOR MAKING EVERY DAY HAPPY.—When you rise in the morning, form a resolution to make the day a happy one to a fellow creature. It is easily done; a left off garment to the man who needs it; a kind word to the sorrowful; an encouraging expression to the striving; trifles in themselves light as air, will do it, at least for twenty-four hours; and, if you are young, depend upon it, it will tell when you are old; and if you are old, rest assured it will send you gently and happily down the stream of human tide to eternity. By the most simple arithmetical sum, look at the result. You send one person—only one—happily through the day; that is three hundred and sixty-five in the course of the year, and supposing you live forty years only after you commence this course, you have made 14,600 human beings happy, at all events for a time, and this is supposing no relation or friend partakes of the feeling and extends the good. Now, worthy reader, is not this simple? It is too short for a sermon, too homely for ethics, and to easily accomplished for you to say, "I would if I could."

I, think now I see a new fre-ture in this case, as the lawyer said, when his client informed him that he had plenty of money.

Charade.

Six letters do my whole compose,
And four are vowels I'll disclose;
My whole quite plainly doth impart,
A distance neither long nor short;
A monosyllable 'tis true,
Two letters off the word you'll view,
Two syllables it now contains;
A word importing ills and pains;
Four of my first please to transpose,
You'll have a word, of winds and woes.
Now "Charlie" solves these simple lines,
And give the answer quick in rhymes.

OH YES!
The Old Pioneer on the Track Again!

MR. HENRY W. MILLER, well known in this region, as one of the first western men, has joined me as partner; and we have removed our large stock of English Goods,

Imported Direct from Liverpool,

to our new store opposite our late stand; and in addition to the largest and

Best Stock of Hardware and Smallwares

in Kanesville, we have selected some superior lots of

Dry Goods, Iron, Steel, Springs, Axles, Axes and Holloware,

in the St. Louis Market, expressly for the WINTER TRADE, and the necessities of this community.

We have re-marked all our goods and have agreed to sell off our stock—superior in quality though it be—at prices sufficiently low to induce a continuation and increase of our trade; and to remove an influence existing, not altogether without foundation, that some of the goods of the late firm—Brown & Barham were too high,; In a word, we only want to live among you and desire not to enrich ourselves, at your cost, we wish "to spend and be spent," for the good of the cause, which is to us, as to you the greatest and best. Our motto in business, is and shall be

"Small Profits and Quick Returns."

The truthfulness of which you cannot prove unless you come, see and trade with

BROWN & MILLER.

N. B. All accounts due to the late firm—Brown & Barham, will be received, settled and accounted for by THOMAS D. BROWN,

Competition is the life of Business!
NEW GOODS!
A. SORLEY,
St. Joseph, Missouri,

IS now receiving a splendid lot of SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS, of every description, of the Latest Style and Patterns. And is prepared to offer Great Inducements to all who may favor him with a call. His stock comprises a general assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, and Bonnets. Also, a large and well selected assortment of Iron and nails.

My plan is to sell for CASH ONLY, and at a small advance on cost; the rate charged for goods at my store, will contrast largely with prices paid by those who buy on time. Many place an undue importance on the credit system, unmindful of the fact, that constitutes a nominal profit, yet when compared with the invariable cash system it is a positive loss.

Selling on time is hazardous under the best circumstances. Those who sell on time must buy on time. Therefore, I will say to my old customers and the public generally, that you will save much by calling and examining my Stock of Goods before purchasing. A. SORLEY.

The Gathering—Kingdom of God, &c.

BY ELI B. KELSEY.

"Come out of her, O my people."

The subject of the gathering is a great stumbling stone and rock of offence to many who make but a partial investigation of the gospel as revealed through Joseph Smith. "Why (says the objector) cannot God save me as well in my own native lond as in the land of America? Why is it necessary for me to leave the land of my fathers, and take my journey to the western wilds of a far distant continent? Nothing is impossible with God, and he can save me in one place just as well as another." With this consoling reflection they quiet any feeling of uneasiness that may arise in their breasts, from the signs of the times or the declarations of the servants of God. The Lord, no doubt, could do many things that he never will do; and one thing it is quite certain He never will do, and that is, save a man who will not first strive to save himself; by rendering obedience to the principles laid down in the gospel. The doctrine of the gathering has been taught to a greater or less extent, in every dispensation of the gospel that has been given to man. Enoch preached the gathering in his day; all that gave heed unto his teaching were gathered together unto one place, where, no doubt, they united their strength and reared up a temple to the Lord, in which they were instructed in the knowledge of heavenly things, until they obtained such power with God through faith, that they received translation and were thus delivered from the evils that were coming upon the earth, because the inhabitants thereof had rejected the plan of salvation offered them. All flesh had become corrupted before God—the earth groaned and travailed because of the dreadful abominations committed upon the face of it; and that the benevolent purposes of the Lord towards those who loved Him and kept his commandments might be fulfilled—that it might not be with the righteous as with the wicked. Enoch and his city were translated to another and fairer realm, where they could bask in the sunshine of His favor, while at the same time His wrath and indignation was poured out upon the inhabitants of the earth, because they rejected the gospel of the gathering taught by Enoch. At a later date, Noah was sent with a message of warning to the inhabitants of the earth, to make known unto them that the God of heaven had determined to send a flood, that the earth might be baptized with water, and iniquity washed from the face thereof.

Noah's message was a principle of gathering, to a limited extent at least. It is supposed by many that Noah's ark was intended as a means of salvation for all who would give heed to his message and repent of their sins. This is a great mistake. Noah was never commanded to build an ark for the salvation of a single soul, save those of himself and family. God knowing him to be a good man, and one who would do as he was commanded in all things, entrusted to him the salvation of a seed of every species of beast, fowl, and creeping thing; and in the absence of revelation upon the subject, we have every reason to believe that God told him not only to warn his brethren of what was coming on the earth, but to instruct them to gather together and unite their strength and build arks, like unto the pattern shown him, for the salvation of themselves and families. If they would not put sufficient confidence in the message sent them to do this, and thus manifest their faith by their works, they were not worthy of salvation and could not obtain it. I am aware that there are many pious persons who will not receive any revelations but those recorded in the Bible, and who will find fault with the assertion that the inhabitants of Enoch's city accompanied him in his walk with God, and that they were translated with him, from the fact that no mention is made of it in the Bible. If there is no biblical testimony to substantiate the assertion, there is none against it; and we have the most abundant evidence of the fact in the revelations of God given through his servant Joseph. Abraham was commanded to go out from the land of his nativity into a strange land. He did so, and took with him as many as would believe in the message he had received; he thus obtained favor with God, and by continuing in obedience he ultimately obtained the promise that in his seed all nations of the earth should be blessed—that he should be the father of the faithful, and that all who should come into the kingdom of God, from that time forth, should be his children by birth or adoption. Lot fled out of Sodom to obtain salvation when the cities of the plain were destroyed. Israel fled out of Egypt to escape from bondage, and to enjoy the blessings of a land of promise. God stirred up the hearts of Pharaoh and the Egyptians to oppress them with tasks grievious to be borne, that they might be a willing people when the day of his power should come. I might refer to many examples recorded in the scriptures, where the commandment to "come out of her my people" was gladly obeyed and great blessings obtained thereby.

Jesus endeavored to establish the principle of the gathering among the Jews whilst he was with them in the flesh:—"O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not."—Mat. xxiii. 37. We learn from the above, that if the Jews had listened unto JESUS, HE would have set up a standard in Jerusalem, unto which the dispersed of Judah could have gathered, and would have been sheltered under its folds from all evil, as the brood are sheltered under the wings of the hen; and because they would not, a curse was to come upon them, and the HOUSE which they prided themselves so much in having built unto the Lord, should be left desolate. He would no more enter into it:—"Behold, your house is left unto you desolate, as a witness of which the VEIL of the HOLIEST of HOLIES was rent asunder. They were not to behold him again, until they had gathered themselves together, "for I say unto you, ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."—Mat. xxiii.. 39. Having reference to the time, when, having gathered in from their long dispersion, and built up the waste places of Judea, their enemies would come upon them—their city be taken—and their women ravished—to a time when destruction appeared inevitable; then would He come to their rescue, and they be led to rejoice with exceeding great joy, because of the mighty deliverance they would at that time receive. See Zechariah xiv.

The subject of the gathering of Israel in the last days is of the most thrilling interest to every Latter-day Saint, one upon which the ancient Saints delighted to dwell. The future glory of Zion was a theme which called forth strains of poetic eloquence from Isaiah's pen. Jeremiah ceased for a time his mourning and lamentations over Israel's sins, and broke forth in exclamations of joy and gladness. Ezekiel, Daniel, Hosea, and their successors had a view of it given them to comfort and console them after a lengthy vision of the desolation and dire calamities that were to come upon Israel, because of transgressions. Its influence upon their feelings was like that occasioned by the sight of a beautiful oasis in the midst of the desert upon those of the weary traveler.

It has ever been the purpose of the Lord to classify his people and separate them from the wicked and ungodly that he might bring them into such situations as would be favorable for their instruction in principles of righteousness, that they might be goverened by laws of His own enactment, which could not be done were they to remain in a scattered condition, for as the heavens are above the earth, so are the ways of the lord above those of sinful men; as light is opposed to darkness, so are his laws opposed to those of all the wicked kingdoms of the earth. Mankind are much more prone to follow evil than good; of this we have abundant evidence in the conduct of the children of Israel, hence God sought to separate them from every other nation, lest they should partake of their sins, and consequently receive of their plagues. Who is there that cannot see the necessity of such a separation? What affinity hath light with darkness, or the Sons of GOD with those of BELIAL? NONE; therefore they should be separated for the best of all reasons, they cannot live together.

God, at sundry times has endeavored to establish His kingdom upon the earth; in every case it has been thrown down and destroyed. But He has declared by the mouth of the prophet Daniel, that in the last days He would set up (begin) a kingdom upon the earth, which should not be thrown down, neither be given to another people (than His Saints).—See Daniel ii., 44. "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever."

Five things are essentially necessary in the formation of a kingdom, viz.: 1st, SPACE (without which no kingdom can exist); 2nd, A KING; 3d, SUBJECTS; 4th, LAWS for the government of those subjects; 5th, OFFICERS, duly authorized to administer those laws. We find from reading the next verse, that the kingdom spoken of was to take its rise in a mountainous country, "forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it break in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold, the great God hath made known to the King what shall come to pass hereafter; and the dream is certain and the interpretation thereof sure."

Inasmuch as space is essential to the existence of this kingdom, and we have proven that the centre of this space, or at least that portion from whence the kingdom takes its rise is mountainous, it only remains to be proven in what part of the earth's surface this space is situated; to do this, it will be necessary to take into consideration the location of the various kingdoms forming the great image spoken of by Daniel. 1st. The Babylonian Empire, represented by the head of gold. 2d. The Medo Persian Empire. 3d, the Grecian. And the 4th, represented by the legs of iron was the Roman Empire. The feet and toes, part of iron and part of clay, represent the KINGDOMS of modern Europe, into which this last great empire was divided. Hence it appears, that the image lies extended from east to west—the head of gold, and the breast and arms of silver, in Asia. The belly and thighs of brass, extending to the borders of Asia and Europe. The legs of iron, and feet and toes, extending to the western boundaries of Europe. Now the STONE OF KINGDOM spoken of by Daniel, is to smite the image on the feet, to do which it must necessarily come in contact with them from an opposite direction, or from the west. Where will it come from? the midst of the Atlantic Ocean? No; for as before shown, it is to take its rise among mountains, consequently we must of necessity cross to the continent of America in search of it. Now, that the portion of SPACE in which the kingdom is to take its rise has been traced to the American continent, it remains to be proved in what part of that land it is situated. Inasmuch as God is the King or head of the government to be established in the last days, it will only be necessary to prove in what portion of the American continent he will reign, to find where the seat of his kingdom will be.—Micah iv. 7. "And I will make her that halteth, a remnant, and her that was cast off, a strong nation, and the Lord shall reign over them in Mount Zion from henceforth, even forever."

From the above we learn that the name of the capital of His kingdom is to be called Zion. Now let us seek for the location of Zion. "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth is Mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the Great King."—Psalms xlviii. 2. "I will not give sleep to mine eyes, or slumber to mine eyelids, until I find out a place for the Lord, an habitation for the mighty God of Jacob. Lo, we heard of it at Ephratah; we found it in the fields of the wood."—Psalm cxxxii. 4—6 verses. By comparing these passages with those before quoted, we find that Zion is located in the fields of the wood (prairies of the wilderness) in the northern part of America. Indeed we might with propriety consider the Gentile nations of the New World as forming a part of the feet and toes of the image, from the fact that they are the decendants of those inhabiting the kingdoms of modern Europe, and have all the characteristics pointed out by the prophet.—See Daniel ii, 41—44.

The inhabitants of Zion are to be gathered out of all nations—See Jeremiah xxxi. 6, 7 and 8 vers.

"For there shall be a day, that the watchman upon Mount Ephraim shall cry, arise ye, and let us go up to Zion, unto the Lord our God. For thus saith the Lord, sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations; publish, ye, praise ye, and say, O Lord, save thy people, the remnant of Israel, Behold! I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth, and with the blind and the lame; the woman with child and her that travaileth with child together: a great company shall return thither."

Zion is to be the great gathering place for the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh, and the children of Israel their companions, together with as many of the Gentiles as will gather to Zion, and enter with them into a covenant to serve the Lord. They will thus become Israel by adoption, and heirs of the blessings of the literal seed. Jerusalem will also come in remembrance before the Lord, as the great centre of gathering for Judah and the children of Israel his companions. Zechariah ii. 12, "And the Lord shall inherit Judah, his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again."

Judah, by right, held the reigns of government until Shiloh (Jesus) came, when the sceptre departed from him, and he was no longer a lawgiver to Israel—see Gen. xiix. 10,—but after the coming of Shiloh, the sceptre, or the rights and blessings of the first born were to be transferred to Ephraim. Jeremiah xxxi. 9, "For I am a Father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first born." Hence the Law is to go forth from Zion, yet Jerusalem will also be blessed with the presence of God, Micah iv. 2, "And many nations shall come and say, come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his ways and we will walk in his paths; for the LAW shall go forth of ZION, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.

The kingdom of God will continue to increase, while all other kingdoms will decrease. Its ministers will be sent abroad among all nations, with the proclamation that God has appointed a place for the gathering together of the pure in heart, even Zion, and that He has established her as a place of rest for His children, as a secure refuge for His elect.

Where they shall be hid up as in the hollow of His hand, whilst His indignation is being poured out upon the residue of man, kind, who shall reject His offers of mercy contained in the proclamation of the gathering! In the days of Jesus the message of salvation was first delivered to the Jews, and when they had rejected it as a nation it was given to the Gentiles; but in the last days the gospel is to be preached to the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. Until that time all that receive the message of salvation, and gather to Zion, shal become Israel by adoption, and be admitted into the family of God. But when the "times of the Gentiles are fulfilled," they shal be precluded from the rights and blessings of the children of the covenant, and shal become servants to ISRAEL. See Isaiah x, 10—14. "And the sons of strangers shal build up thy walls, and their kings shal minister unto thee; for in my wrath I smite thee, but in my favor have I had mercy on thee. Therefore thy gates shall be open continually: they shall not be shut day nor night, that men may bring unto thee the forces of the Gentiles, and that their kings may be brought. For the nation and king that will not serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted. * * * The sons of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee; and all they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet; and they shall call thee the city of the Lord, the Zion of the Holy One of Israel." When the Gentiles nations shall have rejected the fulness of the gospel, the cup of their iniquity will be full. Then will the Lord make bare His arm in the eyes of all nations, in gathering together the dispersed of Israel, from the four corners of the earth, unto the great centres of gathering for the elect of God, viz—ZION, on the western hemisphere, and JERUSALEM, on the eastern. Then will He pour out of His hot wrath and indignation upon those nations which have oppressed His chosen people, and trodden them under foot for so many generations.

Inasmuch as this article is designed to prove to the honest inquirer after truth that God will establish the kingdom of heaven upon the earth in the last days, no more to be thrown down, and that the subjects of this kingdom are the pure in heart, that will be gathered out from among all nations, it will be well to show that there are certain laws to be obeyed before a person can be permitted to share in the blessings, rights, and privileges of this great and glorious kingdom.

It must be evident to every believer in sacred writ, that all mankind, through their transgressions, have become aliens and foreigners to God, and, consequently, have lost all right to the privileges and blessings of citizenship in His kingdom. All earthly kingdoms have instituted ordinances of adoption, or laws of naturalization, the observance of which is necessary before a foreigner can be admitted to the right of citizenship, thus guarding with jealous care the rights of the natural born citizens.

It is not reasonable to suppose, that God, the greatest of all kings, whose kingdom is the greatest of all kingdoms, and whose blessings of citizenship far exceed those of all other kingdoms, would be equally, yea, far more strict than any earthly king in guarding his kingdom from interlopers and all unworthy persons, by instituting ordinances which would be strict in proportion to the greatness of the blessings to be obtained through their observance; and that He would not leave the administration of those laws a matter of uncertainty, but that He would call and ordain worthy men, whose duty it would be to administer them to all who earnestly sought to be admitted into His kingdom. We have the most abundant evidence in the scriptures that He has done so in all former dispensations. It has been before shown that God has at sundry times endeavored to establish His kingdon upon the earth; therefore, if we can find out what the initiatory ordinances were in those days, it will materially assist us in ascertaining what ordinances are necessary to observe to gain admission into His kingdom in the last days. Jesus himself placed the matter beyond dispute in His day, for when called upon by a celebrated (divine) teacher of Israel for information upon the subject, He made the following sweeping declaration, "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of heaven." See John iii, 5, 6. The Redeemer set an example of obedience to the first ordinance, being baptized by John in Jordan. As the birth of water requires an administrator, so does the birth of the spirit. We find that after the disciples were baptized, or born of water, the apostles laid their hands on them for the gift or birth of the Spirit. But, says one, Jesus did not receive the Holy Spirit through the laying on of the hands. True, for there was no man upon the earth in that day who who was authorized to administer for the gift of the Spirit.

John held the lessor or Aaronic priesthood, but not the higher or Melchisedec, which alone can authorize a man to dispense the spiritual blessings of the kingdom; therefore the Holy Ghost descended in the form of a dove and rested upon Him, and a voice from heaven witnessed that He was acceptped of the Father.

The children of Israel, although heirs according to the covenant made with their fathers, had to yield obedience to these ordinances before they could be admitted into the enjoyment of the blessings of the kingdom of heaven. See 1st Corinthians, x. 1, 2. "Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea." But, says the objector, even admitting that the children of Israel were baptized by immersion, or born of the water, yet we have no account of hands being laid upon them for the birth of the Spirit. Granted, yet their being baptized proves that the initiatory ordinances were in use in the days of Moses as in the days of the Apostles; and it is not at all likely that the great lawgiver of Israel would administer one ordinance and neglect the other; for except they were born of the Spirit, as well as of the water, they could not enter the kingdom of heaven.

Inasmuch as the kingdom God is the only kingdom that will endure forever, no man can obtain an eternal salvation out of it; and Jesus says, no man can enter it without first being born of the water and of the spirit. Since the strict observance of those initiatory ordinances were considered necessary to the salvation of the human family in the days of Jesus and the Apostles, it must be evident to every candid minded person, that as sure as the same great king rules now that ruled then; as sure as in Him there is no variableness nor shadow of turning, so sure will the order of his kingdom remain unchanged—so sure will all its laws and ordinances remain the same. If it was unlawful for any man to take upon himself the honor of administering the ordinances of the kingdom in the days of Paul, without being called and ordained as was Aaron, i. e., by revelation, it must be equally so now.

Saul was cursed, and the kingdom rent from him, because he took upon himself to act the part of a priest at the altar.—1st Samuel xiii. 8—15.

Uzziah, king of Judea, was cursed with leprosy for life, because he sought to offer incense before the Lord without authority.—2 Chron. xvi. 16—21.

Fire came out from before the Lord, and consumed Korah and his company, because their inordinate vanity had led them to assume the high and dignified office of a priest and to seek by subtilty to establish their claim to the priesthood in the minds of the congregation; the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up all that held up their heads for them. The Lord has never shown the least respect whatever for the offerings of such soi-disant priests; but on the contrary, His wrath and indignation has been poured out in times that are past, upon all who have sought to administer in the priestly office without authority. If such was the case, what will become of the thousands of self-appointed uncalled ministers of the nineteenth century. The divines of the present day, deny the doctrine of immediate revelation, and consequently, have no knowledge of God the Father, nor Jesus Christ his Son. For Jesus says, "no man knoweth the Father save he to whom the Son revealeth Him." See Matthew xi. 27. And in the same verse He says, "No man knoweth the Son but the Father." Therefore, no man can know the Son unless the Father reveals Him; at least it was imposible for Peter to know him in any other way. See Matthew xvi. 17. But says the objector, "God revealeth his Son, and the Son revealeth the Father unto the twelve apostles of the ancient church, and they have handed the knowledge down to us through their writings. This is inconsistant; a man may believe in God through the testimony of his fellow man, but he cannot know Him. If the faithful in the days of Jesus could have known Him and His Father through the testimony of Moses and the prophets alone, it would not have been necessary for Peter to have received a new revelation upon the subject, before he could know that Jesus was the Christ.

I have been thus minute in gathering together and combining the testimony of the ancient prophets, with regard to Zion and its location; also the laws and ordinances necessary to be obeyed before mankind can enter upon the enjoyment of the blessings of the kingdom of God, in the hope that this article will come under the notice of some persons who are asking themselves the questions previously set forth.

With the faithful Latter-day Saint, there is no uncertainty, he has the most abundant evidence of the establishment of Zion, and of her subsequent exaltation in power, and great dominion in the revelations of God, given through our martyred Prophet, the divinity of whose mission is witnessed and made sure to his understanding by the testimony of the spirit of truth which he has received through his obedience to the mandates of heaven.

Love is might. It moves the strongest, and softens the hardest heart; it opens a new life in the soul that feels it; it creates anew, and with new beauty, the world within and around us; it arouses in the soul those noble thoughts and energies, that dwell in every heart capable of feeling its enlivening power; it gives one a new and deeper insight into one's own being; so one becomes thus acquainted with the hidden impulses which throb and thrill the mighty heart of humanity.

It is better to be lowly born, and range with humble lives in content, than to be perked up in a glittering grief, and wear a golden sorrow.

Many new years you may see, but happy ones you cannot see without deserving them. These virtue, honor and knowledge none can produce.

The Farmer's Life.

Wm. Gilmore Simms, in his "Father Abbott; or the Home Tourist," thus beautifully represents the life of the farmer;

"The principles of agriculture were simple exceedingly. That they might be made so, God himself was the first great planter. He wrote its laws, visibly, in the brightest, and loveliest, and most intelligible characters everywhere, upon the broad bosom of the liberal earth, in green leaves, in delicate fruits, in beguiling and balmer flowers! But he does not content himself with this alone. He bestows the heritage along with the example. He prepares the garden and the home, before he creates the being who is to possess them. He fills them with all those objects of sense and sentiment which are to supply his moral and physical necessities. Birds sing in the bows above him, odors blossom in the air, and fruits and flowers cover the earth with a glory to which that of Solomon in all its magnificence was vain and valueless. To His hand we owe these fair groves, these tall ranks of majestic trees, these deep forests, these plains covered with verdure, and these mighty arteries of flood and river, which wind among them with the loveliest inequalities, and irrigating them with seasonable fertilization. Thus did the Almighty Planter dedicate the great plantation to the uses of that various and wondrous family which was to follow. His home prepared--supplied with all resources, adorned with every variety variety of fruit and flower, and checkered with abundance—man is conducted within its pleasant limits, and ordained its cultivator under the very eye and sanction of Heaven. The angels of heaven descend upon its hill; God himself appears within its valleys at noonday—its groves are instinct with life and purity, and the blessed stars rise at night, above the celestial mountains, to keep watch over its consecrated interests. Its gorgeous forests, its savannas, its levels and flood and prairie, are surrendered into the hands of the wondrously favored, the new created heir of Heaven! The birds and the beasts are his tributaries, and are taught to obey him. The fowl summons him at morning to his labors, and the evening chaunt of the night-bird summons him to repose. The ox submits his neck to the yoke; the horse moves at his bidding in the plough; and the toils of all are rendered sacred and successful by the gentle showers and the genial sunshine which descends from Heaven to ripen the grain in its season, and to make earth pleasant with its fruits."

The Bible.

The following is an account of the number of books, chapters, verses, words and letters contained in the Old and New Testaments. The calculator is said to have spent three years of his life in forming this table:

OLD TESTAMENT.

Number of books	39
" " chapters,	929
" " verses,	23,214
" " words,	592,439
" " letters,	2,728,100

The middle book is Proverbs.
The middle chapter is Job xxix.
The middle verse would be II Chronicles, xx 17, if there were a verse more, and verse 18 if there were a verse less.
The word and occurs 35,543 times.
The word Jehovah occurs 5,835 times.
The shortest verse is I. Chronicles, i 25.
The 31st verse of the 7th chapter of Ezra, contains all the letters of the alphabet.
The 19th of the II Kings, and the 37th chapter of Isaiah, are alike.

NEW TESTAMENT.

Number of books,	27
" " chapters,	260
" " verses,	7,959
" " words,	181,258
" " letters,	838,380

The middle book is II Thessalonians.
The middle chapter is Romans xiii, if there were a chapter more, and xiv., if there were a chapter less.
The middle verse is Acts xvii. 17.
The shortest verse is John xi. 35.

EDUCATE YOURSELF.—Knowledge is its own exceeding great reward. It is not the gift of a college, particularly. It is what the mind produces whenever it acts. Great schools are chiefly appliances for the lazy, to furnish substitutes for knowledge by which to make their way in the world. A youth who has a noble thirst for science, is not so much benefited by a "liberal education" as as we are apt to imagine he will before trying it. If your parents are rich and have nothing better to do with their money, let them board you at college for four years. But if they are poor, laboring people, stay with them and labor too. But don't the less strive for a liberal education. Be liberal in supplying yourself with books and time. Journey on foot and study nature and men. Ask questions of everybody and everything. Thus doing, you will probably acquire more satisfactory and useful knowledge, and what is more, sounder character and firmer health—you will be more of a man than if you distress your parents to have knowledge put into your mouth with a pap spoon. It is thus that the greatest and best men are made in every country.

HOW TO SUCCEED IN LIFE.—Whatever you undertake, in all business of life, have confidence enough in yourself to believe that you can accomplish it, and you will. Begin nothing, which you do not mean to perform—and when you once commence, by all means "put it through." "Faint heart never won faire ladye," is as true now as it ever was. Many a man has triumphed at last, because he had made up his mind to "never say die."

WEDNESDAY, JULY, 10, 1850.

To Our Friends and Patrons.

In appearing before you for a short season to conduct the Guardian, we cannot feel to do it in our own strength; but shall endeavor that the paper shall pursue the same independent course which has heretofore characterized it. It becomes our duty, now, to come before a sensitive and intelligent portion of community, which, if any are aware, they must know that it is a task to please all classes, and an editor's life is not one of the most desirable to lead; but we assume the responsibility which falls upon us with no little degree of interest, during the absence of the Editor. We shall not consider ourselves bound to any particular land marks; but shall always be ready to depricate vice and to promote virtue and truth. The doctrine of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will be one of the leading considerations, and we shall endeavor to lay before our readers that which may interest and edify. If we assume a position in the paper we hope in all cases that position will be one in strict accordance with truth and justice, and which in all cases we shall feel prepared to defend. In politics it will continue as heretofore. It is hoped that the citizens of Pottawattamie county will stand by the nominations which have been made at a public meeting in this town. They are all good men; men of moral and intellectual worth; men who are pledged to stand by the rights of the people; and we say to all our friends, turn out to the Polls, stand by the regular nominated ticket! We hope that no true American will permit his name to be used on a split ticket, at the August election. In our next number we shall give full particulars regarding the election.

We hope that our readers will bear with us during the Editor's absence. We shall do the best we can, and confidently believe that we shall be able to furnish matter which will be both instructive and edifying.

The matter will be published by the mutual consent of each of the undersigned, and we will endeavor to do the duty cheerfully and willingly imposed upon us, and hope only to receive that merit which our labors will entitle us.

We are respectfully your obedient seevants,
DANIEL MACKINTOSH,
JOHN GOOCH, Jr.

Sunday Visiting.

This growing and increasing evil merits a wholesome rebuke. Sunday is a day that people who wish to favor their religion and their God, find little time to entertain company. They wish to prepare and go to the place of worship without embarrassment or confusion. People who are fond of Sunday visiting, seldom find time to attend church; and those who indulge in this practice under common or ordinary circumstances, carry with them the marks of low breeding. We know of some families who are hardly able to go to meeting once a quarter in consequence of their domestic cares being so greatly increased by the influx of visitors on a Sunday morning. This is not right. Visiting keeps up a friendly and social intercourse; and when tempered with prudence and moderation, it is pleasing in society, and a means of mental improvement. But let it be on other days than Sunday,—then the conscientious are not disturbed, neither an example set leading to the violation of moral obligation and christian duty.

A Day of Fasting and Prayer.

To the brethren scattered throughout Pottawattamie county:—Whereas many of our brethren are traversing the plains to the West; and, whereas, the cholera is making its ravages and laying low numbers of the saints, we deem it expedient to recommend to the brethren to set apart next Sabbath, 14th inst., as a day of fasting and prayer, that the Lord may strengthen our brethren who have left, and especially Elder Hyde and company, in connection with us, who are left behind, and our brethren who are on the way to England on missions.

With our united effort, the Lord may rebuke the destroyer for our sake, and for the sake of our brethren who are gone.

A full attendance on that day, throughout all the branches in this county is requested, and union is expected among them all.

Done by order of the High Council.

JAMES ALLRED, President.

E. M. GREENE, Secretary.

Kanesville, July 8th 1850.

From the Plains.

The following account of men, women, and children, &c., who had passed Fort Laramie prior to the 3d of June, was handed to our friend Elder Moses Clawson, who arrived at this place a few days ago: 11,433 men, 119 women, 99 children, 3,188 waggons, 10,900 horses, 3588 mules, 3428 oxen, and 233 cows. He further says, while on his way from the Fort, that he passed, for eight days, 500 waggons per day, on an average; and gives, as his unqualified opinion, that 40,000 persons and 10,000 waggons, must have passed that place before the 7th inst.

To Subscribers.

The next number (13) of the Guardian will close the first six months of the second Volume.

All those who have not paid their subscription for said term, are requested to "cash over" as soon as convenient; and those who feel disposed to act liberal would do well to pay in advance for the next six months.

Cholera.

We learn by our latest exchanges from St. Louis, that cholera is on the increase in that city.

Let there be No Mistake.

We hear that the name of the Post office, at Trading Point, formerly called "Nebraska Post office." has recently been altered to "Council Bluffs Post Office." As many letters and papers designed for this place, are often directed to Council Bluffs. By this alteration of the name of the Post office, many of our letters will be diverted from their proper destination. The same error may occur respecting the shipment of goods. To avoid all misunderstandings that may arise from the alteration of the name of said Post office, &c. We now inform and request all our friends abroad who write to their friends here, or that ship goods to this section, to address their letters, papers, packages, parcels and boxes of Goods, wares and merchandize to

"KANESVILLE, IOWA,"

if they are designed for the Mormon community, unless it is in individual cases where there have been other instructions given.

Kanesville is a noted place—a place of more business, according to its size, than any other in the Union. Hundreds of business men from every State almost, have testified to this. And any letter, parcel, package, box, cask, tierce, bale or bundle, addressed to Kanesville, Iowa, will reach its destination as certainly as a letter addressed to Boston, Mass., will reach its destination. Kanesville is the great emporium of trade on the western frontier, and destined for many years to hold the pre-eminence. It has the capital and the men who know how to use it—men of enterprize, skill and industry. Do not forget then, that all goods, wares and merchandize,—letters, papers, pamphlets, documents, &c., &c., designed for the Mormon community, and for all our principle business men, are to be addressed to "Kanesville, Iowa." Our agents and friends abroad will take particular pains to diffuse this information. Leave "Council Bluffs," off from every thing designed for this place, or for the Mormon population; for this is the great business centre, and the main rallying point for the California and Salt Lake Emigrants. Kanesville Landing is at Council Point about four miles above Trading Point or St. Francis.

Thomson Defeated.

From the following special despatch to the New York Tribune, our readers will learn the result of the contested seat between Daniel F. Miller and Mr. Thompson. We were confident from the beginning who would come off triumphant. Now we are satisfied, that merit and justice have been rewarded in the halls of Congress, "although some of our pretended friends" have tried hard to destroy our sacred rights at the ballot box, and also to defame our character, with the unjust epithets of "Aliens, minors, and traveling gipsies." Sure enough the gentleman who tried to throw this unpleasant stigma on our character as a community is about to receive the compliment from Congress, which he so richly deserved, also, which he so kindly and feelingly tendered to the people of Pottawatamie county:

WASHINGTON, Monday June 3.

The Committee on Elections in the House has decided that Daniel F. Miller, Whig, the Contestant in the Iowa disputed Election Case, is the rightful member from that State instead of Wm. Thomson, Loco, who has held the seat since the organization of the House. The vote in the Committee stood 5 to 4. The Report is delayed by the absence of Mr. McGaughey, who has gone home to Indiana, but is expected to be soon here again.

ATTEMPT TO CONVERT THE POPE.—A lettter from Rome to an English paper, dated May 2d, says that Rev. Dr. Townsend, Canon of Durham, England had an interview with the Pope, in which he endeavored to induce his Holiness to do away with bickerings, animosities, and polemical discords, which keep the various denominations of christians at enimity, and by calling a general council to establish the basis of a universal creed.

The Pope seemed favorably impressed with the Dr's propositions and arguments, and has sent to request a second interview.

Latest From the Plains.

By the arrival of Messrs. Johnson and Hall, from the Indian country, we are informed that Elder Orson Hyde and company, of this place, left Platte River Camp on the morning of the 6th inst., on a visit to the Valley of Great Salt Lake. This is the last company of the season, all others being in advance. Bishop Hunter, with his company; also a small company of California emigrants from Michigan are a few miles in advance—all well. We are informed the Cholera followed the California and all other emigrants for several hundred miles out, which proved very fatal. Several hundred died with the epidemic. It has, however, nearly or quite subsided and all are moving forward.

Articles Lost on the Fourth.

Several articles belonging to some of the citizens of this town, were either mislaid or lost on the 4th inst.; such as plates and various other articles. Whoever has found any such property, or came in possession of it through mistake, will please return the same to this office forthwith

We have received pr. mail, several valuable communications from the Valley which we are unable to publish in this number, but they will appear in due time. The saints in that region have been prospered beyond their expectation, and the cry there, is, "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few."

The officers of the steamer Robert Fulton will please accept our thanks for late St. Louis papers.

To complete our outfit for the Valley, we have received a nice present from Dr. Clark and Mr. Francis J. Wheeling, of St. Francis, in the shape of a double harness, brass mounted. They will please accept our thanks for this token of good-will

Caution.

We have reason to fear that Land Warrant No 67764 forwarded from the department about the 1st of February last to the care of Mr. Butts, Linden Missouri, belonging to Lorenzo Babcock, of the Mormon Battalion, has been fraudulently taken and conveyed, or it has been mis-carried. We purchased of Mr Babcock his warrant, wrote to the department for it, and received from Mr. Edwards, the intelligence that it was sent as above, about the 1st of February last. If the warrant is mis-carried, it may come to light, but if it has been taken and conveyed away, it has been fraudulently done. Mr. Babcock is in the country, and has never received it.

Also Land Warrant No. 67766 issued to Edward Martin, we have reason to believe is in the same fix. Mr. Martin has been a year or two in the Valley, and his business has been left in our charge.

If any person has either of these warrants conveyed to them previous to the date of this paper, a deception and fraud have been practiced upon them. They are warned to re-trace their steps.

The Fourth of July.

The day ushered in a memorable event, the 74th birth day of "American Independence," and our citizens were not slow. Early in the morning, about daybreak, our ears were saluted with the firing of guns, and the heavens seeming to partake an interest in this eventful day commenced by some of the heaviest peals of thunder that we ever heard, and after a delightful shower which laid the dust, and soon the clouds dispersed, and made every thing delightful, and as fine a day as ever dawned. At about 9 o'clock, the carriages, wagons, and others from the county began to pour into town, and at about 10 o'clock, the people that had assembled amounted to about 5000, and all seeming to feel an interest on this memorable occasion. And to the surprize of many the Committee of arrangements, had a handsome flag prepared for the occasion, which was hoisted on the Liberty pole in the Public Square, with its stars and stripes unfurled to the breeze.

At 10 o'clock, A. M., according to previous appointment. Mr. John Gooch, President of the day, Messrs. Jacob G. Bigler and Erastus H. Derby Vice Presidents were on the ground, also A. C. Hogue, Grand Marshal, Assistants, and Committee of arrangements in full costume, with banners waving and colors flying.

The numerous assemblage of people collected from all parts of the county were called to order by President Gooch, in a most eloquent and patriotic speech, suited to the occasion, at the close of which three cheers were given in honor of the day.

At 10½ o'clock, the Chief Marshal commenced forming the procession in the following order:

Aids. Chief Marshall. Aids.
St. Louis Branch Brass Band, D. Ballo, Leader.
Standard.
President of the day, and Vice Presidents.
Committee of Arrangements.
Orator, Reader of Declaration of Independence and Reporter.
Invited Guests.
Marshal. Ladies. Marshal.
Standard.
Citizens.
Music.
Citizens Mounted.
Carriages.

The procession then marched up Pleasant street, and countermarched, crossing main street and proceeding down Hyde and Race streets, they crossed to Main Street, and came up to the bowery erected for the purpose of shielding the assembled multitude from the scorching rays of the sun.

The President, Vice Presidents, Committee of Arrangements, Orator &c., took their seats on the stand. The Band played "Hail Columbia," after which Elder Geo. Coulson, opened the services by prayer, the President then called upon George P. Styles, Esq., to read the Declaration of Independence which was done, preceded by a few patriotic remarks, in a very able and eloquent manner, and followed by Mr. David Candland, orator of the day, whose powerful eloquence on the subject of "Liberty and Independence," brought forth from the audience a hearty applause.

Elder Orson Hyde then arose, and said: Mr. President, gentlemen and ladies, you see me as I am, here is my "Rough and Ready" hat (waving his hat in his hand.) I am now prepared to leave for the Valley of the Great Salt Lake and I hope in my absence, that every one of you who are entitled to vote, will feel interested in the coming August Election, and be at the polls in due time, so as to secure your lawful and just rights as American citizens; thereby preserving your elective franchise, unsullied and unstained.

The procession then formed again and marched to the dinner table, which was covered with an abundance of food, calculated to please the eye, gladden the heart, and cheer the soul of man, after partaking of the sumptuous fare, arrangements were entered into by the officers of the day to escort Elder Orson Hyde a few miles as a mark of respect due him.

Accordingly the company formed at 3 o'clock, P. M., and marched with him as far as the Welsh Tabernacle, accompanied by the Band, playing at intervals some excellent tunes, until their arrival at the ground.

The escort then formed into a line and Mr. David Candland arose and bid Elder Hyde Farwell, after a few remarks in behalf of the numerous assemblage of friends, when Elder Hyde replied in a short but pathetic address, which drew tears from the eyes of the stoutest heart; the scene is one which the pen cannot describe, it was like parting with a mother, a brother or a sister. He then bade his devoted friends and brethren farewell, who had shown on this, as on all previous occasions their attachment to him as a devoted friend, citizen and brother. The band then played a favorite air, and returned followed by a large concourse of ladies and gentlemen. The scene from beginning to end was truly imposing. Three cheers each were given for the President of the Day, Orator, Chief Marshall, and Band, after which the assembled multitude dispersed to their various homes without a jar or the shadow of a quarrel.

Harmony, magnanimity and order prevailed throughout the whole, and praise is certainly due the officers on this occasion, for their deportment, wisdom, energy and skill, and also to the leader of the band, Mr. D. Ballo, whose professional services are duly appreciated in this section of country.

O that I was Out of this Place!

We have sometimes heard the above exclamation from persons who have created such an unenviable set of circumstances around them that their home has ceased to charm. The doctrine is true to a certain extent, that we create our own heaven or our own hell: and it is pretty certain evidence that the man himself has created unhappy circumstances around him when he utters an exclamation similar to the above. A just and good man commonly has good neighbors. There are some exceptions to this rule, it is true, yet, where there is one exception, it will hold good ninety-nine times out of a hundred. For a person to complain of having bad neighbors and of living in a bad place, is not a very favorable sign for him. We ought so to live that the moral atmosphere around us will possess vitality enough to favorably effect those who come within its influence; but if we do not, we have reason to fear that the Salt has lost its savor. The crucifixtion of the Savior, the killing and driving of the Saints and prophets of ancient and modern times, are exceptions to this.

New York Police.

The New York City Police Department is composed of 839 men, at an annual cost of $412,205. The chief of Police gets a salary of $1600, his clerk $1,000, each captain $700, there being 18 of them, 36 assistant captains $600 each, 746 policemen $500 each, and 37 doormen, $1,25 per day. In answer to a resolution of the common council, the Mayor has stated that the services of all these men are absolutely necessary.

Arrival of the Mail from the Valley.

On Friday the 5th inst., the mail arrived at this point from the Valley of the Great Salt Lake, in charge of Elder Robert Campbell who is on his way as a missionary to his native land, Scotland, accompanied by Elder John O. Angus.

The following named brethren, have also arrived and destined for England on missions: Isaac C. Haight, Captain of the Company, Wm. Burton, Appleton M. Harmon, Jessee W. Crosby, James Works, Claudius V. Spencer, and Moses Clawson. Br. Clawson left the company at the Upper Platte Ferry, and came in two days ahead of the mail. He states that on the 16th ult., 10 miles below the Lower Ford of the South Fork of Platte, Captain Daniel C. Davis, was seized with the cholera at 2 o'clock, A. M., and died at 1 o'clock, P. M., same day, after suffering considerable agony; although the greatest care and attention was paid him during his sickness.

From letters which we have received from our emigrating companies, who left this spring for the Valley, and from the news brought by the mail the tidings from the plains assume rather a dreary aspect. Sixty-two is reported to have died out of out emigrating camps. The following is a list of all those we were able to learn the names of:

Aaron Johnson's wife and son, (Willis K.:) David Evan's daughter, Amanda Herrick, John Smith, Perry Kyes, John Carns, Elizabeth Matery, Mary Dana, (wife C. R. Dana.) Zenos Keyes, J Leaney, Dilley's wife, Luther Warner, five of the Spafford family, R. Griffith's wife, David Lamereaux's daughter, Howell Rust, son of Dr. Rust, Kemp's child, John Campbell, Wm. Fox, Joseph King, Elmeda Catlin, two of Mr. Browns children, John Swett, Dr. J. C. Braley, Widow Norris and her daughter, Mary, Mary Campbell, Rosannah Bragg, Thoma, Green's wife and two children, Abel M. Sargeant, Margaret McDugall, wife of Charles Jameson, John Shipley, Thos Kirk, Charlotte Thornton, one of Harlow Redfield's children.

About 500 of those destined for the gold regions, prior to the 28th ult., had died of the cholera. They met the first sickness at Scott's Bluffs, about sixty miles this side of Fort Laramie, and they say that the graves along the road were too near to serve for mile posts, besides many who were buried at Camping places a little off from the road. Most of those who died, belonging to this section are said to be children.

Notwithstanding the fatality of this dreadful disease this season on the Plains, we have received very cheering accounts from some of the companies of Saints as to health, unity and good spirits.

The news from the California emigrants going the North side of the Platte, is good; there has scarcely any sickness or deaths occurred that we can learn. Those who started from this place had nearly passed those going on the South side of the Platte. The teams were in good condition. The first teams have fared the best. When the mail passed the junction of the two roads, the trains from the North and South side were mixing.

The first emigrants were met on the 15th day of May about twenty miles beyond the South Pass, and were somewhat short of provisions. It cannot be expected that our friends in Salt Lake can supply them with a great amount of provisions; but they will do the best they can. Nevertheless many of the emigrants must suffer for want of breadstuffs

Request.

Perhaps there are those of our subscribers who have gone to the Valley or elsewhere, that neglected to notify a discontinuation of their paper, and the result may be, that their paper is still continued to their former address, and none to receive it, or pay for it. If our friends, knowing of any such cases, will have the goodness to inform us, they will greatly oblige us.

Cherokee Nation.

John Ross, the principal chief, has requested the Cherokee agent to remove every white man out of the nation, not legally entitled to remain, and an order has been issued for their removal.

We have noticed the following advertisement in one of our exchanges from Lee County, this State, with a request to copy.

It affords us no gratification to publish a man in the manner of the following. But it is a charge brought against the Church, and in some instances, with too much truth:—"that broken down scoundrels and villians fly to the Mormons for shelter." The charity and good feeling of the Saints have been imposed upon about long enough in this way; and while we owe Dr. Dresser no ill will, we owe the character and reputation of the Church much good-will, and feel to guard and defend by all proper and consistent means.

Dr. Dresser disclaims the charges published against him: yet we are told that the men who have signed the notice, are responsible men, and if they have subscribed to falsehoods, they are amenable to the law; and Dr. Dresser would do well to avail himself of the protection which the law affords in cases of libel and slander, before he attempts to make this his place of abode. If he does this, he will act consistently with his protestations of innocence: but if he does not, it will prove that he does not consider his character worth defending, or that he is unable to do it successfully.

We would here say to our community once for all: extend citizen fellowship to all people who come among you and conduct themselves with propriety and decorum whether they be Jew or Gentile—Mormon or Anti-Mormon! But if a scape grace, a loose, reckless and intemperate man comes among you for shelter, because he cannot well stay in another place, whether he be Jew or Gentile just give him passport and let him move on.

Notice to the Public.

The undersigned deem it their duty in this day and age of the world, when our western country has been and now is populated with scoundrels and villians, who are daily disturbing the peace and quiet of good citizens, to publish all such persons that they have a knowledge of. We therefore caution all persons to beware of one Dr. Oliver Dresser, who ran away from this place on or about the 18th or 20th of May last. When he left he owed G. G. Hamilton fifteen dollars, and stole a coat from the said Hamilton; also swindled Dr. Milliard, of Keokuk, out of a horse, took a dress pattern worth four dollars from a lady, and a book belonging to the Sons of Temperance. There is many other things that could be mentioned, but we do not deem it necessary; but that the public may not be deceived by him, we do hereby pronounce the said Dr. Oliver Dresser a notorious scoundrel, and unfit to live in any moral community; all of which we hold ourselves responsibly for.

For the Guardian.

Letter G. A. Smith, and E. T. Benson.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY.
April 17th, 1850.

We beg leave through the columns of your valuable paper to communicate to our friends and brethren who so kindly came forward to our assistance and furnished us with teams and wagons, and other necessary means, thereby enabling us to remove our families to this place; and in consequence of the severity of the winter which commenced with us at the South Pass on the 2d of October by a severe snow storm, the particulars of which we gave you in our last letter, and recommenced in this Valley about the middle of November, continued more or less severe until the 1st of April: the ground being covered with snow the greater part of the time and the weather the most severe that ever has been since the Valley has been settled, and for the want of feed we lost the greater portion of our cattle, and those that are left, are in such a reduced state as to be unfit for market, and if sold at present it must be at a great sacrifice and would also throw us out of team to put in Spring crops, the mass of the gold which was brought here had left for the States before our arrival. We consulted with President Young, on the propriety of sending funds back to help out the Spring emigration he told us it would be impossible for the express to arrive there so that the means would be of any material assistance to spring companies, in consequence of the lateness of the spring and large quantities of snow in the mountains and the reduced condition of animals, and advised us to say to the brethren to whom we are indebted to come on if they possibly can and we intend to be ready to settle with them when they arrive, if any should remain in Pottawatamie we will endeavor to forward it to them next fall as we are determined by the blessing of the Lord to pay every man the uttermost farthing, as for the general news of the day we would refer you to the general epistle. And beloved brethren and friends we assure you that our hearts are warm towards you, and our daily prayers are that you may speedily be gathered to this peaceful Valley, and we feel confident in saying to you that by the blessing of the Almighty you shall not be the looser in the end for anything you have done for us. We remain your Brethren in the bonds of the everlasting Gospel.

EZRA T. BENSON.

Farewell to Kanesville.

BY PICCIOLA.

Farewell to thee Kanesville! I leave with regret,
Thine infantile struggles, nor will ever forget;
The few kindly friends, who a stranger has cheer'd;
By sympathy sweet, which makes them endear'd.
Nor soon shall new faces, or scenes that look gay;
Be able to banish thoughts of you far away.
Ah no! but fond mem'ry will often recall,
The scenes there enacted, the gay festive ball.
But far more delightful, to trace the fond page;
Dedicated to those, who my griefs did assuage.
Yes lonely indeed, must that poor stranger feel,
Who friends findeth not, in grief to appeal.
For sorrow when shar'd with another grows light;
Breaks up the dark clouds, with a ray that is bright,
Of Friendship? you wanton, tho oft you deceive
In your magical influence, I still will believe;
And ever will court thee! thou syren of old,
And hold thee more precious than coffers of gold.
Let me go where I will—Let me travel yet on.
I'll seek the fair nymph, to be lull'd by song.
I found thee! in Kanesville, and oft you beguiled,
The throbbings of anguish, of sorrows own child.
Yet blest is my lot, (when the bright side I view,
And onward I move, the right course to pursue;
To gather my kindred and friends who are dear,
Impels me thus forward, nor danger I fear,
Then fare thee well, Kanesville! to the Valley I go;
The bright end in view around me doth throw.
A halo of glory and impulse divine,
The knowledge of "Truth," and salvation for mine,
Farewell to you friends! you follow my track,
Forward; our motto,—we will not go back,
To traditions curb'd forms, and "Sectarians God,"
We know we've laid hold on the fam'd "iron rod."

Bethlehem Camp, July 1850.

Health of the Town.

Although the atmosphere for several days past has been very oppressive and weakening, and the heat almost beyond endurance, the health of the citizens, comparatively speaking, is good. Neither cholera, nor any other prevailing disease, is in our midst at present.

We have seen it reported in some of our exchanges, that the small pox, to a great extent, prevailed in this place during the emigration season; but we can safely say that but few, if any cases have been here this season, and at present none at all.

W. McLennan, Esq.

This gentleman is now in our town and says that it was a mistake about his representing in Nauvoo that he did not find the stolen buggy here. He did find it and sold it to Mr. Kelting and paid the owner in Nauvoo for it after deducting the expense of finding it, he positively asserts. This may be very likely, as there were too buggies in this place somewhat involved in mystery, the particulars of which it is not necessary to name. One was, quite likely, taken for the other.

Idleness.

Idleness is a crime next akin to stealing, for it will lead men to steal; therefore when healthy men are idling away their time about the streets in the character of loafers, they should be dealt with in the church if they are members of the same; and if they reform not they should be excluded.

Men will live and must live while they do live; and if they have no visible means of a living but are idle, and bringing nothing to pass; as a general thing, you may know that they will steal for a living, or cheat and defraud some other persons out of it. An idle man is a dangerous character in society. Honest and industrious people must suffer by them. As a moderate drinker is laying the foundation of drunkenness, so an idle man is laying the foundation of theft and other crimes. Like the beast of prey, he is idle in the day time, but active at night, yet never gets fat by his stealthy operations. It should be said of every idle loafer or lounger, "he is about to become a thief."

Harvest.

The wheat harvest has commenced in earnest, the farmers are all busily engaged in securing it. We hope that the farmers will study their interest enough to secure their crops in the best possible manner. The wheat crop as a general thing is light, and flour will evidently command a high price throughout the year. Corn looks healthy and is growing finely. This county is capable of producing a vast amount of supplies for the emigrants.

August Election.

Remember that the 1st Monday in August is the day which every American citizen over twenty one years of age is expected to be at the polls, in their respective precincts. You will find the regularly nominated ticket at the head of our columns. We shall print tickets for the different precincts, which can be had at this office and at the polls on the day of election.

Council Bluffs.

Some people have been at a loss to know what point on the Missouri River was originally designated "Council Bluffs."

According to the information which we get, it is the point where Lewis and Clark held their council with the Indians and made their first treaty. We believe that the early explorers of this western country gave the name, "Council Bluffs" to the place where they met in council with the Indians which point is situated in latitude 41 deg. 28 min' 55 sec., north, about eighteen miles north of this place, directly on the west bank of the Missouri River, where subsequently a military post was established, but soon after abandoned in consequence of the Scurvy or Black-leg among the Soldiers. Particular attention should be given to the article in this paper, headed; "Let there be no mistake," written by Mr. Hyde before he left for the Valley.

Olive Oil.

Just received and for sale, at this office, a superior article of Olive Oil. Warranted genuine.

It is stated in a dispatch from Washington, of the 10th, that our Government had received official intelligence of the full sanction of the Nicaragua Treaty by the British Government.

Luther Severance has been confirmed by the Senate as Commissioner to the Sandwich Islands.

Disfellowshiped.

Mr. John Holmes, and Thomas his son, were expelled from the Council Point Branch of the Church, for riotous, and disgraceful conduct, unworthy the character of Saints.

The case was presented to the High Council, and they endorsed the proceedings of the Branch.

Monies received for the Frontier Guardian, since June 26, 1850.

From the Valley.

The following extract we copy from a letter written at Great Salt Lake City, Deseret, dated Nov. 18th, 1849, by President B. Young, to Elder Orson Hyde.

You had the company's well fitted out with breadstuffs, &c., many of them wish now they had instead of their two barrels of flour, half a barrel of sugar, for we have wheat, barley, rye, oats, and buckwheat, with potatoes, turnips, carrots, beets, pumpkins, squash, &c. &c., in abundance. Do I say potatoes plentiful? Yes! for I see many use them constantly; and let me state, that a brother, the other day brought thirty-three bushels of potatoes to the tithing office, being the tenth of the increase of one bushel of seed. He raised upwards of three hundred and thirty bushels; another brother (Halliday) raised from one bushel of seed wheat one hundred and eighty bushels, so you see we have plenty of eatables; sustenance for man and beast in abundance, and we wish you to send on all the help you can. Labor is high and laborers are hard to find. We pay common laborers one dollar and a quarter per day, mechanics from two to three, and pay them in the above mentioned produce, likewise in coffee, tea, sugar, domestics, clothes, boots and shoes, meat, &c. &c., or the pure gold if they wish, and we anticipate next season it will be the same with us, only a little more so, that we invite all to come who can find their way to this place, and are willing to stay when they get here and labor to build up Zion. May the blessings of Heaven rest upon you while helping to build up the Kingdom of God is the prayer of your affectionate brother in the Gospel of Jesus Christ. BRIGHAM YOUNG.

Particulars of the Burning of the Steamer Griffith.

CLEVELAND, 17 June.

A vessel saw the burning steamer ahead a little after daylight. She stood for her, and found her to be the Griffith, burned down to the main deck. The propeller Delaware, Capt. Napieir, was there, and the vessel left her towing the wreck ashore. Captain Napier reports 200 lives lost. The Delaware was not with her when she burned. Those saved from the fire got on shore, and will be up in an hour or two, when further particulars will be obtained. It is said that no females or children were saved, except the barber's wife.

The steamer was about three miles distant from the land when she took. The mate immediately ordered the boat to be steered for shore, and she grounded when whithin about half a mile.

LATER.—Mr. Sands, of the Arena, who conversed with the mate of the Griffith, informs us that about four this morning, the Griffith was discovered to be on fire. She was running near the shore, but all on board, said to be 300, were burned or drowned, with the exception of 30. Seven only of the crew were saved. Captain Roby was seen to throw his wife overboard, and then jump after her, but they were drowned together.

No cause has been assigned for the fire. The steamer caught fire about 14 miles east of Cleveland, and Mr. Sands, who was stopping at Lloyd's tavern, 14 miles below, saw the flames.

LATER STILL.—The propeller Delaware has arrived from the scene of disaster, bringing only 4 of the survivors out of 30 or 40. Among those saved were the first mate and the acting clerk upon the trip. Mr. Wilkenson, brother-in-law of Capt. Roby; the Captain's mother was also lost. Three ladies were saved, two of whom were Germans. The boat struck about 200 yards from shore. No baggage was saved. When the Delaware left, there were from 40 to 50 bodies on the beach. The scene is reported to have been of the most heart-rending description; those who would have mourned, lay side by side with the dead.

STILL LATER.—We left the scene of the wreck at 2 o'clock, this afternoon (Monday): at that time about 140 bodies had been recovered, most of them German emigrants. The Griffith sunk in 7½ feet water and a total wreck.

Indians Burnt Alive.

The Weston Reporter says: that an express came in from Fort Laramie a few days since, from which they learn, that the small pox had gotten among the Sioux Indians, who to stop its ravages, had burnt to death a number of those that took the disease.

They also state that the small pox was prevailing several companies of the emigrant.

For the Frontier Guardian.

KANESVILLE, June 24th, 1850.

To the Saints of St. Louis -- Greeting.

Dear Brethren: It is now upwards of six weeks since we left you and we are still lingering by the way, not however by our own wishes, for we would fain have been on our way to the Valley much earlier than this, but we have been detained from the mismanagement of those concerned in the purchase of our cattle, and let me here add it is Br Hyde's counsel to have no more "Joint Stock Companies," and I think I can fully concur in this counsel, from the experience I have had, since we arrived in Kanesville, in relation to our cattle. But we have much to be thankful for, particularly that we have generally enjoyed good health, and it has been pleasant indeed to meet many of the old familiar faces, that used to greet us in Nauvoo and in the Eastern States many of whom have now left, and some still leaving for the Valley. Bishop Hunter, Br's. Heywood & Wooley, are yet on this side of the River, they will probably all cross this week, and most of those of the St. Louis Company that go this season, with myself anticipate going in their Company.

I regret that we shall not have the pleasure of the company of Br Ballo and Band, on the way, for we anticipated many a rich treat of melody from them while wending our way cross the plains to the Valley of the Mountains, they also have been disappointed on account of the same difficulty that detains us, as well as the unusual high price of cattle this spring.

Br. Hyde is enjoying good health, and purposes for the Valley, upon a visit about the 1st of July, to return this fall. Br. Mackintosh and family are here, well and pleasantly located, he is now at my side in Br. Hyde's office busily engaged. Many of our brethren that left St. Louis this Spring, have bought in the claims of those that were leaving for the Valley, and are pleasantly situated upon their farms, their crops growing and fitting them out to take a fair start another spring, some have paid $20, some $30, $40, and some an $100, and most of them had the crops already in the ground at the time of purchase, and I certainly think it much better for a man that has 75 or $100 to come up early in the spring, buy in an improvement and thus by another Spring be ready to start for the Valley, than when he has thus much, to stop in St. Louis to finish his outfit.

I have to apologize for not writing before, and oftener, my only apology is, the usual one of press of business, and more particularly in relation to the difficulty with our cattle purchase.

My kindest remembrance to Br. Robbins, Family, and Council, and all the Saints, with many other kind friends in St. Louis, with whom I hope ere long to rejoice upon the Mountains of Israel.

May the Lord our God bless and preserve you, and his Holy Spirit ever abide you, is the prayer of Your Brother in the Gospel.

NATHANIEL H. FELT.

The examination before Mr. Baldwin yesterday, in the case of Gen. Lopez, produced nothing. The day was occupied in debating and establishing rules for the admission and rejection of evidence. According to the present appearance no testimony will be received from any parties who were so connected with the expedition as to make them possibly liable to any penalties of the law under which Gen. Lopez was arrested. Without the admission of such testimony it will be extremely difficult for the Government to make out its case for it is extremely unlikely that the arrangements for fitting out such an enterprise were made known to any but parties disposed to aid in or attach themselves to it.

The statute is a highly penal one, and must, therefore, be rigidly construed. The accused has eminent and ingenious counsel, by whom nothing will be omitted to keep the prosecution within the strictest limits of the letter of the statute and of the law of evidence.—[N. O. Picayune.

New Coins.

The officers of the United States Mint have sent us specimens or illustrations of the two new coins [lately struck at the Mint] proposed in the bill presented by Mr. Dickenson, in the U. S. Senate. The cent, containing a small proportion of silver, is designed as a substitute for the copper coin now used. It weighs twenty-five grains, the present cent one hundred and sixty-eight. It has a circular hole in the centre. The three cent pieces, composed of three-fourths silver and one-fourth copper, are intended to be exchanged for the "fips, levies and quarters" of Spanish type, now so infesting our currency. The exchange is to be made at current value and not by weight, so as to induce a rapid and general re-coinage. The piece weighs twelve and three-eighths grains, and its diameter is just midway between the half-dime and gold dollar. These coins are decidedly more elegant and convenient than those now in use.

Sir John Franklin Safe.

It is reported that this bold navigator has at length arrived at the Sandwich Islands on his way to England, after an absence of five years. We hope that the rumor may prove true.

GEN. TAYLOR AND THE PEOPLE.—The dark and stormy clouds which have gathered, for the last few months, upon the political horizon, are fast disappearing, through the influence of that warm, strong, and genial feeling which exists between the President and the People. Our Locofoco opponents fear such a man. Strong personal popularity, founded upon worth, bravery, and patriotism, are qualities before which the cobwebs of party, and the artificial restraints of partizan organization, melt with a breath. Just so long as Gen. Taylor continues to retain his hold upon the affections of the people, just so long will daily howls be heard from the stronghold of our opponents, that his supporters are leaving him. The ice is sound when such cracks as that are heard.

The President has officially recognized Patrick Dillon, as Consul of France for San Francisco, California.

Meeting of the High Priests.

Sunday, July 7, 1850.

At 2 o'clock A. M. the High Priests met in the Bowery in Kanesville, to transact business;

Whereupon, E. M. Greene was chosen President of the day and D. C. Candland, Clerk.

The object of the meeting was explained by the President; viz: The re-organization of the Quorum.

On motion,

Resolved, That E. M. Greene, J. G. Bigler, W. W. Lane, G. W. Harris, N. S. Bulkley, W. Parks, Charles Allen, I. Bigler, C. C. Pendleton, L. Coltrin, W. Draper Sen., Charles Hopkins, J. D. Hawks, W. B. Lindsey Jr., G. A. Perry, John Pea, James Huntsman, Rufus Fisher, Jacob Degraw, and Luman Heath; be a committee to facilitate the object of the meeting. Carried.

On motion,

Resolved, That the first Sunday in August be the day for the organization of said Quorum, and that the committee notify the people. Carried.

On motion,

Resolved, That the regular Clerk of the Quorum take a new list on that day. Carried.

On motion,

Resolved, That this day's proceedings be published in the next Guardian, and the bill be presented for payment at next meeting.

Adjourned until the first Sunday in August, at the usual time and place.

E. M GREENE, President.
D. CANDLAND, Clerk.

Hail Storm.

A correspondent writing to us from Springfield, Illinois, says that on the 25th May a terrific hail strom and tempest nearly desolated the north eastern part of Menard County, in that State, almost obliterating every trace of vegetation, houses were overturned—large trees prostrated—a large number of stock killed, and the writer positively asserts, that the hail lay in drifts of three and four feet deep next morning.

If the foregoing is true, they must have experienced hard times in that section, and a little ice to cool off with.

We see stated in our exchanges that John L. Cary Esq., of Baltimore has become assistant editor of the Washington Republic, success to him.

GENERAL QUITMAN.—General Lopez in his address, intended to have been issued to his followers in case of success, in speaking of the Cuban flag, makes the following allusion to a distinguished American officer, supposed to be Gen. Quitman:

"The patriotic people of Cuba will rally in joy and enthusiasm to its support, while you leave behind your untold thousands, eager to trend in your glorious track, under the lead of one of the most eminent chiefs of the unparalleled Mexican campaigns; unless indeed we anticipate them by consummating our splendid task before they have time to follow."

SOUTH CAROLINA SENATOR. — We learn from the Charleston Courier that his excellency Governor Seabook has appointed the Hon. Robert W. Barnwell, Senator in Congress, in place of Col. Elmore, deceased. Mr. Barnwell was at Nashville, in attendance on the southern convention, as one of the delegates from the State at large.

Night Sessions are now held by the House of Representatives, but very few of the members attend them. They are intended for house of such members as want to make speeches at Washington for home consumption, and who would not be listened to in the day time by more than a score members.

PETRIFACTIONS.—The New Orleans Delta says: About sixty miles above Georgetown, Williamson county, there is a valley of petrifactions probably unequalled on the globe. Not only prostrate trees are petrified into the finest flint, but leaves of trees, flowers of plants, and often the whole plant bearing fruit, is petrified. A large tarantula was found as natural as life, sitting on a rock, completely and in every part turned to stone. An enormous Indian arrow head has also been found. The petrifactions and the floral beauties there hardened into rock would astonish and delight the naturalist.

The City of New York has no flattery to expect at the hands of Bennett, of the Herald. He attributes the robbery of the Dorchester bank; of the jewelry store in Baltimore; of the attempt at robbing of the Savings Bank in that same city; in short, "all the bank robberies, amounting to nearly 100,000 dollars, (not quite so much as the Galphin fraud) taking place in different parts of the country, to the gang of thieves, burglars, stool-pigeon rogues, &c., whose head quarters, he says, is in New York. Don't say that, Bennett. "Gotham" contains rascals and rogues enough; but Boston, Baltimore and Philadelphia have their full pro rata. You know this, Bennett. Who does not?

QUITE A MISTAKE.—There has been quite an excitement at Boston, recently, the event being the unrolling of an Egyptian mummy, by Gen. K. G. Gliddon, Esq. From the inscription on the coffin, Mr. G. declared the body was that of a woman of rank, but on unwrapping it, it was discovered to be that of a man.

CONFISCATION OF ESTATES IN HAVANA.—Austria confiscated the estates of the leaders of the Hungarian revolution, and the Captain General of Cuba, having such an illustrious example before him, has commenced the work with the wealthy planters of that island who were supposed to favor a revolution in the "Queen of the Antilles." He has cited for trial before the military tribunals, Aguery Macias, Betancour, Villaverde, and Christoval Madan. These gentlemen may consider themselves fortunate if they escape with their lives—their estates will of course go to reward the faithful followers of her sacred majesty.

Leisure is a very pleasant garment to look at, but it is a very bad one to wear. The ruin of millions may be traced to it

Proposals to carry the mail upon the most direct route from Independence, by Salt Lake, to Oregon City will be considered; also, seperate proposals for so much of the foregoing service, either on the most direct road or by the forts named, as lies between Independence and Salt Lake and between Salt Lake and Oregon City, will be considered; also, for service to Salt Lake and back twelve times a year, leaving Independence and Salt Lake on the first day of each month and arriving at the other end of the route on the last day of same month; and also for eight trips a year.

Proposals to commence the route at Kane, Iowa, or at St. Joseph's, Missouri, instead of Independence, will be considered.

For notes see general advertisement and the following, viz:

FORM FOR A BID

Where no change from advertisement is contemplated by the bidder:

"I (or we, as the case may be) [here write the name or names in full] of [here state the residence or residences] hereby propose to carry the mail on No.——from——to——as often as the advertisement requires, in the time stated in the schedules, and by the following mode of conveyance, to wit: [Here state how it is to be conveyed,] for the annual sum of $——."

Dated

Form of a guaranty to accompany each bid.

"The undersigned [here insert the name of the guarantor or guarantors] guaranties that [here insert the name of the bidder or names of bidders, as the case may be] if his (or their) bid for carrying the mail from ——— to ——— be accepted by the Postmaster General, shall enter into an obligation prior to the first day of August next, with good and sufficient sureties, to perform the service proposed."

Dated

Form of certificate.

The undersigned, postmaster of ———, certified that the guarantors above named are sufficient and able to make good their guaranty.

Dated

The bid should be sent under seal, addressed to the First Assistant Postmaster General, with "Mail Proposals in [name the State and Territory,"] written on the face of the letter; and should be despatched in time to be received by or before the 1st day of July next at 10 o'clock A. M. It should be guaranteed, and the sufficiency of the guarantors should be duly certified.

A bidder may offer, where the transportation called for in the advertisement is difficult or impracticable at certain seasons, to substitute an inferior mode of conveyance or to intermit service a specified number of days, weeks, or months. He may propose to omit an office that is inaccessible, or is not on the stage road, the railway, or at a steamboat landing, as the case may be; or he may offer to substitute an inferior mode of supply in such cases. He may propose different days and hours of departure and arrival, provided no more running time is asked, and is obvious that no mail connexion or other public accommodation is prejudiced. He may ask for more running time to the trip, during a specified number of days, at certain seasons of peculiar bad roads; but beyond these changes a proposal for service different from the advertisement will prevent its being considered in competition with a regular bid not set aside for extravagance; and where a bid contains any of the above alterations their disadvantages will be estimated in comparing it with other proposals.

J. COLLAMER,
June 26th, 4t. Postmaster General.

D. BALLO,
PROFESSOR OF MUSIC.

THE subscriber has served as Teacher of Music for twenty-two years in the Army and Navy of the United States, and four years as leader at West Point.

He is now prepared to teach upon any kind of "WIND INSTRUMENTS," either Wood or Brass. Also to arrange music for Brass, Wood or String Bands.

He has on hand a large assortment of music already arranged for the above.

Any orders left at Needham & Ferguson's store, will be promptly attended to on the most reasonable terms. D. BALLO.

OH YES!

The Old Pioneer on the Track Again!

MR. HENRY W. MILLER, well known in this region, as one of the first western men, has joined me as partner; and we have removed our large stock of English Goods,

Imported Direct from Liverpool,

to our new store opposite our late stand; and in addition to the largest and

Best Stock of Hardware and Smallwares

in Kanesville, we have selected some superior lots of

Dry Goods, Iron, Steel, Springs, Axles, Axes and Hollowware,

in the St. Louis Market, expressly for the WINTER TRADE, and the necessities of this community.

We have re-marked all our goods and have agreed to sell off our stock—superior in quality (though it be—at prices sufficiently low to induce a continuation and increase of our trade; and to remove an influence existing, not altogether without foundation, that some of the goods of the late firm—Brown & Barham were too high; in a word, we only want to live among you and desire not to enrich ourselves, at your cost, we wish "to spend and be spent," for the good of the cause, which is to us, as to you the greatest and best. Our motto in business, is and shall be

"Small Profits and Quick Returns."

The truthfulness of which you cannot prove unless you come, see and trade with

BROWN & MILLER.

N. B. All accounts due to the late firm—Brown & Barham, will be received, settled and accounted for by THOMAS D. BROWN,

BRIDGE ACROSS THE NICHNABOTTNA.

THE undersigned have erected a bridge across the Nichnabotna River at the Rock Ford at their own expense, directly on the Route from St. Joseph, Mo., to Kanesville, Old Fort Kearney and the Mouth of Platte river. The road is excellent and the Bottoms is above high water mark. Emigrants can cross with safety and without delay. Charges cheap. And they leave it to the discerning public to say whether they shall be patronized or not. CANSLER & LIVERMORE.

POETRY.

The Popular Creed.

BY CHARLES SKIRAS.

Dimes and dollars, dollars and dimes!
An empty pocket's the worst of crimes!
If a man is down, give him a thrust—
Trample the beggar into the dust!
Presumptuous poverty's quite appalling—
Knock him over! kick him for falling!
If a man is up, oh! lift him higher!
Your soul's for sale, and he's the buyer—
Dimes and dollars, dollars and dimes!
An empty pocket's the worst of crimes!

I know a poor, but worthy youth,
Whose hopes are built on a maiden's truth,
But a maiden will break her vows with ease,
For a wooer cometh whose claims are these:
A hollow heart and an empty head,
A face well tinged with a brandy red,
A soul well trained in villany's school—
And cash, sweet cash—he knows the rule:
Dimes and dollars, dollars and dimes!
An empty pocket's the worst of crimes!

I know a bold and an honest man,
Who strives to live on the christian's plan,
But poor he is, and poor will be,
A scorned, a hated wretch is he;
At home he meeteth a starving wife,
Abroad he leadeth the leper's life—
They struggle against a fearful odds
Who will not bow to the people's gods!
Dimes and dollars, dollars and dimes!
An empty pocket's the worst of crimes!

So get ye wealth, no matter how!
"No questions asked" of the rich, I trow—
Steal by night and steal by day,
(Doing it all in a legal way)
Join the Church, and never forsake her;
Learn to cant and insult your maker;
Be hypocrite, liar, knave and fool,
But don't be poor—remember the rule.
Dimes and dollars, dollars and dimes!
An empty pocket's the worst of crimes!

Fading.

"WE ALL DO FADE AS A LEAF."

Fading, fading, all are fading—
No substantial thing is here;
Loved ones leave us—we are passing,
Passing to another sphere.

Beauty, with her customed smiling,
And her love inspiring eye,
Fadeth, like the day-god dying
In the twilight summer sky.

Like to pilgrims, worn and weary,
Toil we on our weary way,
Through this night of life while gazing
For the dawning of the day.

Like a stately pageant moving,
Slowly o'er the trembling earth
Pass the ages dim and hoary,
Bending all to sceptered death.

And the tread of valiant nations,
Thundering on in mighty line,
Leaves a faint and fainter echo,
In the crumbling hall of time.

Yes, these bright majestic heavens,
In this mighty march proclaim,
We are passing, we are passing
Unto nothing, whence we came.

But when like a baseless vision,
All have fadeth thus away,
There is built a home eternal
For the weary pilgrim's stay.

On the hill of God it standeth!
Rearing high its golden dome,
And, the song comes swelling from it,
"Welcome, pilgrim, welcome home."

MISCELLANY.

A Chapter on Courting.

A courting expedition is certainly one of the most delightful episodes in the monotonous uniformity of human life. Happy in anticipation, and highly excited as regards the results, which are expected, the young heart expands with thrilling emotions, and the imagination flies on the wings of resplendent hope, long before the reality has either annihilated these exalted feelings by timely fruition, or disappointed the golden dreams of the love-stricken.

Indeed it cannot be denied, that hope and anticipation are the salt of tasteless life, they are light amidst the dreary dark- of human vicissitude. Hope is like the Phœnix, ever destroyed by the fire of chance and casualty, ever reviving in beautified form, created anew from the remnants of its own ashes. Thus it stands the eternal watchtower to cheer us onward upon the surging wave of the endless ocean of time; and like a beacon light, to spread its luster over the briny level of earthly sorrows and earthly tears.

Hope and anticipation are clustering around us, like the winding tendrils of the young vine, enclasping us with vigorous grasp till death has cut down the parent stem, or insane despair has withered the intellect, that gave life and motion to that beautiful form, which is the image of divinity, the master piece of Creative Power.

When friends abandon us, when fortune frowns with bitter scorn at our mishaps, hope is still faithful at its post, encouraging us to march forward upon the rugged path of our tiresome pilgrimage making life supportable, and dispersing the sombre clouds of sorrow which obscure the bright prospects of our future destiny. Hope or resignation are the paramount alternatives of humanity, possession never gratifies us, disappointment ought never consign us to inactivity or disconsolate despair.

But involuntary have we entered into these desultory remarks which seem to be a eulogy on hope, but the subject is worthy of the few lines, which we have just written, and must certainly be of some interest to the reader, who has ever bestowed one thought upon human life.

The mind of man is so constituted, that although he has sufficient self-love to make life agreeable, he nevertheless feels a necessity of loving a being, similar to his own organization, admiring himself in the admiration of others.

This feeling, often sneered at by the middle-aged and the heartless, is the most admirable feature of humanity, it is the most attractive charm, that binds us to the world, it is the characteristic evidence, that sympathy and intellect are indissolubly united, and that the man who thinks must necessarily love.

It is true, that many are ashamed of confessing, that they are touched by the magic wand of affection, because they pretend, that weak minds only are affected by the fickle toy of love, but this is a great error. Great minds are always moved by great passions and the intellect, that is capable of appreciating the excellencies and virtues of others, must necessarily, even without voluntary acquiescence, participate of that inexplicable feeling of an attractive force, which links us to some individuality without us.

But it is not sufficient to feel this sympathetic something, this does not entirely gratify the inclinaton of our heart, there is something still wanting which alone makes our happiness complete. It is necessary, that this affectionate sympathy should be mutual in order to become permanent and be an indispensable part of our existence.

We feel an unabating desire to communicate our thoughts to give utterance to the imprisoned conceptions of our love by a look, by a smile, by a single word of approbation.

Usage has given the privilege to the man, as being more bold and less modest, to take the lead in this inter-communication of sympathetic thought which is the most eloquent page in the history of human life, changing the aspect of our destiny and producing a complete metamorposis in our existence. The young coxcomb, who like the butterfly is sipping the sweets from every flower, may consider this interesting part of a young man's life, as a passing incident of an agreeable conversation, unworthy of farther consideration, after the light hearted words have been uttered. These sort of lovers may please for a moment, they may cheat away some weary hours, but they are entirely inadequate to meet the realities of life and enter into the serious duties of connubial relations.

The first words, which convey in audible sounds to the ear the unmistakeable evidence of the reality of our hopeful desires, may bring us lasting happiness, or lasting misery.

A trial at serious courting is an ominous undertaking, it may frustrate our brightest wishes; one single word may strike down our hope and may have a destructive influence over our feelings.

But if success be the result of our anxiety to give expression to our thoughts, if we become convinced, that our love is returned and that there is a second SELF, who is interested in our future welfare, then life has reached the zenith of earthly bliss, and humanity is crowned with the most exquisite joy which reality can give and possession afford.

This is the Spring-time in the history of human life, the reviving sun, which enlivens the cheerless solitude, developes the lovely flower and matures the fruit of practical usefulness during the active summer-time of riper years.

Advice to Young Ladies.

BY MRS. LYDIA JANE PEARSON.

Do not, as you value life and its comforts, marry a man who is naturally cruel. If he will wantonly torture a poor dumb dog, a cat, or even a snake, fly from him as you would from the cholera. We would sooner see our daughter dying of cholera, than married to a cruel hearted man. If his nature delights to torture, he will not spare his wife, or his helpless children.

When we see a man practicing cruelty on any poor, helpless creature, or beating a fractitious horse unmercifully, we write over against his name—devil, and shun him accordingly.

We once knew a man, aye, a gentleman, who, during a ride for pleasure, became so demoniacally enraged at his horse, which refused to go, that he sprang from his carriage, drew his knife, and cut out an eye of the poor brute. The lady who accompanied him fainted, suffered a long nervous illness, and will never recover from the horror the outrage gave. And we knew the young lady who, knowing this of him, was foolhardy enough to become his wife. And we know how he tortured her. How he outraged all her feelings, how he delighted to destroy whatever she prized, or took pleasure in. How in his fits of passion he broke up her furniture, seized her by the shoulder and shook her till she could not crawl to bed; how he beat her; how he kept her poor babe black and blue with blows and pinches, until her parents took her home, and sheltered her from his cruelty.

If you have a suitor whom you feel inclined to favor, look narrowly into the temper and disposition of the man. Love may soften it for a while, or it may induce him to restrain, or disguise it, but, be assured, the natural temper will remain, and the time will come when your presence will be no restraint upon him. We have heard wives complain, "I was so deceived in my husband; men are so deceitful," &c. But we believe in nine cases out of ten, these women deceived themselves. They suffered the romance of their own foolish hearts to adorn their lover with all the excellencies which their fancy attributed to a perfect manly character, and to draw a veil over all his vices and defects, which if it did not conceal them, greatly softened or disguised their features.

Men are not perfect—women are not perfect. In all cases, there must exist a necessity to bear and forebear, but it does not therefore follow that you should marry a bad man. If you do so, you deserve chastisement: but a life-long misery is a terrible punishment. A bad man's wife must either live in a continual torment of fear, apprehension, and the bitter disappointment of her fruitless efforts to please; or she must become callous, cold, insensible to pain, and consequently to pleasure. Will you take upon yourselves either of these bitter alternatives! We hope not.

"Every hour that a man is in debt is a year spent in slavery." According to this, what an everlasting long life some people must live! Methuselar's wasn't a circumstance.

Search out the wisdom of nature.

To commit murder quietly—Take a young lady and tell her she has a very pretty foot. She will then wear small thin shoes—go out in the wet—catch cold—and cold will bring on a fever and she will die in a month.

Another Wonder.

Wonders will never cease in Paris. A discovery which has lately been made of an extraordinary individual living at the Barriere d'Eufe, and who proclaims himself to to the world as the heir and successor to Jesus Christ, has created the greatest curiosity among the miracle hunters of our capital. This man is a peasant of the name of Piermond, about five and forty years of age, of simple and unpretending manners and homely speech. He is however, manifestly under some extraordinary magnetic influence, for he has cured by the effect of his touch alone many hundreds of persons who have been to visit him. He receives all strangers who seek him with the greatest simplicity, disclaims any credit for the wondrous miracles he performed, merely repeating the assurance of his appointment by our Savior, who appeared to him in a dream, to go forth to the world and testify to the truth of the Gospel. He is of short statute, and of full expressive countenance. His hair, parted on the forehead, descends on either side of his temples. There would be nothing remarkable about the person of the man were it not for the circumstance which has given rise to the wilful lie or the unhappy delusion, which ever it may be, that he thus openly advances—were it not for the extraordinary stigmates on his hands and feet, and the deep cicatrice in his side, whence during the whole of Passion Week have issued large drops of blood!

Many people worthy of belief have told me that there is no delusion about this. The hands and feet are pierced through and through, and the wound in the side is about two inches long and very deep; and they have seen the blood ooze from these wounds slowly and drop by drop for hours together during the past week, and that during all this time Perimond remains exhausted on his bed, lying as it were in a trance, without food or nourishment, and to all appearance dead. After sunset he revives; the bleeding ceases; he recovers his senses, partakes of some slight refreshment, and passes the whole night in prayer! His dress consists of a short tunic of white linen, reaching the knee, with long full trowsers of the same. On his head he wears a white linen turban of the Jewish form. He carries no ornament on his person save a gold clasp which fastens the band to which his waist is confined. The police has been most active in causing the strictest investigations to be made into the history and antecedents of the man; but as yet nothing has been discovered which can in any way serve as excuse for molesting him.

All that is known is the fact that he has recently arrived from Grenoble, where he had lived a holy an religious life, much beloved by the old peasant woman who had reared him, and who, even to the hour of her death, declared to have found him one morning lying beneath a hedge near her cottage. No trace of his parentage has ever been discovered. He never stirs abroad, and discourages all meetings or assemblies at his house; therefore the authorities of Paris have nought to do in his case. Several physicians of eminence have already been to visit him, but none as yet have been able to solve the mystery of the long fast and bleeding Dr. C——, the great anatomist, after remaining two hours in his room last Friday, left in despair, declaring with an oath, that the juggle was too well managed for discovery;" and therefore the mystery, like that of the ecstatic virgins of the Tyrol, remains a mystery still.—[Paris correspondence London Atlas.

A Yankee Title.

A Yankee who found it up-hill work to support himself and family on a small gravel knowl, which he hired in old Connecticut, turned his face a little more than a year ago, to the land of gold, exhorting his wife to be of good courage in his absence, and leaving his landlord minus a small amount of rent. After working his passage to San Francisco, he "footed it" up to the mines, and commenced a course of digging, for which his previous experience on the aforesaid farm abundantly qualified him. But he soon found that the stream of gold flowed steadily from the mines to the sea coast, and that he could fill his bucket the easiest, and probably the soonest, by tapping the current at San Francisco. He accordingly returned to the latter place, where he looked about for a location. Finding an unoccupied piece of ground, he put down stakes, stretched a rope around it, and pitched his tent in the enclosure, commenced trade. Presently an old settler came along, and accosted him rather roughly, as follows:

"Hallo, stranger! what are you on this ground for?"

"Selling licker and small notions. Anything you want tew buy!"

"Well, you take it mighty coolly; this is my property, and you must leave it."

"We'll see about that," replied the Yankee. "I've he'arn tell that 'possession is nine pints of the law.' Now, I've got my title in that way, and unless yew can show a better, yew may be 'good lookin', but yew can't come in,' as the circus folks says."

The property owner attempted to argue the case, but the Yankee stuck to his text, and carried the day, being allowed to remain in "possession" until the rights of real estate proprietors should be better vindicated by public legislation. Three or four months ago, finding himself the owner of a handsome fortune, he began to feel longings for home and family, and having settled up his other business, he sold the right to his location for $7000. When the new tenant came to take possession, he asked for a deed of the property.

"Never yew mind a deed," said the Yankee; 'possession is nine pints of the law,' and a good title enough hereabouts."

His family were rejoiced by his return a few days ago; and the landlord has been paid his rent, with interest; but we believe there has been no attempt made to introduce the new real estate practice into the neighborhood where he now resides.

Reputation is a most idle and most false imposition; often got without merit, and lost without deserving.

Cultivate Energy.

Many of the physicial evils, the inaction of system, the languor and hysterical affections which are so prevalent among the delicate young women of the present day, may be traced to a want of a well-trained mental power and well exercised self-control, and to an absence of fixed habits of employment. Real caltivation of the intellect, earnest exercise of the moral powers, the enlargement of the mind by acquirement of knowledge, and the strengthening of its capabilities for effort, the firmness for endurance of evils, and for energy in combating so as to overcome, are the ends which education has to attain; weakness, but becomes infirmity. The power of the mind over the body is immense. Let that power be called forth; let it be trained and exercised, vigor, both of mind and body, will be the result. There is a healthy unpolished saying, that "it is better to wear out than to rust out," but it tells a plain truth, rust consumes faster than use. Better, a million times better, to work hard even to the shortening of existence, than to sleep and eat away this precious gift of life, giving no other cognizance of its possession. By work, or industry, of whatever kind it may be, we give a practical acknowledgement of the value of life, and of our high intentions, of our manifold duties. Earnest, active industry is a living hymn of praise, a never-failing source of happiness; it is obedience, for it is God's great law for moral existence.—[Madame de Wilde.

Never Get Angry.

It does no good. Some sins have a seeming compensation of apology, a present gratification of some sort, but anger has none. A man feels no better for it. It is really a torment, and when the storm of passion has cleared away, it leaves one to see that he has been a fool.

And he has made himself a fool in the eyes of others too. Who thinks well of an ill-natured, churlish man, who has to be approached in the most guarded and cautious way? Who wishes him for a neighbor, or a partner in business? He keeps all about him in nearly the same state of mind as if they were living next door to a hornet's nest or a rabid animal.

And as to prosperity in business, one gets along no better for being angry. What if business is perplexing, and everything goes "by contraries?" Will a fit of passion make the winds more propitious, the ground more productive, the markets more favorable? Will a bad temper draw customers, pay notes, and make creditors better natured? If men, animals, or senseless matter cause trouble, will getting "mad" help matters—make men more subservient, brutes more docile, wood and stone more tractable?

Answer to the Charade in our Last.

With Amicus, I can't agree,
That traveling three miles on the sea,
Is distance neither long nor short,
Especially if done on foot.
But ague I confess sustains
By turns, a stage of ills and pains.
The first four letters, if reversed
Will not spell gale, as was rehearsed.
Amicus your word intended
Is "League." I hope your not offended,
At things which I have herein said,
For 'tis the way which I have read.

Answer to the Enigma of Amicus in our last is "Abolition of Slavery." Received by W. W. M.

NEW GOODS!

A. SORLEY,

St. Joseph, Missouri,

IS now receiving a splendid lot of SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS, of every description, of the Latest Style and Patterns. And is prepared to offer Great Inducements to all who may favor him with a call. His stock comprises a general assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, and Bonnets. Also, a large and well selected assortment of Iron and nails.

My plan is to sell for CASH ONLY, and at a small advance on cost; the rate charged for goods at my store, will contrast largely with prices paid by those who buy on time. Many place an undue importance on the credit system, unmindful of the fact, that constitutes a nominal profit, yet when compared with the invariable cash system it is a positive loss.

Selling on time is hazardous under the best circumstances. Those who sell on time must buy on time. Therefore, I will say to my old customers and the public generally, that you will save much by calling and examining my Stock of Goods, before purchasing. A. SORLEY.

Dreadful Tornado—Destruction of the Temple Walls.

The dreadful tornado on May 27th, which invaded the city of Nauvoo and the neighboring places has been for us ICARIANS, (little accustomed to such revolutions in the atmosphere,) a spectacle of freightful sublimity, and also a source of mortal anguish, on account of the disasters and catastrophies which have resulted from it, to the inhabitants of this county, and to us.

We do not know, what calamities have happened those we like to consider as our compatriots and fellow citizens: we wish with all our heart, they have not suffered so much havoc and loss as we, and that they may have no more individual accidents to deplore, than in our colony, for, with the exception of some who were very badly frightened, our great family have sustained no personal injury.

Here are some particulars of what has happened to us during that storm: in its first blow which has been the most fatal to us, and every body will certainly think so when they know, that part of the temple walls was immediately blown to the ground;—The Temple, which we were preparing so actively and resolutely to rebuild; the temple which we hoped to cover this year; and in which we were to settle our refectories, our halls of reunion, and our schools; that it is the temple; that gigantic monument, which has become the first victim of the tornado.

How many projects are buried under those heaps of rubbish! How much outlay, and days of hard labor has been lost to us! It was for that magnificent edifice—to again give a soul to that great body, that one of our agents in the north pineries has just bought all the great beams necessary for its rebuilding; it is for it, that we were adding a saw machine to the mill, and establishing a vast shed, to shelter our laborers; in a word, it was for it, that all our efforts and strength has been employed; and now, one gale of the tempest, brings to naught all our endeavors; has violently ended what incendiary had begun in October 1848, and what UNION FRATERNITY tried to repair in 1850. We resign without murmuring to that catastrophy.

Our masons occupied in the interior part of the temple, and who had sought refuge in one of the lateral cells at the moment of the storm, were spectators in peril, of that terrible drama. They had scarce entered the shelter they had chosen as the nearest, when in the middle of the claps of thunder, a whirl of wind, rain and hail, rushed with impetuosity against the north side of the edifice with overwhelming force; it detaches the materials, shakes, moves that mighty mass of stone the height of which furnish so much hold to its efforts and the resistance of which is as nothing, but to augment its strength and fury; and our brothers, sheltering against the south wall, see the north wall yielding under the powerful pressure of the tempest, tremble and incline before them. "Friends, we are lost"! exclaimed one of them, and at the same moment the immense wall ran down under their eyes with a horrid crash!!

However, by a sort of miracle those eight men, who thought themselves certainly all crushed, see enormous wrecks falling at their feet without being struck by them. But the wall which has fallen was considered with that of the west, as the most solid; bereft of support, shaken by its falling, the two others doubtless are also going to fall. "Let us get out of this, let us run," and our brothers, leaving their dangerous shelter, flee through dust, rubbish and dreadful whirlwind, which causes the walls to reel above their heads: from wreck to wreck they attain at length the exterior, they are in security:—One who had not followed his companions, caused to us and especially his wife, a moment of cruel anguish; but many of us, notwithstanding the violence of the storm, went to his research, and he was soon discovered safe and sound.

After the temple, the roof of one of our habitations was taken off, and a part of the outer walls fell into the first story where lodged one of our families composed of eight members.

One of the members of the gerance, who during the storm had departed on horseback to go and see in all our establishments if any accidents had happened that required immediate assistance, soon returned to announce that the wash-house had almost instantaneously overflowed by the waters of the creek, and those engaged inside were obliged to go out through the windows; also at the schools, the mill, the flatboats, the farms &c. more or less damage and loss, had been sustained, but no personal injury was to be deplored; and it was a great consolation for us all, and particularly for our president, Mr. CABET, whose paternal solicitude, and presence of mind on that day, was submitted to a hard experiment.

In the evening, the special men having been consulted about the firmness of what remained of the temple, and their opinion being, that the walls yet standing did not offer sufficient security to rebuild, the next morning the gerance submitted the following questions to the general Assembly.

Must we expect the spontaneous falling of the east and south walls, which are threatening to tumble! No! unanimously, for their fall happening accidentally might cause some accident, probably among the curious strangers.

Must we demolish stone by stone, to have them good for future use! No! was the unanimous response, for that operation would offer almost certain danger to the demolishers; and Community, esteems the life of her members more than pecuniary profits.

Those questions being decided, it was discussed which would be the safest, and quickest way of taking down. A proposition being made, the work was immediately commenced, and in a few hours, by the intelligent and courageous endeavors of our laborers, the walls of the east and south, went to join that of the north.

And now, their remains nothing of that gigigantic work of the Mormons, except the west face strongly united by its sides to another wall in the interior part, and surmounted by an arch; between the two walls at the north and south are the two towers or seat of the staircases.

Though the 27th of May is to us a day of disaster, as the inundation and devastation of our lodgments; the waste of our crops; and above all, the irrepairable fall of the temple which changes our plans for this year, nevertheless, this day of misfortune that would cause the ruin and despair of a particular man reduced to his own strength, has not shaken our courage or hopes. It is that our association which by its system of solidarity renders the losses less sensible by dividing them, increases a hundred times by its collective power, the way of repairing or softening the calamities.

To our little communitary colony—strong by its organization—by the confidence of its members; by the benevolent support of the surrounding inhabitants—our little colony, directed by the high intelligence and the devotion of its venerable President, Cabet; will not proceed, by it, less resolutely, to the accomplishment of her great work—the reign of Universal Fraternity.

In regard to the re-construction of the Temple, the colony have come to no definite determination, as yet—whether they will use the old foundation or adopt an entirely new plan. But be that plan what it may, they will take immediate steps for the erection of a new building on the same square, that will be an ornament to Nauvoo, and one that will call forth the admiration of those who glide by on the "Father of waters."—[Icaria.

MAN.—Mankind, through all ages have been the same. The first times beheld first the present vices. Yet who could imagine that there is such a contrariety, even in the same character? It was Nero, who signing a sentence against a criminal, wished to the gods he could not write.

CYPHONISM was a species of punishment frequently resorted to by the Ancients, which consisted in besmearing the criminal with honey, and then exposing him to insects. This punishment was carried into effect in various ways, but chiefly by fastening the sufferer to a stake, or extending him on the ground with his arms pinioned.

Light and Heat from Water.

ANOTHER DISCOVERY. — While Mr. Paine has been talking about producing light and heat, by discomposing water, a Frenchman, Joseph Pierre Gallard, has taken out a patent in France, dated Nov. 22, 1849, which, as described in the London Patent Journal, is an improvement similar to Paine's alleged great discovery, of producing, mechanical means, pure oxygen and hydrogen at opposite poles, in seperate gasometers. Mr. G.'s discovery seems rather, indeed, to go ahead of Mr. Paine's. Here is a description:

The patentee's invention consists in certain apparatus and processes for producing hydrogen gas by the decomposition of water, and its application to heat and light. The means and processes by which he obtains this gas, are: By the incalescence (incandescence) of iron. 2. By carbon. 3. By magnets.

There is also a lengthy specification given, which contains descriptions of processes which are not claimed, and claims of processes which are not described.

A Poem.

BY PICCIOLA.

Aye! trials will, and must arise;
To every human breast,
And oft they claim what most we prize;
But in the loss we're blest.

Say! What can scourge the human mind,
So lately fraught with pride—
Nor self-gained knowledge can we find,
From ought on earth beside.

"My brethren count it joy that you,
Are tempted diversly;
Knowing 'tis but if you endure,
With patience perfectly.

"That she her work can perfect make,
And nothing wanting be—"
Thus 'tis written, and for whose sake,
True wisdom in it see.

When o'er the earth, the torrents pour;
And lightning snap the trees;
Perhaps that our poor human soul,
As victim—it may seize.

But beautiful the earth appears—
The scene looks not so wild.
New clothing vegetation wears,
And all around is mild.

Nor would the Lord unwittingly,
His indignation pour;
But to chastise most suitably,
That man to him might soar.

An earthly parent watches o'er,
His offspring constantly,
And evil passions checks before,
They taint its purity.

So doth the Lord more lovingly,
Our froward nature scourge,
By trials keen—thus savingly
From gold the dross doth purge.

Kanesville, June, 1850.

Circular of the Chancellor of the University of the State of Deseret.

PATRONS OF LEARNING: The citizens of the State of Deseret having established a University at Great Salt Lake City, the Chancellor and Board of Regents appointed to superintend the same, do hereby issue the following circular to you. Hear us and then judge. We do not ask your aid, unless we can give you good reasons why you should patronize our object.

We should despair of any assistance whatever, if we were not assured that our young Institution has greater claims than any other. We know that you are constantly assailed with the pretended claims of new things appealing to your sympathies, your prejudices, your hopes and your fears. It is only wise men that can discriminate the true from the false. To them we appeal whether they are few or many. Here, is an Institution is like the foundling babe of the Hebrews. It is the child of providence and destined to live and flourish. However obscure its parentage in the valley of the wild and lofty mountains, however many the perils it has to encounter, it will live and shine in nature's simplest, brighest livery, and teach all nations all useful arts and sciences. This Institution is needed to meet the wants of thousands that annually emigrate to this Great Basin. Multitudes of all ages come from under the heavy hand of oppression, and desire instruction in order to be free, useful and happy. This boon must be given them without respect to age or means. The emigrants and outcasts of all nations will here find an asylum of safety, and a nursery of arts and sciences, available upon the cheapest terms. Here, instruction by means of lectures or otherwise, will be brought to the level of the laboring classes of every grade, of every religious faith, of every political or social creed, and of every living language. It is neither arrogant or extravagant to say that this Institution is forthwith prepared to teach more living languages practically, than any other University on the face of the earth; and as to the matter of dead languages, we leave them mostly to the dead. The known industry of this people in rearing up cities and temples, with almost magic celerity, is not least visible in their system of diffusing a knowledge of the sciences throughout the popular mass. It is interwoven in the very fabric of this people's organization and progress to educate the mass and elevate all the people to the fullest extent of their capacity.

Board can soon be furnished in private families speaking the mother tongue of more than twenty living languages of Europe, India, and the Islands of the Pacific, and Western America. Facilities for acquiring accurate intelligence from every portion of the Globe will be more perfectly secured to this Institution than to any other of our acquaintance. Correspondence will be kept up with persons in the service of the University living at London, Edinburgh, Paris, Rome, Copenhagen, and Calcutta.

Whatever is valuable in the laws and usages of Nations, or in their antiquities, whatever in the structure of diversified languages, or in practical mechanism, whatever in the fabric of Governments, or in domestic sociality, or in morals, or in Pagan or Christian ethics, or whatever in physical laws, or in laws regulating the communication of spirits, through cunning arts, of angels good or bad, can be gleaned, that is valuable, we venture to say unhesitatingly, will be copiously poured into the lap of this Institution.

The greater part of the capital requisite to secure these great and diversived objects are already in our possession We possess the men, the master spirits of the nineteenth century, already on hand, panting for the enterprise. A suitable fan is in our hand to cleanse the wheat, or in other words, we have an infallible detector by the aid of which we can save the good and cast the bad away. Do any doubt. What they do not believe shall be seen. The harvest is ripe. The painful throes and volcanic convulsions of mighty nations, forewarn all men to be on their watch-tower, and use a scrutinizing eye, lest they entertain the best system of education and the richest nursery of truth unawares. This is the Institution and heir of promise. Do not slight it, or cast it away to perish like the beautiful foundling of the Hebrews, but nurse it with a few thousands, seeing it is a Heaven born infant, and you will not loose your wages. In so doing the blessings of thousands that now cannot read or write will come upon you. This Institution is not national or local. It is designed for all nations without partiality or hypocrisy. Its only locality is the focal point of the Universal World, where all good men must see that it is the only point of retirement and rest from revolutionary convulsions now known; and the only Institution of the kind that is got up for all nations, and is generous like the sun that shines upon the just and unjust.

Let Christians, Sceptics, Pagans, Jews, Mahometans, remember this institution with favor, for some of their brethren will be beneficiaries among us. A little surplus, invested here will bring you an hundred fold and show favor to the Lord. Giving sometimes enriches the giver.

Kings, Princes, and Potentates, look at this circular; at this Institution; and this healthy and hiding place; and then look at the little cloud that is gathering over your thrones and consider.

Even you may yet want a safe home, and a hiding place from the storm of anarchy. Your sons and your daughters may here want culture, freedom and retirement. Like Solomon you may yet want the opportunity, which this locality furnishes to trace the paths of nature up to nature's God. The salubrity and retirement of this locality, the expansive generosity any unity of this people, which is a portion of your former loyal subjects; ALL invite you most assuredly to send your names before your approaching flight, accompanied with gifts, incense, and precious treasures, to this new born infant of the mountains.

As the patriarch Joseph was sent as a pioneer into Egypt, in order to save his father's house in a day of famine and calamity, so is this great ingathering from all nations to this vast Basin of the Rocky Mountains, designed to prepare a retreat and resting place for rulers and subjects out of every nation. Religion, politics, literature, discrepant prejudices, private and public rights of individuals and large communities, all, can here meet on this loftiest platform of nature's heights, and enjoy the highest order of Freedom, of individuality, and of community, that have been so long sort after by the great and good of all ages. The rim of this wonderful Basin descends from the snowy heights of the clouds almost to the level of tropical heat in time of summer. The composition of the soil surpasses in strength that of the vale of the Nile. The elements need only to be modified and compounded by the hand of art, in order to become productive beyond the conception of the most credulous. Ye rich men of every nation; and chieftains of untutored tribes; send this institution a portion of your treasures before revolutionary whirlwinds shall sweep it from you, and the poor will pay you fourfold in the resurrection of the just; rich bachelors and maidens, adopt it as your offspring, and the gratitude of thousands now grovelling in ignorance, will be a sweet and everlasting memorial of your honored and blessed deed.

Graduates of colleges, and students of law medicine and theology, may here receive weekly lectures gratis. No persons will be denied the benefits of the university for want of pecuniary means. Donations may be paid over to Orson Pratt, Liverpool, England; to John Taylor, Paris, France; to Lorenzo Snow, Rome, Italy; to Erastus Snow, Copenhagen, Denmark; and to Orson Hyde, United States.

Done by order, and in behalf of the Board of Regents of the University of the State of Deseret.

Circumstances.

Man has not without reason been styled the creature of circumstances. History confirms the assertion that the most extraordinary intellects of every age have been distinctly marked by the character of their own times. And it is equally true that periods of great moral excitement have ever been distinguished by the display of exalted talents. There are minds whose springs are so deep and strong, that they are affected by nothing less than events which rake the souls of ordinary men to the bottom, and lash into commotion every element of the moral or natural world. And with such minds exciting causes are not of momentary effect. Their results upon these are as widely different as meanness and sublimity. The one is the strong, proud, continued tossings of the ocean—the other, the bubbles that are seen on the lake's small service when the storm has subsided. But for the agitation which made all Europe tremble, the giant mind of Napoleon might confined itself to the recreations of some petty employment on the Island of Corsica; and but for the events which wrought the mind of Milton into a commotion, he might have remained "mute and inglorious." Do we not now look in vain for these splendid displays of genius which were once made in our own times and country? Where is our Patrick Henry of the present day? Where is Fisher Ames? Where is Alexander Hamilton? and where is the whole glorious constellation that bespangled our political heavens in the days of the Revolution, and shone brighter and brighter as things around it wore a darker and more gloomy aspect?

To establish arbitrary rules for human action is in vain. Every true system of mental philosophy must conform to man as he is, and not to what we imagine he should be. And what is there in his nature that should lead to the opinion that he is not designed to be affected and to act when important events are at work around him? What that his feelings should not be aroused, his conceptions enlarged, and his soul inflamed, when Nature is tasking her powers to awaken his energies, and call into practice "virtues which shun the day and lie concealed in the smooth seasons, and calms of life." It is true that man may benumb his sensibilities by cold and paralyzing theories, until the highest conceptions of genius may cease to charm, and the ennobling stir of nature may fail to excite in his bosom a corresponding emotion. But let him not forget that these are moments which decide intellectual character, and that springs are struck which will vibrate forever. In a word, what is man that he should be indifferent to things around him? Has he an existence separate, and one independent of the rest of creation? Are not the mountains, the waves and skies a part of him as he of them? Does not the same Almighty Spirit pervade the whole? Oh! there are times when the powers of the soul should not be confined to its dark and contracted prison; and duller must be he, than "the fat weed that rots itself on Lethe's wharf," who will not stir when the intellectual or natural world is instinct with motion, and whose spirit sleeps when Nature and Nature's God cries—awake. It was, however, a true notion of the ancients that the Gods would not do for men, unless men would do for themselves. A man to be benefitted by fortuitous circumstances must have his sails unfurled and everything ready to catch the lighest, prosperous breeze. Circumstances cannot alone make men, but men may be made by the aid of circumstances. Their effect is to put in motion the powers of the soul, to give him a knowledge of himself, and then leave him to profit by it or not. They give to him the pinions of the eagle, and he may flap them idly on the ground, or wing his way among the clouds. They light his soul into a flame which if fed may astonish the world with its splendor, or if not run to waste with its idle flickerings. Before the time of Napoleon, other men had felt the strong tide of circumstances, heave and swell beneath them, but few like him had risen steadily on its agitated bosom, and at last seized from the genius of the troubled elements his sceptre and his throne. Like Milton, other bards have struck the lyre, while the hurricane that had swept over it was "still with lightning warm." but few like him, by one mighty effort, could have wrought the world of mind into a tempest. Like Young, others have mightily met the ghosts of "departed joys," and "Punctual as lovers to the moment sworn,

Have held an assignation with their woe."

But few like him have invested with a visible tangible form every affection of the soul, and every pang that plants daggers deepest in the bosom. Like Byron, others have wandered among the ruins of the East, and mused over broken arches and prostrate columns, but none like him have told us their story. Like him, others have stood among the Alps, while the spirits of the place were holding their festivals, and heard "the rattling crags among which leaps the live thunder," but none like him have prolonged its tremendous roar through the music of their song. Like him, others have beheld "the storm spirits fling their thunderbolts from hand to hand," but none like him have transferred them, still burning and flashing, to their pages.

The alleged discovery of Mr. HENRY M. PAINE, of Worcester, Mass,—by which a brilliant inflammable gas is produced from water, at a mere nominal cost—is strongly doubted by some. The Boston Journal speaking of it, says:

This discovery is so remarkable in its character, and embraces such important results, that we must be pardoned for doubting the entire correctness of the statements, until we have received stronger demonstrative proof than have yet been laid before the public. It is true that the light has been exhibited, and it is highly satisfactory but the mode of producing it has hitherto been studiously concealed; nor is it known, excepting from the statements of the discoverer, that there is no other agent in its production than water. Nor is there any thing in the previous history of Mr. Paine, which should excite us in these days of humbug and morbid thirst for notoriety, to give full credence to his account for the astounding nature of this discovery, unsupported by testimony from persons well qualified to test its merits, and who have been allowed an opportunity of so doing.

The New York Express says:

Our Gas Company here have but little faith in the improvement, and have offered $1,000,000 for evidence of its success, which they say cannot be given.

LATE PIETY.—Plants that receive only the evening sun, never grow so high as those that enjoy the rays of morning. So is it with those men, whose hearts were not turned to divine things till the evening of their days, compared with those who, in early youth, began to drink in the rays of truth, and ripen their fruit in due season.

OLD AGE.—The souls of the just, like flowers, more abundantly give out their fragrance in the evening of their days.

PROF. WEBSTER.—The Supreme Court of Massachusetts have overruled the motion for a new trial of Prof. Webster, under sentence of death, for the murder of Dr. Parkman.

The Emperor of China is dead — and Queen Victoria has has named her seventh "Arthur Patrick Albert." This it is stated is in compliment to Ireland.

Every fault's condemned ere it be done.

Interesting News from the Plains.

Kanesville, July 7, 1850.

MESSRS EDITORS: Having just arrived from Great Salt Lake City, the home of the saints, with the mail, and being requested to give a brief synopsis of the news from the West, while waiting for conveyance further East, I cheerfully do so.

The last of the mail company left Great Salt Lake City on the morning of the 20th of April. Weather in the Valley mild and agreeable. Gardening and putting in spring crops, was the principle employment of the people. Grass was beginning to be plentiful. Early Pea Vines were up. Some fall wheat was jointed, though the spring was called a late one in the Valley of the Mountains.

On the same day we found ourselves over the first mountain and safely encamped on Kanyon creek, 12½ miles from the city.

After beating a track through the snow to the summit of the second mountain and seeing the Platte River Ferry Company shoe their waggons; at day dawn of the 24th we descended the mountain and succeeded in getting 2 miles down the East side, coming over snow (on the crust) drifted about 20 feet deep, on the East side of the summit. After other two days wallowing in the snow and shovelling a track upwards of a mile, we got to the mouth of Kanyon creek, four miles from the summit of the second mountain. Some were snow blind, others with swolen faces, most of the company having bad colds.

We found Kanyon Creek crossing very deep. The last crossing—three inches depth of water ran through our wagon beds. At Yellow Creek—two rods wide—the water so deep that it ran over our wagon beds into our wagons. Weber and Bear rivers were low; easy fording.

On the evening of the 8th of May, we found ourselves comfortably encamped at Fort Bridger, 113½ miles from our city in eighteen days. Here we heard, from the Snake Indians, the welcome news that there had been but little snow East this winter; though there had been so much West of Bridger, even in the months of March.

Our cattle, while in the snow, and afterwards in the mud, were sustained by the dry and green grass on the South side of the mountains, which were generally bare and free from snow. We were informed at Bridger, cattle had wintered well in the vicinity of Hams Fork, about twenty miles east of Bridger. Mr. Bridger, Batteez, and other traders, had two or three hundred head of horses for sale. The Fort Hall express had just passed and bought two suitable for their trip at $50 each.

On the 11th we forded Hams Fork—four rods wide—swam our cattle over; put our effects &c., on boards laid across our projections, and by connecting chains reached our cattle on the East side; drew our wagons across in safety, and in very little time, having a lariett fastened to the ends of the chain to draw back again.

On the 13th we forded Green River—sixteen rods wide—in one place, for about a rod, swimming our cattle and wagons. The ferry company had not their boats ready.

On the 14th we passed Snake (Indian) village on the move. They had wintered on the Wind river; had much fur, peltry, skins &c., which they were taking to Bridger to exchange for ammunition, blankets, &c. &c.; all were on horseback, young and old; colts unable to travel, packed; dogs and eagles, packed; and we espied a rooster (which now they had packed up) and that had got so used to Indian life that we thought he seemed as graceful and dignified on horseback as if setting on the old barn yard fence at home.

On the 15th we met S. B. Craw's company, of Kendall county Ill., within 1½ miles of Dry Sandy, over the South pass eleven miles. They were well and hearty; their animals were in good travelling order, much to our astonishment. But they had fed them grain and when that was exhausted they had fed their flour, depending on supplies at Salt Lake, which no doubt they would receive, being the first gold diggers on the road, and which would pass through Salt Lake this season. When our company left the city flour was plenty at $10 per hundred.

On the evening of the 16th, we encamped at the last crossing (to us the first crossing) of Sweetwater; found Capt. Denison, from Ohio, with a company of two hundred, who had just encamped; and in a few minutes a small company rolls up, crosses the river and encamps on the other side. The animals in Denison's company were much used up and not to be at all compared with those in Craw's company,

On the 21st we passed a few ox teams that had wintered at Laramie; also a man with a wheelbarrow (said to be a Scotchman.) He had been asked by several to join their company and they would haul his provisions and bedding. He thanked them kindly, but wished to be excused, as he could not wait on the tardy movements of a camp. He never was afraid of the Indians stealing his horses, and he never lost any rest dreading a stampede. One of our company, Bro. John O. Angus told him he had in beholding him, seen the fulfilment of a Mormon prophecy. Three years ago he had heard a Mormon prophet declare that they would travel the plains with wheelbarrows. Many camps now pass us daily—roads thronged three hundred miles from Great Salt Lake City; seven hundred and thirty one miles from Council Bluffs. Crossing of Sweetwater tolerable high; but wagon beds blocked three or four inches go over safe.

On the 25th we reached Upper Platte Ferry and forded. The road now was completely covered with wagons and emigrants for the Diggins. We found here some harness laying on camp grounds; some casks, axes, augurs, stoves &c.; but nothing at all in comparison to the amount of articles left and thrown away by the emigrants last season. We found the emigrants had learned wisdom by the things their friends last year had suffered, and come on in quite a different style. Light wagons, first rate horses and mules; in short: light loads and good teams, without any surplus property or clothing to leave for destruction on the plains. Here we found a Mr. Hickman and others from Missouri, who had succeeded in establishing a terry boat at the old Mormon Ferry. Twenty of our company turned in and helped the old pioneers (ferrymen) to build and launch a couple of good substantial boats, while we traded our oxen for horses and recruited up a little for the journey. The last two weeks after being out of the snow and mud, we travelled with our ox teams two hundred and twenty six miles.

We started from the ferry on the 3rd of May. Passing a continual train of emigration, we reached Fort Laramie on the 10th. We avoided most of the Black Hills and came the river road from the La Bonte, which, although the longest way, we preferred on account of the better road. The travel generally this season has went the river road. The feed, we must say, was much better than we anticipated. Having been on the route now for three successive years, I feel safe in saying it was much better than the two previous seasons; though the emigrants could hardly be made to believe they were on good feed, not being acquainted with mountain grasses. Here Mr. Somerville, the Clerk at Laramie, appointed to keep the statistics relative to emigration, presented us with the following schedule:

"Total number of emigrants passed this post up to June 10th, 1850, inclusive. Sixteen thousand nine hundred and fifteen, men; two hundred and thirty-five, women; two hundred and forty-two, children; four thousand six hundred and seventy two, wagons; fourteen thousand nine hundred and seventy four, horses; four thousand six hundred and forty one, mules; seven thousand four hundred and seventy-five, oxen; one thousand six hundred and fifty three, cows.

CALVIN C. SOMMERVILLE Clerk."

On the 12th of June we encamped at Robidou's Trading Point, by Scotts Bluffs. Here we came into the cholera. Robidou says the Sioux Indians have all gone over to White river, afraid that the white men would bring cholera among them this year as they had last. From this point to the South Fork of the Platte, which we reached on the 18th, we passed mostly ox teams with several hundred head of loose stock, (oxen, cows, heifers, and yearlings,) en route for California. We forded with our horses and wagons with little difficulty, having to boat our effects about four miles below what is called the Upper Crossing. We felt thankful indeed to get over so easily; our effects secure; and passing down nearly one half mile through camps with many cases of cholera, we encamped on the East bank by sunset, having spent the day profitably in finding so convenient a ford and a kind Welchman, (Mr. Pritcher) who volunteered the services of his boys and his tight wagon bed for our convenience. Several of our company were attacked with the disease; but feeling unskilful in using medicine prepared by strangers, and realizing that God had not changed, and, furthermore, believing the scriptures which read thus: "Is any sick among you let him call for the Elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick." They had hands laid on them and all recovered, though we were daily meeting and passing right through cholera in its most fearful stages. Graves by the wayside were common; sometimes two side by side, and three, yes five; and as many as seven have we seen side by side, right by the road. Two cases did we see of bodies, we believe, not interred two feet deep, which the wolves had dug up, and their bones were bleaching in the sun. We noticed it was mostly from Missouri, and some from Illinois, (who were late and generally with oxen) in whose camps cholera had made its most direful ravages. We soon came into camps which we now (20th) met much more scattering, who called themselves Oregon emigrants; however many of them were unsettled as to their destination; but anticipated they could go to Oregon this season easier than California and winter their stock better; then in the spring have their choice whether to continue there or proceed to California and settle. The cholera had proved fatal among them. We could not refrain sometimes from sympathising with some of the sufferers. Captain Haight bought some tea from a woman who said she had just seen her father, mother, and sister interred within a few days. We saw a wagon alone on the river bank—mess all reported to have died. The road here runs a couple of miles from the river. Bought some sugar of a gentleman who said he was alone in his mess, his two friends had died. The emigrants had called this, or somewhere in this vicinity, "the valley of death." Graves by the wayside were reckoned at an average of one per mile; and who can tell the number on camping spots along down on the river banks!

On the 21st musketos and horseflies became numerous; and to give a correct account of the annoyance they gratuitously bestowed upon us and our horses, I feel inadequate to the task.

On the evening of the 24th, we camped with Bro's. Lorenzo Young and Charles Decker, having passed an unorganized company of saints in the morning, gathered from St. Louis and other places.

On the 25th we reached Fort Kearney, where Livingston & Kinkade's train were encamped, and also Capt. Lake's Fifty.

From this Fort, we have met, we may say, all the "Mormon" emigration, numbering about eight hundred wagons. They were generally in good health and spirits, though cholera, or, in other words, death, had penetrated their camps also. Bro. Appleton Harmon believes that sixty two were reported to him to have died; the names of many of them he has in his journal.

When we came to the camps of our brethren we had an alphabetically arranged list of our letters, which we read to the camps, and in a few minutes were able to hand them out, as they were also arranged and tied up alphabetically.

We were just in time to deliver to President Hyde his despatches and letters, at Hyde Park, on the evening of the 4th of July, and to accompany him to Mr. Brownings, on the morning of the 5th, where his company were waiting his arrival, and to bid him good bye and wish him good luck on his mountain trip.

Now, Messrs Editors, I have had but a couple of hours to sit down and comply with your requisition; but what I have written I have written in my own style. If you think it will do any good; be interesting to the saints, or instructing to mankind, you can use it, and I'll back it all up by signing my name under it all.

What has first come to my mind you have, and as to my heart, it's filled with good will and kindness towards my brethren of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

TO THE POLLS! TO THE POLLS!!

Monday, August 4th, is Election Day.

It is expected that every legal voter will be at the Polls early in the day and cast his vote. We have printed tickets for each precinct, and hope that every true American citizen will act in accordance with law and order, and stand firm and undaunted by the regularly nominated ticket, and use their influence against any split tickets, for nine chances out of ten they will be either grog-shop nominations, or votaries of the god of "bacchus." What person is there in this community who regards his rights will vote for such men? None, we hope.

The men on the regular ticket are worthy of your support, and are fully approved by the Presidency of the Church here, and the High Council as good and upright men, and who is there that would not abide the advise of these men? None, but those who are opposed to the true interests of this county, and those "who are not for us are against us."

It may be well to observe that there are some who are Democrats in principle, who belong to this community, and feel like voting for the Locofoco ticket. Let us ask them a few simple questions:

1st.—Are you willing to cast your votes for men who have been guilty of robbing you and your friends of their most sacred rights at the ballot box? We answer, No!

2d.—Are you willing to cast your votes for men who perhaps in the Halls of Legislation will declare themselves prepared to lead a band of outlaws to drive you from your peaceful homes? (as Dr. Selman, Speaker of the Senate of the Legislature of Iowa did last winter.) We answer again, No!

3d—Are you willing to vote for men, who in the Halls of Congress declare you to be "Aliens and foreigners, roving gipsies, outlaws, minors, and not twenty-one years of age." We answer, no!

4th—Are you willing to vote for men who are willing that you should be taxed (and do tax you,) for the benefit of the State, without granting you the right which is conferred upon every American citizen, the right of representation? Read the above and ponder. It is the very cause which your forefathers fought bled and died for, "The right of representation." Let every voter reflect and consider well before he casts his vote for any other than the one which has been regularly nominated, for if you do you will regret it.

Don't forget that the First Monday in August is the day! Every legal voter is expected to be on hand.

Departed.

Elders James Works, John. O. Angus, Robert Campbell, Isaac C. Haight, Wm. Burton, Appleton M. Harmon, Jesse W. Crosby, Claudius V. Spencer, left this town on the 15th inst., in good health and spirits, Elder Moses Clawson left a few days previous. These brethren are destined for England, to help the servants of the Lord there, under the direction of Elder Orson Pratt, one of the Twelve Apostles of the last days, and President of the Church in the British Islands. From the short interview that we have had with the above named brethren during their stay here, we have concluded that they are good men, and hope that their labors in England will be duly appreciated by the President and the Saints there. We wish them success.

Legal Voters.

To constitute a legal voter, you must be in the State and county six months previous to the election, to be over twenty-one years of age, American born, or duly naturalized according to law.

Watch.

We have had a day of fasting and prayer, and now it becomes our duty to watch. From the spirit of the times, we are impressed that an effort will be made by some to throw our citizens into confusion about election time, and thereby divert their attention from the duty which they owe to God, their country and themselves. Brethren and friends be on your guard, and act like men, and let not the cunning craftiness of the Devil, or of men persuade you from your line of duty. This is an old scheme of the adversary, which if not guarded against may throw you off your watch tower, and cheat you out of your most sacred rights, viz: "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

Officers, upon you rests the greatest responsibility and care; and the citizens (not only of this town, but throughout the county, also,) look to you, as watchmen, ready to guard their interests against any encroachment of the enemy. Be one, and we fear no danger, but if you get divided for selfish interest, and your own aggrandisement, you may rest assured you cannot prosper, neither can your mind be clear on any subject, that you may undertake to advocate, and peradventure you may fall a victim to the censure of those who may appear to be your most firm supporters.

We have not been much in the habit of prophesying; but it seems to us, as if we were pressed in the spirit to offer the foregoing in our own name. The Savior said on one occasion to the Jews. "The light of the body is the eye. If thy eye be single thy whole body shall be full of light." What we say to one, we say to all, "Watch," and by all means avoid making the contents of a demijohn your counsellor, or a grog-shop your sanctuary.

Education.

It is of the utmost importance, that parents should direct their immediate attention to establishing schools in the different Branches of the Church in this county, under the supervision of efficient teachers—unless they destre to bring up their children in ignorance, which has ever been a curse to mankind when permitted. It is an imperative duty devolving upon parents to send their children to school, as soon as they are capable of being taught, so that their young and innocent minds may be instructed in every good, virtuous and upright principle, moral and intellectual, that is calculated to adorn and ennoble the human character; and that they may not prove in riper years to be a burden and disgrace to society.

Sound education, selected from the best authors, has ever been productive of strengthening and elevating the mind above the heterogeneous mass of nonsense often employed by the ignorant, and of throwing a mantle of protection over it, which has often proved a bulwark of defence against the many corroding evils, which infest society; and even, if the pupil does not seem to appreciate the blessing conferred, the parent is liberated by fulfilling the moral obligation which he owes to his posterity and to his God.

In times past our facilities on this western frontier, were not so favorable, but at present we are persuaded that no reasonable excuse can be found for neglecting this important duty. Intelligence, or truth proceedeth from the great I AM, and those professing to be his children, and receiving from the eternal fountain the living water, ought to have as much charity, at least, as to convey the same to their children. This would be Godlike.

To Whom it may Concern.

The period has now arrived to sow your turnip seed, to cut hay, &c. Remember the scarcity of the latter this spring. We hope that our friends and brethren will pay particular attention to Elder Hyde's counsel in the 11th No. of the Guardian, respecting this, and other matters in connection equally important.

Every farmer ought to appreciate the products of the soil: "the boon of heaven to him," as a reward for his diligence, perseverance and care, in attending to the minor duties belonging to that sphere; at the same time realizing the import of the maxim, that "Paul may plant, and Apollos water, but it is God that giveth the increase." Consequently the greatest care should be exercised, when the increase is given, that none of it be lost by neglect or indolence, but to secure it in season, and have it laid up in a safe place, with as much care as you would so much gold, and liberally bestow (not grudgingly,) the tenth to the giver, for the benefit of his kingdom on earth.

The Bishop says: that he is ready to receive your offerings and tithings whenever you feel disposed to place them within his reach. Would it not appear like the commencement of the Millennium, to see every man bringing his tithing to the store house, shaked down, pressed together and running over. The Lord hath promised to such, that he will open the windows of heaven, and pour out blessings, even to abundance. The Lord's acts are liberal, and he takes delight to see his Saints follow his example.

Morality on the Increase.

It affords us no little degree of pleasure and satisfaction to learn that our neighbors at Council Bluffs, or Trading Point, have lately resolved to clear their town of scape graces, &c., and that they are about to enforce the observance of the Sabbath as a day of rest, a day on which no business is to be transacted unless in cases of emergency. We are glad to see that our neighbors have taken such a decided stand in favor of morality, and hope that that they may be able to maintain their position, not only in this but in every other laudable undertaking, calculated in its nature to exalt virtue, and depricate vice in whatever shape her odious head may present itself.

Here is an example set which would be praiseworthy if some of the merchants in this town would follow.

The following resolution was sent to us by one of the citizens from the above named place, for publication:

The citizens of Council Bluffs have determined to have groceries and business Houses closed on the Sabbath day, unless very urgent business prevents. The owners of groceries to their credit be it said, very cheerfully complied with the wishes of the citizens.

Major J. E. Barrow, Indian agent, will please accept our thanks for late St. Louis papers.

Remember

That this county is legally organized and been acknowledged so by the State authorities, and also by Congress, and therefore do not let any ambitious men divert you from the exercise of your legal rights at the ballot-box, by telling you that the County is not organized; but go to the polls and cast your vote and it will all be right, if you do not assert your rights there will be none to assert them for you. Let every legal voter cast his vote, and they will be bound to respect your voice through the ballot box.

Horse Thieves.

This county has been infested with a gang of horse thieves, and many horses have been run off, and others threatened. A few days since one of them was arrested calling himself Andrew Jackson Cassner, who says that he is connected with a gang of eleven thieves, who are scattered throughout this county, the Desmoine country, and the upper part of Missouri. Their depredations have, of late, been directed to this and the adjoining counties and many horses have been stolen by them and run off and sold. Cassner was arrested on Keg Creek, by L. T. Coons and Mr. Gammet. When he was arrested he had in his possession two horses belonging to Mr. Findley, of Fremont county, who was notified that the horses were at this place, and also the thief, and he came up after his horses. He thought he could forgive the fellow if he only got his horses. It seems that this thief has been harbored by the old man Findley, and that the thief was intimate with his daughter, and expected to be married shortly. This may account for the old man's lenity towards him. Cassner has implicated some men of standing in this affair; but he is not to be believed in all particulars. He has been engaged in the business of horse stealing several years: his father before him was a notorious horse-thief and also his brother. He also gives the names of some who are known to be horse thieves; the two Kilgores, who have roved these prairies for several years also one Bundy and Martin, have been connected with him. In regard to the men who he implicates, he knows nothing of himself, but it is what others have said. We have seen both the gentlemen alluded to, and there cannot be the least suspicion rest upon them that they are any way concerned with the gang. Mr. Findley, after proving his horses, had them delivered over to him. The thief early on Sunday morning last, made an effectual escape from the constable. There cannot be so much blame attached to the constable as some think, in his escaping. The jail in this county not being fully completed, they had no place to keep him, and he was placed under the charge of the constable. After this affair of a known horse-thief escaping from the hands of justice, we hope that the officers of the county will immediately fit up the jail in good order for the immediate reception of all such scoundrels, and not permit them to run at large as a curse to community. We say fit up the jail. Cassner is a person who stands about five feet four inches in his shoes; has a red face and black hair; about twenty years of age; rather thick set.

We would suggest to any person or persons that have harbored any of this gang of thieves, or fed them, to stop it, if they do not wish themselves to be any way identified with this gang of scoundrels.

Persons who have horses had better keep their fire arms in good order, and if they see a thief taking off their horses to check him by shooting him down. We learn that a party of men are organizing to protect the county against the depredations of this numerous gang.

The constable is expected, when he gets another villain in his possession, that he will have him chained so that there will be no possible danger of his getting loose.

Trading Point Expedition.

We sincerely hope that all those who were engaged in the late expedition to Trading Point, may hereafter observe more strictly the 'Mormon Creed'; viz: 'To mind their own business,' and let others do the same. We believe that the aforesaid expedition was entered into, by those who went, with a view to benefit both places, and see justice administered to the party concerned. However, we think had the parties drank less whiskey, before starting and on the way, they would have been able to accomplish their object much better, and with less noise.

We are not in favor of horse thieves going at large in this county, when known to be such, neither are we in favor of Lynch law being enforced; but that such characters should be treated as the law directs. We must say (with due deference toward the Legislature of Iowa,) that the law in this county is in a very cripplen condition; and we hope that the wise men in the Legislature, will consider our case, and see the necessity of establishing a Circuit Court in this county, for the benefit of its inhabitants, so that thieves, and other desperadoes, may receive that punishment which they so richly deserve. We are daily pestered, on the frontier with vagabonds, who are too lazy to work, and too thievish to want, and too wicked to do any good, except guarding grog shops, and, in the performance of that duty, they slip in, and get drunk and then some person has to take care of them. Look out for such men, and let the scorn and contempt of an injured public make their hell so hot that they cannot stand it.

From the Presidency.

We clip the following extract from a letter written at Great Salt Lake City, April 13, 1850, by the Presidency of the Church, to Elder Orson Hyde. The extract is brief, but it comprehends a great deal, and our brethren and friends would do well to read it and treasure it up:

"We have not much to say, or not much time to add to what we have written. It is a very busy time with us. The weather is fine and the brethren are very busy putting in the wheat, and from present appearances, we shall need double the hands at harvest we now have. We anticipate a visit from you (Elder Hyde,) * * * this summer, and hope you will bring a great many reapers along, for we shall need them. The public works are languishing for help, and we want the Saints at home.

"Push the Saints to Zion, and pursuade all good brethren to come, who have a wheelbarrow, and faith enough to roll it over the mountains, &c.,

Signed, BRIGHAM YOUNG,
HEBER C. KIMBALL,
WILLARD RICHARDS.

The foregoing clearly shows the duty devolving upon the Saints to gather to the Valley as soon as circumstances will permit to assist in building up Zion, and comply with the advise of those who are placed to take the oversight of the church, and to counsel for the general good and benefit of the Saints and all upright people, that love righteousness and hate iniquity. We presume the wise will understand, and act accordingly.

Look out for Spurious Tickets.

There will probably be many spurious tickets in circulation on the day of the election—none genuine unless "Frontier Guardian Print," can be found at the bottom of them, so keep your eyes open.

Whisky.

We hope no person of respectability will permit himself to visit the doggeries on the day of election, which always breed confusion and misery. Keep away, inasmuch as you regard your character worth anything.

Mad Dogs.

We have reason to believe that it is with dogs as it is with men in one respect: where they are collected in great numbers, they breed disease. Kanesville streets are thronged with dogs; and we were credibly informed that a rabid one passed by the Kane Hotel a few days since. It stands every good citizen in hand to protect himself against those rabid animals. If three out of four were killed off, we should be less liable to hydrophobia, and have an abundant supply of the canine race still left among the citizens. Dogs are not profitable stock to keep. We never knew any one get rich by them; but more generally it happens where families can hardly supply themselves with the necessaries of life, they keep often two or three dogs about them. They are sometimes useful on a farm in a new place, and teamsters can often find use for them, but citizens of a thickly settled town have little use for dogs.

We received by mail from the Valley, a copy of the weather table kept in that place, last winter, by L. Smith, but from the length of it, we postpone publishing it at present to give place to other matter.

Remember that Israel Kister, the Democratic nominee for Treasurer, was present at the time the poll books were stolen. So look out for the public funds.

Death of General Taylor.

We learn, by Gen. Joseph Megquire, of Boonville, Mo., that Gen. Taylor, President of the United States, died at Washington about the 5th inst., of Cholera Morbus. Particulars unknown. We hope that it is not so, but it comes from a most reliable source, and when Gen. Megquire passed the Fort, they were firing minute guns.

Precincts.

The polls will be opened at the following places, on the morning of August 4th, and continue open during the day:

Kanesville, Coonville, Rockeyford, Indian Town, and at Silver Creek. We wish our friends would forward us the result of the election, as soon as practicable, for the Guardian. It is expected that every man will vote in his respective precinct.

We learn from the St. Louis Republican of the 6th inst., that the Hon. Truman Smith is confined to his house with a dangerous attack of erysipelas in the head and face. It is feared that the attack will prove fatal.

WANTED—Flour, Meal, Wheat, Corn, Butter, Eggs, Cheese, Chickens, Meat, Honey, Tallow, Wood, Country produce of all kinds, lumber, and in fact every thing the farmer can raise, wanted constantly at the Guardian office in exchange for the Frontier Guardian, to keep the printers from going hungry. Don't forget the cash to buy clothing, &c.

We hope the patrons of the Guardian will not overlook this call for we are out of most of the above articles.—[Printer.

Market.

We would make a suggestion to our farmers that they have a regular day to bring in produce and other articles for sale. The increase of the inhabitants of this town, and the scarcity of all kinds of produce in the market, makes it necessary that our farmers should commence bringing in their produce, such as butter, eggs, flour, vegetables of all kinds which will meet with ready sales at fair prices. We have a large and commodious Square that could be used for that purpose. We suggest that Saturday be adopted as a regular market day, when farmers should make it a point to bring in their surplus produce.

Council Bluffs, July 3d, 1850.

Editor of the Guardian, Sir: A note written by me to you, June 25th, 1849, was never designed for the public eye. It was written on the spur of the moment, being excited through what I am now satisfied were incorrect statements, made to me by an irresponsible man, at that time comparatively a stranger.

I am satisfied that I had no just reasons for making the statements that I did; and though I differ from you in politics, I consider this apology due to you in a personal matter between us.

Respectfully, &c.
M. H. CLARK.

Mt. Pleasant, July 3d, 1850.

Orson Hyde:

Dear Sir: As Chairman of the Whig State Executive Committee, I have the honor of informing you that the Whig State Convention, after corresponding with each other, and the friends in different parts of the State, have selected James L. Thompson, of Johnson county, as the candidate for Governor, in place of James Harlan, declined. Mr. Thompson is a man of undoubted ability and energy; is a prudent, correct business man; and well known throughout the State as a gentleman of unblemished moral character.

Yours truly,
A. B. PORTER, Chairman
Whig State Com.

The following we clip from the St. Louis Union of the 24 inst., and learn that President Taylor has appointed President B. Young, as agent to take the census of Deseret:

Appointments by the President.—By and with the advice and consent of the Senate.—Eliza C. Colley, to be receiver of public moneys at Kaskaskia, Illinois. John W. Ashmead, to be Attorney of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania. James M. Clark, to be Attorney of the United States for the district of Rhode Island. William Halsted, to be Attorney of the United States for the district of New Jersey.

By the President—Charles H. Merritt, as agent to take the census of New York. Brigham Young, as agent to take the census of Deseret. J. N. Johnson, as agent to take the census of California.

Deseret Hotel.

The above named Hotel has just been opened, by William Migate, whose card is placed in one of our columns. The situation of the building is centeral, and in the healthiest part of the town; and another advantage his establishment has over any other here, is, that no grog shop is attached to it.

To Subscribers and Others.

The second six months of the second volume of the Guardian will commence with next No. (14.) Terms $2 a year or $1 for six months. Payable in advance.

Split Ticket.

We shall use our whole influence against any person or persons, who shall have any thing to do with a split ticket. We do not consider them endowed with the spirit of union and harmony, or willing to sustain those who are willing to sustain them. We understand that they are awaiting to hear what we have to say in regard to a split ticket in this number of the Guardian. We say to them, that we are opposed to them, and the ticket, in every shape and form. We go against any split whatever. The men on the regular ticket are all acknowledged to be good men, and fully capable for the offices. We hope no one will go to the polls without voting for the "Union Ticket," entire.

George G. Wright, the nominee for Congress, is the person who defended our rights in the last Iowa Legislature. Remember this when you go to the polls.

Our friend, Dr. S. M. Ballard, of the Iowa Republican, is determined that the Locofocos shall not forget about the stolen Poll Books. He has something on the wrappers of each like the following "Keep your eye on the stolen Poll Books." "Look out for the stolen Poll Books." This is as it should be, to let the world know it.

Hon. John Robbins has our thanks for the report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Good News.

We refer our readers to an advertisement in this column of Messrs. Parish & Dibble's "Meat Market." The long looked for, has come at last; a regular meat market in Kanesville. Meat is good, when used with prudence and thanksgiving; but be moderate in the use of all kinds of fresh meat during this hot weather

From the St. Louis Republican.

Iowa Contested Election—the Case Referred to the People.

A telegraph despatch announces that Thompson and Miller—the former holding, and the latter contesting his right to a seat in the House of Representatives—have been sent home, to run the race over again. Miller has declared himself a candidate, and is coming home to canvass the District. Thompson may do the same thing, though if he be wise he will not engage in any such forlorn undertaking.

Several days were occupied in an effort to force Mr. Thompson upon the House and the people, but a majority would not permit it. At the present time, when the canvass is to commence in the District, it is important that the views of the Locofocos in the House should be known and understood, by that portion of the citizens of Iowa, who have been abused and denounced for the exercise of their right in this matter. Judge Mason, in a recent letter, made a very movappeal to the Mormons, in the hope of securing their votes at the coming election. He blarneyed them a good deal, and asked forgiveness for the slights and insults put upon them by the Locofoco party. But Mr. Letfler—Mr. Thompson's colleague—does not seem to have been so politic. He would cut them off from all rights by denying them citizenship at all, although they have been residents of the State, for several years, and the Constitution and laws make no distinction between them and other individuals.

We copy a sketch of Mr. Letfler's remarks from the Globe:

If the Kanesville vote was excluded as he thought it ought to be, the controversy was at an end at once; suppose, even admitting all the votes claimed by Mr. Miller, there would be a very considerable majority for Mr. Thompson. The first question, then, was as to the admissibility of the Kanesville vote. He intended to look at this case partly as it appeared upon the record, and partly out of the record, because that it so happened that he was acquainted with several facts concerned with the case; and he would take the responsibility of saying—what was known all over his district, that at the time of the August election, in 1848, this Mormon population was not considered as a part of the resident population of Iowa; and up to that time the Mormon's themselves did not consider that they were a part of the resident population of Iowa—they were temporarily stopping there on the route of their emigration to the West, having been compelled to leave Illinois, and not having means to carry them to their destination; they had no intention of becoming permanent residents of the State of Iowa; they were never assessed; they never paid taxes; the civil and criminal law was never extended over them; they were in fact, (he said,) under no law; they had no commerce and no communication with the resident population of the State; they were cut off from communication with them by a desert more than one hundred and fifty miles wide.

Mr. Miller, of Iowa, the contestant, (the floor being temporarily yielded to him,) said he wished to correct the statement made by the gentleman from Iowa, that the laws of the State did not extend over these people. One of them had been indicted for a murder that was alleged to have been committed by him—the testimony relating to which was before the committee, but it had not been printed, although he had made a special request to the chairman of the committee that it should be printed.

Mr. Strong observed that he was somewhat surprised at the remark of the gentleman intimating that he had suppressed the publication of testimony, which had been submitted to the committee. He knew of no reason why he should be charged with preventing the printing of this testimony. It had been put into the hands of Mr. McGaughey to be arranged. The members of the committee arranged the testimony for the printer; he had no special supervision over it.

Mr. Miller, of Iowa, desired to ask the chairman of the committee if he had not called on him at the Irving House, and requested that this testimony should be printed, and not only that, but some other testimony to which he referred, and that he stated that he had nothing to do with it.

Mr. Strong replied that Mr. Miller had not called upon him and made any request about the printing the testimony respecting the trial referred to. He had called upon him, however, and requested that certain testimony should be printed. [What testimony it was the reporter could not understand.] And he had stated to Mr. Miller that that testimony had not been received by the committee, and that it was not at all material.

Mr. Letfler resumed, and continued at considerable length his remarks concerning this class of people — the Mormons — who had voted at Kanesville, giving an account of the character of that people, of their expulsion from Nauvoo, and of their migration through Iowa, on the western border of which State many of them, he said were compelled to remain for a length of time on account of the want of means to carry them forward to Deseret, their place of final destination. That while thus temporarily remaining in Iowa, they were induced, by certain politicians, to cast their vote for the Whig candidate. None of these people, he contended, ever designed remaining in the State of Iowa longer than was necessary to enable them to procure the means to get away. was this a class of population, he would ask, who ought to be permitted to vote? The bare fact of residence within the State for six months, he contended, was not sufficient, unless accompanied by the intention of remaining in the State and becoming a permanent resident therein. He put the case of a man detained against his will and compelled to remain for six months. Would such a man come within the spirit and meaning of the law which prescribed the qualification of voters? He put the case of members of Congress voting at the municipal elections in this city, supposing the requisites as to qualification to be the same as in Iowa, while it was notoriously their intention not to remain here a moment longer than the transaction of their business actually required them to remain. The equity of the case, he contended, was against the admission of that vote, masmuch as they could not be considered a part of the resident population of the State. He contended, moreover, that not only was equity against it, but that the law of the case was against it; and in reference to the law of the case, the first point to which he would call the attention of the House was the one which had been so ably discussed by the gentleman who preceded him in the debate, that these people were compelled to vote in a particular county, though they had never resided in that county, and that they voted there under an organization which the county commissioners had gotten up irregularly and illegally, and therefore the vote was a nullity.

But there was another point connected with the illegality of the vote, which had been touched upon by the chairman of the Committee of Elections, to which he desired also to call the attention of the House. The vote was illegal, because this board of commissioners of Monroe county failed to organize a poll under the township system, and attempted to organize one under the precinct system, which had been abolished by her. There never had been more than two systems, the precinct and the township system. The first was abolished in 1847, and the township system was substituted for it more than eighteen months prior to the election of August, 1848.

Mr. Fowler (the floor being temporarily yielded to him) said, he desired to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa, where he found the evidence, upon which to base his objections to the allowance of the Kanesville vote! He found in the report of the committee this expression: "The committee dismiss the consideration of the first, second, third, fourth, and fifth objections urged by the sitting member, against the allowance of the Kanesville vote, with the single remark, that they are not sustained by the evidence which has been presented." He would be glad if the gentleman would inform him where all this evidence, regarding the Mormons and the vote they gave in Iowa at the August election of 1848, was to be found!

Mr. Letfler replied, that the evidence was to be found in the history of the country.

Mr. Fowler. Will the gentleman have the goodness to point out to me some written evidence!

Mr. Letfler. I will refer the gentleman to the files of the "Gazette" and the "Hawkeye" newspapers published in the State of Iowa, for the years 1846–7–8.

Mr. L. then pursued still further his argument regarding the illegality of the Kanesville vote, and contended that in every point of view it ought to be rejected. He adverted to the circumstances under which these people had been brought to give their votes, assigning a special agency in the matter to Mr. Fitz Henry Warren, the present Second Assistant Postmaster General. In the course of his remarks, Mr. L. read a copy of a letter addressed to the Mormons by Orson Hyde, one of their leaders, directing them to vote as they should be instructed by Mr. Fitz Henry Warren. A piece of slander that was very current (he said) in that part of the country, was, that the possession of a certain printing press by Mr. Hyde, was the result of his good offices in procuring the Mormon vote to be cast in a particular way. A celebrated English statesmen once remarked, that if he were asked whether there was any corruption prevailing at the elections in England, he would laugh in the face of the questioner, and reply, certainly not. If any man (said Mr. L.) were to ask me if there was any fraud perpetrated in connection with that vote, I would most undoubtedly laugh in his face, and rep'y, certainly not.

The allotted hour here expired, and Mr. Evans, of Maryland, obtained the floor.

Mr. Evans, of Maryland, considered nearly all that had been said by Mr. Letfler extraneous, not being based upon the evidence, but upon his own knowledge, the statements of the Burlington "Hawkeye" and "Gazette," and other such authority. The gentlemen had seen fit to travel out of his way to make a violent attack upon the Mormons, and had declared that they had temporarily stopped in Iowa, while upon their way to California. He (Mr. E) referred to the testimony showing that that people had opened farms, built houses, mills, &c., and had plainly manifested by their actions the animus manendi — thus entitling them to vote. He remarked at some length upon the bitterness of feeling exhibited by Mr. Letfler against the Mormons, and intimated that it arose from the fact that their votes were at that election cast for the candidate of the Whig party, whereas when, in Missouri, where they voted with the Democrats, they had been courted by the gentleman's party. He read a letter of Judge Mason, of Iowa, and referred to other evidences to sustain his explanation of the reasons for the course of that gentleman, and for the course, conformable thereto, of a portion of the Democratic party in that State.

He proceeded to consider the question of the admissibility of the voters of Kanesville, and took the ground that the evidence was full, entire, conclusive, that they were legal voters in Kanesville, and that they were entitled to vote in Monroe county. He said the report of the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Strong) based the argument for the rejection of the Kanesville votes, on the ground that Kanesville was not due west from Monroe county, and therefore not entitled to be counted. He referred to the evidence to show that it was the common understanding of that entire county, both Whigs and Democrats, both residents at Kanesville and in Monroe county — that Kanesville was attached to Monroe county; that both Democrats and Whigs did vote there as the lawful place; and he argued that, such being the case, their votes were legally entitled to be received and canvassed in Monroe county, even if subsequent developements proved that Kanesville was not due west of Monroe. But he contended that there was no evidence that Kanesville was north or west of Monroe—the only evidence relied upon being a survey which the sitting member had caused to be run, and which, having given no notice to the contestant, he (Mr. E.) said could not be received as evidence. He intimated, moreover, that the line was loosely and unscientifically run, and discarded it as in all respects unworthy to be received as evidence. He referred also to the conceded point, that the people of Appanoose county had taken jurisdiction and indicted Gheen for a murder committed at Traders' Point, (which was but eight miles south of Kanesville,) from which judicial determination it necessarily resulted that Kanesville belonged to Monroe county. He contended that one hundred miles of wilderness intervening between Monroe county and Kanesville, the Legislature of Iowa could not have intended, nor could it be reasonable, to construe the law with the same strictness with which it would be applied in an old settled country where metes and bounds are fully established, especially when by such technicality they would exclude a large number of citizens from the privilege of the elective franchise.

He maintained the validity of the law which divided Polk county from Boone county, on the ground that it was not a separation of a county; and held, as a consequence, that the votes of Boone township, Boone county, should be disallowed in the canvass of Polk county.

Excluding the votes, then, of Boone township, Boone county, from the official canvass, and adding thereto those of Kanesville, White Oak, Chariton and Wells, the result he arrived at exhibited a majority for the contestant of 59 votes.

He alluded to the attack made yesterday by Mr. McDonald upon Truman Smith and Fitz Henry Warren, for their alledged interference in this election, and read from the testimony conclusively showing, he contended, there had been no such interference on their part, but, on the other side, that the Democrats had made free use of money to affect the election, and that it had been dispensed by the sitting member. He also commented with some severity upon the evidence, tracing the course of the poll-book of Kanesville in its rejection by the clerk of Monroe county, its travels in the carpet bag of Hall, the attorney of the sitting member, and its remaining in the hands of the sitting member, who, while it was in his possession, was putting in the technical objection to receiving the certified copy.

Contested Election.

We received the following by Telegraph Monday evening.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 29, 1850.

Congress has sent Thompson and myself back to run the election over.

I will speak in Keokuk this day two weeks. D. F. MILLER.

By the above, it will be seen that the Locofoco House Representatives have in a sneaking and cowardly spirit, attempted to carry out the bold rascality, which was commenced in this District by the stealing of the Poll Books of the Kanesville precinct.

It is clear that either Miller or Thompson was elected by the voters of this District in August 1848. There can be no possibility of mistake as to this proposition. And it is equally certain that the fact was undeniable and well known to the House of Representatives. Had Thompson been the individual elected, he would have had a decision in his favor. But Miller was the man, and so the election is referred back to the people.

To subserve party purposes, the House has permitted Thompson to occupy a seat for seven months, against every principle of justice, and as they now admit, without a particle of right to it. And yet, when they see clearly that the right is with Miller, instead of giving him the seat, of which he has been deprvied by theft and fraud, they STULTIFY themselves, and attempt to befool the people by declaring that nobody was elected to Congress from this district.

Surely the people are not so blind as to be deceived in this manner, nor so perverted by party prejudice as to aid in carrying out this iniquitous scheme of reckless politicians.

The people has no security for their dearest liberties and rights, save that which rests in the inviolability of the Ballot Box. If they countenance and encourage scoundrels in the profanation of this sacred palladium of republican institutions, their rights. It becomes voters, jealous of their rights and watchful of their liberties, to rebuke the Poll Book thieves, and their aiders and abettors in Congress by a triumphant majority.

Let the rallying cry go forth—Hurrah for Miller. Down with the Poll Book thieves!

Open the Canvass Saturday week with a rousing gathering of the people at this place, and keep the Ball rolling on till it shall have crushed in its course, all who would thwart the will of the people, by robbing them of their votes.—[Whig and Register.

It is rumored, that the locofoco candidate for State Treasurer, Mr. Israel Kister, is the veritable thief, who stole the Kanesville Poll Books. If this rumor should prove to be well founded, let the people look out for their funds. He was nominated by a majority of one vote over Mr. Hughes of this City, a gentleman well qualified to fill the office, to which this man Kister is aspiring.

This is the Man.

Kister, of Davis county, the Locofoco nominee for State Treasurer, is the same Skeezicks, who it is generally believed stole the Kanesville Poll Books, and gave them to J. C. Hall. It will be seen by Mr. Hall's testimony published by order of Congress, that he admits that the missing Poll Books were found in his possession. We have been looking ever since, to see Kister rewarded for this base act; and none need be surprised, or ask why such a man was chosen to fill so responsible an office!—Those who do the dirty work for Dodge & Co., have to be rewarded with officers, if the character of the State, and interests of the people have to be sacrificed to accomplish it.

Barber the Clerk of Monroe county, who Dodge attempted to bolster up by calling on a Locofoco meeting to give him nine cheers, has been repudiated by all parties, and suffered to go into the solitude of private life, "unwept and unsung." And, can it be possible that the people of Iowa will cast their vote for his equally guilty accomplice. The nominees for Congress, and all the nominees for State offices are of the Old Hunker or Dodge faction, and were placed in nomination by order of Dodge for their fealty to him; and the people of Pottawatamie County may thank him and his tools, for their past wrongs and present situation. — [Des Moine Courier.

The dates from San Francisco are to the 15th of May. The reports from the mining districts north and south continue to be favorable; the general state of health at these places is also good.

The fire alluded to occurred the 4th of May; the alarm proceeded from the U. S. House, on Portsmouth Square, and by the time the people were enabled to leave their beds, the flames spread to the adjoining buildings on either side, destroying El Dorado and Delmonico's, and soon every house, except two, on the block between Clay, Washington, Kearney and Montgomery streets, was destroyed. The fire extended also along Kearny street, and that portion of Washington street, opposite the square, and in order to stay its progress, every house from Washington to Jackson streets was torn down. A block between and towards the bay fared but little better, and out of the three blocks in the centre of the city, but seven buildings are standing.

A mass of gold and quartz, weighing 16 lbs, was found near the Mariposa and sold for $16,000. Several recent and important discoveries have been made on the Mocclume; out of one hole there was taken in two days, $4,000 worth of the precious metal; some lumps have likewise been found—nearly every man is making an ounce a day. The miners generally have done well, and more gold may be expected in the coming six months than has altogether been received since the commencement of mining. Chagres and Panama were healthy.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, June 15, 1850.

EDITOR OF THE GUARDIAN: — Dear Sir: In the trial of Brodie, spoken of by the correspondent of the Peoples Organ, St. Louis, Mo., there was not a Mormon engaged. The emigrants, and some of them from Linn County, were the principle actors; he was tried, condemned, and had he not paid the young man he assaulted, twenty-five dollars, he would have received twenty-five lashes. All such persons, or their friends and abetors must keep entirely clear of this County, or they will receive similar treatment—dislike it who may.

Yours Respectfully.

CHOLERA.—We learn that cholera from the latest papers in St. Louis was on the increase. It also has appeared at Nashville, Tenn.

We return our thanks to Col. Thos. L. Kane, for a copy of his interesting discourse delivered before the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, on the history of the Mormons. We shall publish it in our next.

AN ARTFUL FORGERY.— A most artful forgery was perpetrated yesterday upon the Bank of the State of Missouri. The facts, as reported to us, are these: A few days ago an individual called upon Mr. Edward P. Tesson, Broker, on Main street, about the time of closing and assigning some sufficient reason, purchased Mr. T.'s check on the Bank for two hundred dollars. By this check, it is supposed, he acquired the means of counterfeiting or imitating Mr. Tesson's signature. On Tuesday evening just as Mr. Tesson was closing his banking house, he called and again purchased a check for $210 for which he paid bills of the Bank. This check was numbered 279, and it is supposed the object in calling so late was, to get the last number of the checks of the house. Yesterday morning this check for $210, and another, No. 280, for twenty-two hundred dollars, were presented by a negro at the counter of the Bank, and paid. The latter was a forgery, and in the course of the day it was discovered that Mr. Tesson had drawn no such check.

The rogue, whoever he may be, has certainly managed the matter very adroitly, and by the interposition of the negro, whose testimony would be of no avail against him, has succeeded in swindling the Bank out of $2,200, with a fair chance of escaping conviction.

POETRY.

For the Guardian.

Hail to the Land, &c., 4th July, 1850.

Hail to the land, where our fathers are laid,
To our own native soil;
Where in childhood we have strayed,
And in manhood's riper years, we have toiled.

Hail to the land where freedom first reigned:
And whence anarchy fled;
Where oppression and priestcraft were slayed,
And tyrany wept for her dead.

Hail to the land where righteousness reigns,
And truth spreads her wings;
Where Saints shall inherit the blessings in full,
That Faith, Hope and Charity brings.

EVER MONT.

Slander.

'Tis wondrous strange, and yet 'tis true,
That some folks take delight
The deeds of other men to view,
As if their own were right.

And if a piece of news comes out,
They'll eagerly pursue it;
Then hand the charming dish about,
And add a little to it.

Each fault they'll try to magnify,
Yet seeming to bemoan,
The mote within a brother's eye,
Are blinded to their own.

And if a brother chance to stray,
Or fortune on him frown;
Tho' humbled in the dust he lay,
The text is "keep him down."

They'll preach up penance with a sigh,
To cure, or nothing can—
Sufferings are good, I'll not deny,
But not when sent by man.

Each worthy deed is now forgot,
As if not worth retaining;
But O! let failings fill the pot,
And slander sucks the draining.

Unto the dregs she draws it out,
Delighted with her labors,
Then bear the charming swill about,
To treat her thirsty neighbors.

'Neath friendship's mask she often lurks,
And smiling, fawns around you;
Concealed, she more securely works,
And kisses, but to wound you.

Detested pest of social joy,
Thou spoiler of life's pleasures;
Like Sampson's foxes would destroy,
What's more than all our treasures.

The True Man.

I love the man that dare to lift
His voice for the struggling poor:
The man that will open his heart, nor close
Against the beggar his door.

Oh! give me the hand that firmly stands,
Where the storm begins to lower!
A hand that will never shrink, if grasped
In misfortune's darkest hour.

MISCELLANY.

Adam Crotch, Or, a Married Philosopher's Crotchets.

When a philosopher marries, all the people of his acquaintance combine to laugh at him. Why? Is there anything incompatible in philosophy with philogyny; in the love of wisdom with the love of woman? "The wisest man the world ever saw," appears to have thought otherwise; and Socrates, as well as Solomon, was a husband. When Adam Crotch, finding, like his first father and namesake, that it was not good to be alone, contracted matrimony with Amelia Smith, was that any reason why all the other Smiths — Amelia's kinsfolk excepted — and Joneses, and Browns, and Tompkinses, comprising the world he moved in, should, simply because Adam was reputed a philosopher, make merry at the expense of his father's son? It is true that the marriage of Adam was a step inconsistent with that philosophy which placed the summum bonum in the main chance. He married purely for those reasons that, according to Uncle Toby, are "written in the Common-Prayer-Book:" which include, we believe, no reference to the Three Per Cents.

As we have styled Crotch a philosopher, it behooves us to explain what were his pretensions to that character. They consisted theoretically in a considerable amount of literary, scientific, metaphysical knowledge, and practically in a systematic course of life, based mainly on the principle of enjoying himself to the extent of his means, and repressing all desires that would exceed their limits. Thus Adam, who, like many other philosophers, was rather fond of smoking, though in the abstract he preferred Havana cigars to the common weed, was wont, adapting his taste to his finances, to content himself with a clay pipe. It was further a maxim with Adam Crotch, in economising, to sacrifice the lesser enjoyment to the greater, and always to deny himself what he could best spare.

Now there are two words to every bargain; and Adam Crotch did not plunge into matrimony without first having inquired what Amelia would say to the plan of life which he had chalked out. Her answers were most satisfactory. When Adam explained to her the difference between a real and a factitious gratification, and asked whether, content with true happiness, she could despise its illusory phantom, she would reply, "Oh yes!" with an enthusiasm which none but young ladies who are in love can pronounce these words with. Their marriage took place, but not altogether quietly. There are two matters connected with the event, on which they had a slight difference of opinion at the onset. All other preliminaries having been settled, "Adam, dear," said the betrothed, "where shall we order our wedding cake, and whom shall we send cards to?"

"A wedding cake!" exclaimed Crotch, astonished. "Cards! my dear girl, what do you want with either?"

"Oh! we must have them, of course, love," she replied.

"Why of course?" asked the philosopher. "You are not fond of sweets, neither am I, and the very few friends we are going to visit we can write to."

"But they will expect," urged the young lady, our cards and a piece of cake. We should consider others, you know, Adam."

"Yes, my dear," said Crotch, "of course we should; but what benefit will anybody derive from our sending them a mouthful of plum-cake? What is it to eat? There would be something in a large lump; but that is out of the question. As to cards, they are wholly unnecessary. I object to them on principle, as conventional humbug, dictated by the mere caprice of society."

"Still," pleaded Amelia, "we had better do what is usual."

"Granted," he returned, "when there is no particular reason to the contrary, I admit your abstract proposition. But, in this instance, we shall lose money. It will cost us two or three guineas at least; and for what! No pleasure to ourselves or anybody else."

"But surely we can afford it, dear."

"Nobody can, that is, ought, to afford mere waste. Not a farthing ought to be so squandered. It had better be given away in charity."

"But people will be offended, dearest, if we don't send them what they will expect."

"Then let them be offended my girl!" exclaimed Adam Crotch; why should we regard unreasonable people?"

"Oh, you know, Adam, "she answered, "it isn't everybody that's like you; and it is best not to make enemies, isn't it?"

"Humph!" ejaculated the philosopher, musing, as if this last consideration had some weight with him. "there's something in that. Well — come — we'll e'en follow the ways of this absurd world for once. But Amelia, mind one thing; we'll have none of this silly silver twist about our cards. That is a piece of fiddle-faddle, not only imbecile, but, to be disgustingly vulgar."

"Do you think so!" was Amelia's answer, in a tone which rather inclined her lover to doubt whether her advocacy of cards and bride-cake arose from motives strictly of policy. Bride-cake and cards, however, though by no means with the good will of Crotch, were ordered.

The paradise to which Adam Crotch led his wife was the second heaven of a decent lodging-house, otherwise called a two-pair back. This, however, was to be merely a temporary abode, to serve until they could find a small house, commensurate with their circumstances, in one of the suburbs of the town. With such a dwelling they were soon provided; and now arose the question of furnishing it, whereon the philosopher discoursed as follows:—

"The essential points, my dear, to look to in choosing furniture are, comfort and utility. We cannot sit comfortably in an inconvenient chair; but so long as the chair is convenient, its material matters little. We may apply the same principle to beds, tables, and fire-irons."

"Certainly," answered Mrs. Crotch.

"Not but that," continued Adam, "there is a certain pleasure derived by the sense of vision from handsome furniture, and if this can be obtained without financial embarrassment, well and good; but the annoyance at being hampered in circumstances is much more than equivalent to that gratification."

"There is no doubt about that, dear," said she.

"Well, now you see love," he pursued, "we can get a set of deal chairs and tables for a comparative trifle; we can cover the chairs with what-d'ye-call-it, and make cushions for them ourselves. We can put oil cloths on the tables and paint their legs, which will make them look quite well enough; and a floor-cloth of green baize will be just as good as the best Turkey carpet."

"My dear, what are you talking about?" demanded his wife in amazement.

"Why that instead of mahogany and rosewood, and fine carpets, in which there is no essential advantage, we will have deal chairs and tables, and green baize."

"I never heard of such a thing!" exclaimed the lady.

"Don't you see that by so doing we shall have the money to eat and drink, love, and to be enabled to save some over in case of a rainy day?"

Oh! you're joking, Adam," she answered.

"Joking?" he repeated. "Not at all."

"Deal chairs and tables, and green baize carpet?" she exclaimed. "Horrible!"

"What is the matter? You admitted my proposition with regard to the furniture in the abstract," said the philosopher.

"Oh, nonsense," she retorted. "Bother the abstracts."

"Amelia! My dear!" exclaimed the astonished husband.

"I have no patience with you!" she cried.

Adam first started, then whistled, and then sat himself down biting his nails, whilst his irritated spouse overwhelmed him with upbraidings.

The philosopher was fain to make his peace by conceding the point as to the upholstery, and the house, amid his suppressed groans, was furnished in fashionable style.

Among other domestic exigencies that soon arose was that of a set of dinner-plates. Adam, this time without consulting Amelia, went and ordered a service of pewter. The plates were sent home. No sooner did Mrs. Crotch behold them than, seizing one, she dashed it indignantly on the ground. It was unbroken.

"See," observed the philosopher, with mild equanimity, "the advantage of pewter over china!"

"Oh, nonsense!" exclaimed Amelia.

"It is not nonsense," returned Adam. "What is there in a plate? Nothing—but food upon it—that is of any consequence. What objection is there in dining off pewter!"

"I can't bear it," she replied.

"But why?"

"Because I can't."

"Now don't you see," reasoned Adam, "how absurdly you talk. You can't bear it because you can't. Does it hurt your eyes or make your head ache? Does it pain you in any way?"

"I don't like it—and that's enough."

"No, my good girl, urged Crotch, it is not enough. When we say that we can't bear a thing, we mean that it produces an intolerable sensation. What intolerable sensation does a pewter plate produce in you?"

Such were the scenes that were enacted almost daily between Adam Crotch and his helpmate. He wanted her to wear stuff dresses; she would have silk. One of their most serious disputes arose on the subject of cotton pocket handkerchiefs.

"What earthly reason," he demanded, "could there exist for having any other!"

She answered, "Every reason," but gave none.

Reasons, however, she did give, occasionally for her wishes. She wanted a white bonnet. Why! Because Mrs. Wilson had one. She desired to have venetian blinds for the parlor window. Wherefore! Such an embellishment had been added to Mrs. Blake's.

In the course of time Adam had sons and daughters. His philosophy encountered trials. Disquiet and doctor's bills he was prepared for; but he was not prepared for the requisition of monthly nurses. He had not counted on supernumerary napkins, bibs, caps, pinafores, ribbons, feathers, frocks and trousers. Occasional disturbances at his studies he expected, but he never thought he should be called from his books to rock a cradle. An expedient which he adopted to lighten this especial burthen should be recorded. It consisted in the adaptation of a smoke-jack to produce the required motion; but this arrangement was continually interfered with by the cook.

His calculations thus confounded, the system thus upset, his scheme of domestic happiness thus baffled, what was the philosopher to do! He had no alternative but to cut down his own expenses to the lowest possible mark. He relinquished the solace of his pipe—he drank his tea without milk or sugar—he lived on the smallest amount of food that would sustain nature!

Our latest account of Adam Crotch represents him as meditating some scheme for the enlargement of his means. He intends to devote those faculties heretofore employed on speculation to business. Would that he could discover that stone, whose acquisition has so long been the philosopher's object! In the mean time, let philosophers in general, and those of the Crotch school in particular, about to marry, study attentively that chapter in the book of human nature whose special subject is woman.—[Douglass Jerrold's Magazine.

Love Letter.

We clip the following from one of our exchanges, for the benefit of any of our readers who may happen to be placed in a situation with that of the unfortunate swain herein mentioned:

DEAR SWEET:—Oh, my love of love, clarified honey and oil of citron, white loaf sugar of my hopes, and molasses of my expectations! you have been absent from me three whole days. The sun is dark at midday—the moon and stars are black when thou art absent. Thy step is the music of the sphere! and the wind of thy gown when you pass by, is a zepher from the garden of paradise in the spring time of early flowers! I kissed you when we last met, and my whole frame was filled with sweetness! One of your curls touched me on the nose, and that organ was transmuted into loaf sugar. Oh, spice of spices—garden of delights! send me a lock of your hair—send me anything that your blessed fingers hath touched, and I will go raving mad with extacy! One look from thy bright eyes would transmute me incontinently into the third heaven! Your words are molten pearl dropping from your mouth! My heart blazes at the thought of thee! My brain is an everlasting fire. The blood burns and scorches my veins and vitals as it passes through them. Oh, come, most delightful of delights, and with your seraphic breath, breathe upon me! When you do come, be sure and bring that two shillings which you borrowed of me, as I want to buy some tobacco.

A VALUABLE CARGO.—The whale ship Coral, Capt. Seabury, from the Pacific Ocean, arrived at New Bedford on the 12th inst., with a cargo of 3,000 barrels of sperm oil, which, at the present prices, is valued at about $113,000. The Coral has been absent from port about three years and a half. This is said to be the most valuable cargo of sperm oil ever entered in one vessel at any port in the world.

A CHURCH BLOWN UP.—A very singular piece of incendiarism occurred in the town of Greenwich, Mass., last week. A meeting house was blown up by a mine of powder underneath: the whole interior of the building being destroyed. The hearse house was burnt, also, with the hearse within it. These outrages are supposed to have been perpetrated in revenge for temperance movements by the church, or persons connected with it.

PHONOGRAPHY.—A lazy boy out in Indiana spells Andrew Jackson thus:—&ru Jaxn.

"A correspondent" of the Boston Post, wishes to know whether the body that Mr. Gliddon unrolled, was not that of Spurius Mummius, a distinguished Roman, who flourished in the time of Cicero!

The Emperor of China died on the 25th of February. He is succeeded by his fourth son, the eldest survivor, a youth nineteen years old, who will reign under the title of Szching. It is said that this change will be of advantage to English interests, by bringing KETING into a more influential position. The Overland Register remarks, in anticipation, that the legalization of the sale of opium both as a source of revenue in helping the new government through its formidable financial difficulties, and towards settling a long vexed and dangerous question, will probably be one of the first measures submitted to the new sovereign.

Another incident mentioned, is the capture of three piratical vessels by Her Majesty's steamer Reynard on the 23d inst. It occurred at the entrance of the bay, and within sight of the western point of the city of Victoria. Three junks and fourteen prisoners were brought in.

Two trading steamers, one English the other American, have been prohibited from carrying cargo into Canton river. This is looked upon by the representives of both powers as a breach of treaty on the part of the Chinese authorities, and pending the settlement of the question the two steamers are lying on demurrage.—[N. Y. Courier.

Fair dealing and Punctuality Must Succeed.

Arrive at Independence in 60 days thereafter by 6 P. M.;

Proposals to carry the mail upon the most direct route from Independence, by Salt Lake, to Oregon City will be considered; also, seperate proposals for so much of the foregoing service, either on the most direct road or by the forts named, as lies between Independence and Salt Lake and between Salt Lake and Oregon City, will be considered; also, for service to Salt Lake and back twelve times a year, leaving Independence and Salt Lake on the first day of each month and arriving at the other end of the route on the last day of same month; and also for eight trips a year.

Proposals to commence the route at Kane, Iowa, or at St. Joseph's, Missouri, instead of Independence, will be considered.

For notes see general advertisement and the following, viz:

FORM FOR A BID

Where no change from advertisement is contemplated by the bidder:

"I (or we, as the case may be) [here write the name or names in full] of [here state the residence or residences] hereby propose to carry the mail on No,——from——to——as often as the advertisement requires, in the time stated in the schedules, and by the following mode of conveyance, to wit: [Here state how it is to be conveyed,] for the annual sum of $——."

Dated

Form of a guaranty to accompany each bid.

"The undersigned [here insert the name of the guarantor or guarantors] guaranties that [here insert the name of the bidder or names of bidders, as the case may be] if his (or their) bid for carrying the mail from —— to —— be accepted by the Postmaster General, shall enter into an obligation prior to the first day of August next, with good and sufficient sureties, to perform the service proposed."

Dated

Form of certificate.

The undersigned, postmaster of ——, certified that the guarantors above named are sufficient and able to make good their guaranty.

Dated

The bid should be sent under seal, addressed to the First Assistant Postmaster General, with "Mail Proposals in [name the State and Territory,"] written on the face of the letter; and should be despatched in time to be received by or before the 1st day of July next at 10 o'clock A. M. It should be guarantied, and the sufficiency of the guarantors should be duly certified.

A bidder may offer, where the transportation called for in the advertisement is difficult or impracticable at certain seasons, to substitute an inferior mode of conveyance or to intermit service a specified number of days, weeks, or months. He may propose to omit an office that is inaccessible, or is not on the stage road, the railway, or at a steamboat landing, as the case may be; or he may offer to substitute an inferior mode of supply in such cases. He may propose different days and hours of departure and arrival, provided no more running time is asked, and is obvious that no mail connexion or other public accommodation is prejudiced. He may ask for more running time to the trip, during a specified number of days, at certain seasons of peculiar bad roads; but beyond these changes a proposal for service different from the advertisement will prevent its being considered in competition with a regular bid not set aside for extravagance; and where a bid contains any of the above alterations their disadvantages will be estimated in comparing it with other proposals.

NEW GOODS!

A. SORLEY,

St. Joseph, Missouri,

IS now receiving a splendid lot of SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS, of every description, of the Latest Style and Patterns. And is prepared to offer Great Inducements to all who may favor him with a call. His stock comprises a general assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, and Bonnets. Also, a large and well selected assortment of Iron and nails.

My plan is to sell for CASH ONLY, and at a small advance on cost; the rate charged for goods at my store, will contrast largely with prices paid by those who buy on time. Many place an undue importance on the credit system, unmindful of the fact, that constitutes a nominal profit, yet when compared with the invariable cash system it is a positive loss.

Selling on time is hazardous under the best circumstances. Those who sell on time must buy on time. Therefore, I will say to my old customers and the public generally, that you will save much by calling and examining my Stock of Goods, before purchasing. A. SORLEY.

THE MORMONS.

A Discourse delivered before the Historical Society of Pennsylvania: March 26, 1850.

BY THOMAS L. KANE.

A few years ago, ascending the Upper Mississippi in the Autumn, when its waters were low, I was compelled to travel by land past the region of the Rapids. My road lay through the Half-Breed Tract, a fine section of Iowa, which the unsettled state of its landtitles had appropriated as a sanctuary for comers, horse thieves, and other outlaws. I had left my steamer at Keokuk, at the foot of the Lower Fall, to hire a carriage, and to contend for some fragments of a dirty meal with the swarming flies, the only scavengers of the locality. From this place to where the deep water of the river returns, my eye wearied to see everywhere sordid, vagabond and idle settlers; and a country marred, without being improved, by their careless hands.

I was descending the last hillside upon my journey, when a landscape in delightful contrast broke upon my view. Half encircled by a bend of the river, a beautiful city lay glittering in the fresh morning sun; its bright new dwellings, set in cool green gardens, ranging up around a stately dome-shaped hill, which was crowned by a noble marble edifice, whose high tapering spire was radiant with white and gold. The city appeared to cover several miles; and beyond it, in the back ground, there rolled off a fair country, chequered by the careful lines of fruitful husbandry. The unmistakeable marks of industry, enterprise and educated wealth, everywhere, made the scene one of singular and most striking beauty.

It was a natural impulse to visit this inviting region. I procured a skiff, and rowing across the river, landed at the chief wharf of the city. No one met me there. I looked, and saw no one. I could hear no one move; though the quiet everywhere was such that I heard the flies buzz, and the water-ripples break against the shallow of the beach. I walked through the solitary streets. The town lay as in a dream, under some deadening spell of loneliness, from which I almost feared to wake it. For plainly it had not slept long. There was no grass growing up in the paved ways. Rains had not entirely washed away the prints of dusty footsteps.

Yet I went about unchecked. I went into empty workshops, ropewalks and smithies. The spinner's wheel was idle; the carpenter had gone from his work-bench and shavings, his unfinished sash and casing. Fresh bark was in the tanner's vat, and the fresh-chopped lightwood stood piled against the baker's oven. The blacksmith's shop was cold; but his coal heap and ladling pool and crooked waterhorn were all there, as if he had just gone off for a holiday. No work people anywhere looked to know my errand. If I went into the gardens, clinking the wicket-latch loudly after me, to pull the marygolds, heart's-ease and lady-slippers, and draw a drink with the water sodden well-bucket and its noisy chain; or, knocking off with my stick the tall heavy-headed dahlias and sunflowers, hunted over the beds for cucumbers and love-apples,—no one called out to me from any opened window, or dog sprang forward to bark an alarm. I could have supposed the people hidden in the houses, but the doors were unfastened; and when at last I timidly entered them, I found dead ashes white upon the hearths, and had to tread a tiptoe, as if walking down the aisle of a country church, to avoid rousing irreverent echoes from the naked floors.

On the outskirts of the town was the city grave yard. But there was no record of Plague there, nor did it in anywise differ much from other Protestant American cemeteries. Some of the mounds were not long sodded; some of the stones were newly set, their dates recent, and their black inscriptions glossy in the mason's hardly dried lettering ink. Beyond the graveyard, out in the fields, I saw, in one spot hard-by where the fruited boughs of a young orchard had been roughly torn down, the still smouldering embers of a barbecue fire, that had been constructed of rails from the fencing round it. It was the latest sign of life there. Fields upon fields of heavy-headed yellow grain lay rotting ungathered upon the ground. No one was at hand to take in their rich harvest. As far as the eye could reach, they stretched away—they, sleeping too in the hazy air of Autumn.

Only two portions of the city seemed to suggest the import of this mysterious solitude. On the southern suburb, the houses looking out upon the country showed, by their splintered woodwork and walls battered to the foundation, that they had lately been the mark of a destructive cannonade. And in and around the splendid Temple, which had been the chief object of my admiration, armed men were barracked, surrounded by their stacks of musketry and pieces of heavy ordnance. These challenged me to render an account of myself, and why I had had the temerity to cross the water without a written permit from a leader of their band.

Though these men were generally more or less under the influence of ardent spirits; after I had explained myself as a passing stranger, they seemed anxious to gain my good opinion. They told me the story of the Dead City: that it had been a notable manufacturing and commercial mart, sheltering over 20,000 persons; that they had waged war with its inhabitants for several years, and had been finally successful only a few days before my visit, in an action fought in front of the ruined suburb; after which, they had driven them forth at the point of the sword. The defence, they said, had been obstinate, but gave way on the third day's bombardment. They boasted greatly of their prowess, especially in this Battle, as they called it; but I discovered they were not of one mind as to certain of the exploits that had distinguished it; one of which, as I remember, was, that they had slain a father and his son, a boy of fifteen, not long residents of the fated city, whom they admitted to have borne a character without reproach.

They also conducted me inside the massive sculptured walls of the curious Temple, in which they said the banished inhabitants were accustomed to celebrate the mystic rites of an unhallowed worship. They particularly pointed out to me certain features of the building, which, having been the peculiar objects of a former superstitious regard, they had as matter of duty sedulously defiled and defaced. The reputed sites of certain shrines they had thus particularly noticed, and various sheltered chambers, in one of which was a deep well, constructed they believed with a dreadful design. Beside these, they led me to see a large and deep chiselled marble vase or basin, supported upon twelve oxen, also of marble, and of the size of life, of which they told some romantic stories. They said, the deluded persons, most of whom were immigrants from a great distance, believed their Deity countenanced their reception here of a baptism of regeneration, as proxies for whomsoever they held in warm affection in the countries from which they had come: That here parents "went into the water" for their lost children, children for their parents, widows for their spouses, and young persons for their lovers: That thus the Great Vase came to be for them associated with all dear and distant memories, and was therefore the object, of all others in the building, to which they attached the greatest degree of idolatrous affection. On this account the victors had so diligently desecrated it, as to render the apartment in which it was contained too noisome to abide in.

They permitted me also to ascend into the steeple, to see where it had been lightning-struck on the Sabbath before, and to look out, East and South, on wasted farms like those I had seen near the City, extending till they were lost in the distance. Here, in the face of the pure day, close to the scar of the Divine wrath left by the thunderbolt, were fragments of food, cruises of liquor and broken drinking vessels, with a bass drum and a steam-boat signal bell, of which I afterwards learned with pain.

It was after nightfall, when I was ready to cross the river on my return. The wind had freshened since the sunset; and the water beating roughly into my little boat, I headed higher up the stream than the point I had left in the morning, and landed where a faint glimmering light invited me to steer.

Here, among the dock and rushes, sheltered only by the darkness, without roof between them and the sky, I came upon a crowd of several hundred human creatures, whom my movements roused from uneasy slumber upon the ground.

Passing these on my way to the light, I found it came from a tallow candle in a paper funnel-shade, such as is used by street venders of apples and pea-nuts, and which flaring and glittering away in the bleak air off the water, shone flickeringly on the emaciated features of a man in the last stage of a bilious remittent fever. They had done their best for him. Over his head was something like a tent, made of a sheet or two, and he rested on a bed partially ripped open old straw mattress, with a hair sofa cushion under his head for a pillow. His gaping jaw and glazing eye told how short a time he would monopolize these luxuries; though a seemingly bewildered and excited person, who might have been his wife, seemed to find hope in occasionally forcing him to swallow awkwardly measured sips of the tepid river water from a burned and battered bitter smelling tin coffee-pot. Those who knew better had furnished the apothecary he needed—a toothless old bald-head, whose manner had the repulsive dullness of a familiar with death scenes. He, so long as I remained, mumbled in his patient's ear a monotonous and melancholy prayer, between the pauses of which I heard the hiccup and sobbing of two little girls, who were sitting up on a piece of drift wood outside.

Dreadful, indeed, was the suffering of these forsaken beings. Cowed and cramped by cold and sunburn, alternating as each weary day and night dragged on, they were, almost all of them, the crippled victims of disease. They were there because they had no homes, nor hospital nor poor-house nor friends to offer them any. They could not satisfy the feeble cravings of their sick: they had not bread to quiet the fractious hunger cries of their children. Mothers and babes, daughters and grandparents, all of them alike, were bivouacked in tatters, wanting even covering to comfort those whom the sick shiver of fever was searching to the marrow.

These were Mormons, famishing, in Lee county, Iowa, in the fourth week of the month of September, in the year of our Lord 1846. The city,—it was Nauvoo, Illinois. The Mormons were the owners of that city, and the smiling country round. And those who had stopped their ploughs, who had silenced their hammers, their axes, their shuttles and their workshop wheels; those who had put out their fires, who had eaten their food, spoiled their orchards, and trampled under foot their thousands of acres of unharvested bread; these,—were the keepers of their dwellings, the carousers in their Temple,—whose drunken riot insulted the ears of their dying.

I think it was as I turned from the wretched nightwatch of which I have spoken, that I first listened to the sounds of revel of a party of the guard within the city. Above the distant hum of the voices of many, occasionally arose distinct the loud oath-tainted exclamation, and the falsely intonated scrap of vulgar song;—but lest this requiem should go unheeded, every now and then, when their boisterous orgies strove to attain a sort of extatic climax, a cruel spirit of insulting frolic carried some of them up into the high belfry of the Temple steeple, and there, with the wicked childishness of inebriates, they whooped, and shrieked, and beat the drum that I had seen, and rang in charivaric unison their loud-tongued steam-boat bell.

They were, all told, not more than six hundred and forty persons who were thus lying on the river flats. But the Mormons in Nauvoo and its dependencies had been numbered the year before at over twenty thousand. Where were they? They had last been seen, carrying in mournful trains their sick and wounded, halt and blind, to disappear beyond the western horizon, pursuing the phantom of another home. Hardly anything else was known of them: and people asked with curiosity, What had been their fate—what their fortunes?

I purpose making these questions the subject of my Lecture. Since the expulsion of the Mormons, to the present date, I have been intimately conversant with the details of their history. But I shall invite your attention most particularly to an account of what happened to them during their first year in the Wilderness; because at this time more than any other, being lost to public view, they were the subjects of fable and misconception. Happily, it was during this period I myself moved with them; and earned, at dear price, as some among you are aware, my right to speak with authority of them and their character, their trials, achievments and intentions.

The party encountered by me at the river shore were the last of the Mormons that left the city. They had all of them engaged the year before, that they would vacate their homes, and seek some other place of refuge. It had been the condition of a truce between them and their assailants; and as an earnest of their good faith, the chief elders and some others of obnoxious standing, with their families, were to set out for the West in the Spring of 1846. It had been stipulated in return, that the rest of the Mormons might remain behind in the peaceful enjoyment of their Illinois abode, until their leaders, with their exploring party, could with all diligence select for them a new place of settlement beyond the Rocky Mountains, in California, or elsewhere, and until they had opportunity to dispose to the best advantage of the property which they were then to leave.

Some renewed symptoms of hostile feeling had, however, determined the pioneer party to begin their work before the Spring. It was, of course, anticipated that this would be a perilous service; but it was regarded as a matter of self-denying duty. The ardor and emulation of many, particularly the devout and the young, were stimulated by the difficulties it involved; and the ranks of the party were therefore filled up with volunteers from among the most effective and responsible members of the sect. They began their march in midwinter; and by the beginning of February, nearly all of them were on the road, many of their wagons having crossed the Mississippi on the ice.

Under the most favoring circumstances, an expedition of this sort, undertaken at such a season of the year, could scarcely fail to be disastrous.* But the pioneer company had to set out in haste, and were very imperfectly supplied with necessaries. The cold was intense. They moved in the teeth of keen-edged north-west winds, such as sweep down the Iowa peninsula from the ice-bound regions of the timber-shaded Slave Lake and Lake of the Woods: on the Bald Prairie there, nothing above the dead grass breaks their free course over the hard rolled hills. Even along the scattered water courses, where they broke the thick ice to give their cattle drink, the annual autumn fires had left little wood of value. The party, therefore, often wanted for good camp fires, the first luxury of all travelers; but to men insufficiently furnished with tents and other appliances of shelter, almost an essential to life. After days of fatigue, their nights were often passed in restless efforts to save themselves from freezing. Their stock of food also proved inadequate; and as their systems became impoverished, their suffering from cold increased.

Sickened with catarrhal affections, manacled by the fetters of dreadfully acute rheumatisms, some contrived for a-while to get over the shortening day's march, and drag along some others. But the sign of an impaired circulation soon began to show itself in the liability of all to be dreadfully frost-bitten. The hardiest and strongest became helplessly crippled. About the same time, the strength of their beasts of draught began to fail. The small supply of provender they could carry with them had given out. The winter-bleached prairie straw proved devoid of nourishment; and they could only keep them from starving by seeking for the browse, as it is called, or green bark and tender buds and branches, of the cotton-wood and other stinted growths of the hollows.

To return to Nauvoo was apparently the only escape; but this would have been to give occasion for fresh mistrust, and so to bring new trouble to those they had left there behind them. They resolved at least to hold their ground, and to advance as they might, were it only by limping through the deep snows a few slow miles a day. They found a sort of comfort in comparing themselves to the Exiles of Siberia, and sought cheerfulness in earnest prayings for the spring,—longed for as morning by the tossing sick.

The Spring came at last. It overtook them in the Sac and Fox country, still on the naked prairie, not yet half way over the trail they were following between the Mississippi and Missouri rivers. But it brought its own share of troubles with it. The months with which it opened proved nearly as trying as the worst of winter.

The snow and sleet and rain, which fell as it appeared to them without intermission, made the road over the rich prairie soil as impassable as one vast bog of heavy black mud. Sometimes they would fasten the horses and oxen of four or five wagons to one, and attempt to get ahead in this way, taking turns; but at the close of a day of hard toil for themselves and their cattle, they would find themselves a quarter or half a mile from the place they left in the morning. The heavy rains raised all the water-courses: the most trifling streams were impassible. Wood fit for bridging was often not to be had, and in such cases the only resource was to halt for the freshets to subside,—a matter in the case of the headwaters of the Chariton, for instance, of over three weeks' delay.

These were dreary waitings upon Providence. The most spirited and sturdy murmured most at their forced inactivity. And even the women, whose heroic spirits had been proof against the lowest thermometric fall, confessed their tempers fluctuated with the ceaseless variations of the barometer. They complained, too, that the health of their children suffered more. It was the fact, that the open winds of March and April brought with them more mortal sickness than the sharpest freezing weather.

The frequent burials made the hardiest sicken. On the soldier's march, it is matter of discipline, that after the rattle of musketry over his comrade's grave, he shall tramp it to the music of some careless tune in a lively quick-step. But, in the Mormon camp the companion who lay ill and gave up the ghost within view of all, all saw as he lay stretched a corpse, and all attended to his last resting-place. It was a sorrow then, too, of itself to simple-hearted people, the deficient pomps of their imperfect style of funeral. The general hopefulness of human, —including Mormon—nature, was well illustrated by the fact, that the most provident were found unfurnished with undertaker's articles; so that bereaved affection was driven to the most melancholy makeshifts.

The best expedient generally was to cut down a log of some eight or nine feet long, and slitting it longitudinally, strip off its dark bark in two half cylinders. These, placed around the body of the deceased, and bound firmly together with withes made of the alburnum, formed a rough sort of tubular coffin, which surviving relatives and friends, with a little show of black crape, could follow with its enclosure to the hole, or bit of ditch, dug to receive it in the wet ground of the prairie. They grieved to lower it down so poorly clad, and in such an unheeded grave. It was hard,—was it right?—thus hurriedly to plunge it in one of the undistinguishable waves of the great land sea, and leave it behind them there, under the cold north rain, abandoned, to be forgotten? They had no tombstones, nor could they find rock to pile the monumental cairn. So, when they had filled up the grave, and over it prayed a Miserere prayer, and tried to sing a hopeful psalm, their last office was to seek out landmarks, or call in the surveyor to help them determine the bearings of valley bends, headlands, or forks and angles of constant streams, by which its position should in the future be remembered and recognized. The name of the beloved person, his age, the date of his death, and these marks were all registered with care. His party was then ready to move on. Such graves mark all the line of the first years of Mormon travel, dispiriting milestones to faing stragglers in the rear.

It is an error to estimate largely the number of Mormons dead of starvation, strictly speaking. Want developed disease, and made them sink under fatigue, and maladies that would otherwise have proved trifling. But only those died of it outright, who fell in out-of-the-way places that the hand of brotherhood could not reach. Among the rest no such thing as plenty was known, while any went an hungered. If but a part of a group was supplied with provision, the only result was that the whole went on the half or quarter ration, according to the sufficiency that there was among them: and this so ungrudgingly and contentedly, that till some crisis of trial to their strength, they were themselves unaware that their health was sinking, and their vital force impaired.

Hale young men gave up their own provided food and shelter to the old and helpless, and walked their way back to parts of the frontier states, chiefly Missouri and Iowa, where they were not recognized, and hired themselves out for wages, to purchase more. Others were sent there, to exchange for meal and flour, or wheat and corn, the table and bed furniture, and other last resources of personal property which a few had still retained.

In a kindred spirit of fraternal forecast, others laid out great farms in the wilds, and planted in them the grain saved for their own bread; that there might be harvests for those who should follow them. Two of these, in the Sac and Fox country and beyond it, Garden Grove and Mount Pisgah included within their fences about two miles of land a-piece, carefully planted in grain, with a hamlet of comfortable log cabins in the neighborhood of each.

Through all this the pioneers found redeeming comfort in the thought, that their own suffering was the price of immunity to their friends at home. But the arrival of spring proved this a delusion. Before the warm weather had made the earth dry enough for easy travel, messengers came in from Nauvoo to overtake the party with fear-exaggerated tales of outrage, and to urge the chief men to hurry back to the city that they might give counsel and assistance there. The enemy had only waited till the emigrants were supposed to be gone on their road too far to return to interfere with them, and then renewed their aggressions.

The Mormons outside Nauvoo were indeed hard pressed; but inside the city they maintained themselves very well for two or three months longer.

Strange to say, the chief part of this respite was devoted to completing the structure of their quaintly devised but beautiful Temple. Since the dispersion of Jewry, probably, history affords us no parallel to the attachment of the Mormons for this edifice. Every architectural element, every most fantastic emblem it embodied, was associated, for them, with some cherished feature of their religion. Its erection had been enjoined upon them as a most sacred duty: they were proud of the honor it conferred upon their city, when it grew up in its splendour to become the chief object of the admiration of strangers upon the Upper Mississippi. Besides, they had built it as a labor of love; they could count up to half a million the value of their tithings and free-will offerings laid upon it. Hardly a Mormon woman had not given up to it some trinket or pin-money: the poorest Mormon man had at least served the tenth part of his year on its walls; and the coarsest artisan could turn to it with something of the ennobling attachment of an artist for his fair creation. Therefore, though their enemies drove on them ruthlessly, they succeeded in parrying the last sword-thrust, till they had completed even the gilding of the angel and trumpet on the summit of its lofty spire. As a closing work, they placed on the entablature of the front, like a baptismal mark on the forehead,

The House of the Lord:
Built by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints
Holiness to the Lord!

Then, at High noon, under the bright sunshine of May, the next only after its completion, they consecrated it to divine service. There was a carefully studied ceremonial for the occasion. It was said the high elders of the sect traveled furtively from the Camp of Israel in the Wilderness; and throwing off ingenious disguises, appeared in their own robes of holy office, to give it splendor.

For that one day the Temple stood resplendent in all its typical glories of sun, moon and stars, and other abounding figured and lettered signs, hieroglyphs and symbols: but that day only. The sacred rites of consecration ended, the work of removing the sacrosancta proceeded with the rapidity of magic. It went on through the night; and when the morning of the next day dawned, all the ornaments and furniture, everything that could provoke a sneer, had been carried off; and except some fixtures that would not bear removal, the building was dismantled to the bare walls.

It was this day saw the departure of the last elders, and the largest band that moved in one company together. The people of Iowa have told me, that from morning to night they passed westward like an endless procession. They did not seem greatly out of heart, they said; but, at the top of every hill before they disappepred, were to be seen looking back, like banished Moors, on their abandoned homes, and the far-seen Temple and its glittering spire.

To be continued.

*Nine children were born the first night the women camped out. "SUGAR CREEK," Feb. 5.

*One of the company having a copy of Mme. Cottin's Elizabeth, it was so sought after that some read it from the wagons by moonlight. They were materially sustained, too, by the practice of psalmody, "keeping up the Songs of Zion, and passing along Doxologies from front to rear, when the breath froze on their eyelashes."

From the National Intelligencer.

The Great Salt Lake—Capt. Stansbury's Reconnoissance.

After an interval of six months, during which the party were completely isolated by the impenetrable snows of the surrounding mountains, intelligence has at length been received from Captain Stansbury, of the Topographical Engineer Corps, who is engaged in an examination of the Valley of the Great Salt Lake, and a hydrographic survey of that singular sheet of water. The last previous news of the whereabout of his party was dated in October last. The present despatches come down to as late as the 16th of March. Captain Stansbury says:

"The winter season here has been long and very severe, commencing about the middle of November. To-day (February 26) the mountains are white with snow, and in many of the canons (pronounced 'kanyons') it is upwards of fifty feet deep, reaching to the tops of the tallest trees. Although only in the latitude of 40 deg. 46 m., it has more than equalled in severity the winter of last year in Philadelphia, which was an unusual one, and it is even now quite uncertain when it will terminate."

Again, he says, writing on the 16th of March:

"The mountain passes are fuller of snow than ever. Yesterday morning we found that five inches of snow had fallen during the night, and last night nearly as much. This is on the plains; in the mountains the fall is from four to six times greater, the condensation of the atmospheric vapor being there much more rapid and complete. At this moment, while the sun is shining brightly on the plains, it is snowing furiously among the peaks." * * * *

"After completing the reconnoissance of Cache valey, we returned to our camp on Bear River. When Colonel Porter returned to his post, the provision train was despatched down the east shore of the Salt Lake under Lieutenant Howland, of the Rifles, with orders to report to Lieutenant Gunnison, whilst I, accompanied by Dr. Blake, with a party of four men and sixteen mules, addressed myself to make the tour around the western side of the lake. This trip was, by many of the old mountaineers, considered rather hazardous, especially at that late season of the year. Many of them had tried it, but none had ever succeeded in achieving it. The country was represented to be barren in the extreme, and almost, if not entirely, destitute of fresh water. In addition to which, some disturbances and ill-feeling had taken place between the whites and the Snake or Shoshone Indians, arising out of a gross outrage which had been wantonly inflicted upon the latter by a band of unprincipled emigrants, in which several of their men were killed, and women violated and murdered. I was determined, however, to proceed; and having provided ourselves with some India-rubber bags for 'packing' water, in case of necessity, on the 19th of October we commenced our journey. We were also provided with one soldiers' tent, and one wall tent-fly, for protection from rains; but they were of little use, as but in one or two instances could poles be procured for stretching them, so utterly destitute of timber was the region through which we passed. The journey occupied us until the 8th of November.

"We found that the whole western shore of the lake consists of immense level plains of soft mud, inaccessible within many miles of the water's edge to the feet of mules or horses, being traversed frequently by meandering rills of salt or sulphur water, which apparently sink and seem to imbue and saturate the whole soil rendering it miry and treacherous. These plains are but little elevated above the present level of the lake, and have, without doubt, at one time, not very long since, formed a part of it; for it is evident that a rise of but a few inches will at once cover the greater portion of these extensive areas of land with water again. I do not think I hazard much by saying that a rise of one foot in the lake would nearly if not quite double its present area.

"The plains are, for the most part, entirely denuded of vegetation, excepting occasional patches of Artemesia and 'greasewood,' and they glitter in the sunlight, presenting the appearance of water so perfectly that it is almost impossible for one to convince himself that he is not in the immediate shore of the lake itself. This is owing to the crystallization of minute portions of salt on the surface of the mud, and the oozy slime occasioned by the complete saturation of the soil with moisture. From this cause, also, arises a mirage, which is greater here than I have ever witnessed elsewhere; distorting objects in the most grotesque manner, and giving rise to optical illusions almost beyond belief. I anticipate serious annoyance from this cause, in making the triangulation."

"In an estimated distance of one hundred and fifty miles, on one part of the route, fresh water and grass were found only in one spot, about midway of this stretch, and we were obliged to subsist our animals, that is, to keep life in them, by serving them out a pint of water each, night and morning, taken from the india-rubber bags packed upon their backs. The first part of this desert was about seventy-five miles in extent, and occupied us two days and a half to cross it, traveling all day and the greater part of the night; walking a great portion of the way to relieve the mules, which began to sink for the want of sustenance and water.

"In the latter portion of this first desert we crossed a field of solid salt, which lay encrusted upon the level mud plain, so thick that it bore up the mules loaded with their packs so perfectly that they walked upon it as if it had been a sheet of solid ice, slightly covered with snow. The whole plain was as level as a floor. We estimated this field to be at least ten miles in length, by seven in width, and the thickness of the salt at from one-half to three quarters of an inch. A strip of some three miles in width had been previously crossed, but it was not thick, nor hard enough to prevent the animals from sinking through it into the mud at every step. The salt in the solid field was perfectly crystalized, and, where it had not become mixed with the soil, was as white and fine as the best specimens of salina table salt. Some of it was collected and preserved.

"After crossing the field of salt, we struck upon a fine little stream of running water, with plenty of grass, lying at the foot of a range of mountains, which seemed to form the western boundary of the immediate valley of the lake. Here we were obliged to halt for three days to give our animals an opportunity to recruit. The latter part of the desert was about seventy miles in extent, and was passed in two days, by prolonging our marches far into the night. Had we not found grass and water midway of this barren waste, both animal and men must have perished.

"We were, as I have every reason to believe, the first party of white men that ever succeeded in making the entire circuit of the lake by land. I have understood that it was once circumnavigated by canoes, in early times, by some trappers, in search of beaver, but no attempt by land has ever been successful.

"From the knowledged gained by this expedition, I am of opinion that the size of the lake has been much exaggerated; and from observation, and what I have learned from the Mormons, who have made one or two excursions upon it in a small skiff, I am induced to believe that its depth has been much overated. That it has no outlet is now demonstrated beyond doubt, and I am convinced, from what I have seen, it is but a few inches in depth; and if there be any deep water it must be in the middle. The Utah river (or the Jordan, as the Mormons call it) is altogether too insignificant and too crooked to be of any use commercially. The greatest dept of the Utah Lake that we have found is sixteen feet: so that, for the purposes of a connected line of navigation, neither the river nor the Lakes can be of the slightest utility. Such at least is my present impression. Further examination of Salt Lake may, perhaps, modify this opinion with regard to the latter. The river connecting these two lakes is forty-eight miles in length."

The delays and difficulties encountered by Capt. Stanbury's party in conducting their triangulation of a district of country extending two degrees in latitude and more than a degree in longitude, may be conceived from the fact that almost every stick of timber used in the construction of fourteen triangulation stations, thus far erected, has cost from twenty to thirty miles' travel of a six mule team, and that nearly, if not all, the water will have to be transported along with the different parties for their daily use. The Captain adds:

"Every thing here is enormously high. The vicinity of the gold mines has made money plenty and labor scarce and dear. Ordinary mechanics get from $2 50 to $4 per day. Corn $2, and oats from $1 to $1 50 a bushel. Potatoes at first were $4, now $2 a bushel. Flour from 10 to 15 cents per pound. Hay from $12 to $20 per ton, wild, and of a very inferior quality. Wood from $12 to $15 a cord, and every thing else in proportion."

He expresses some fears that the party may not be able to complete their task the present season; but if the most strenuous exertion, stimulated by the dread of another winter's imprisonment, amid surrounding mountains, buried in snow, and cut off from all communion with the States, can secure the object, it will certainly be accomplished. Success attend them!

Keep the Sabbath Day Holy unto the Lord.

This was an imperative commandment given to man in the first age of the world. In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth; finishing his work upon the seventh day, he blessed and hallowed it, and sanctified it—setting it apart as a day of rest. He also gave in commandment unto the House of Israel, the seventh day as a day of rest, commanding them to rest, together with their families, their servants, their cattle and all that belonged unto them, from all their labors, ordaining that they should assemble themselves together upon that day, that their teachers might read in their hearing, and that thereby the Law of God might be engraved upon their hearts, and stamped in their memories.

In these last days, among other commandments the Lord has said remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy. Gather yourselves together upon this my holy day, and speak ye often one to another, and show each other your fellowship, and your steady determination, and steadfast resolutions, in keeping the commandments of the Lord your God, and then shall the Lord bless his people. But alas! how many imprecations are poured out upon those who willfully profane the Sabbath day. Dear brethren beware the evil day is not far distant—the day of the Lord's vengeance is at hand. In that day the just shall live by faith—not by a belief that certain individuals are the servants of God, but by a knowledge of God, and an assurance that we are his servants doing his will, keeping his commandments, honoring him both in word and deed. Be wise and the Lord will bless you all: Amen.

"United, we Stand, Divided we Fall."

The above is very applicable to certain characters, whose sole object seems to be, to gratify their own evil inclinations, by trying continually "to have all the corn in their bushel measure," at the expense of right, equity, truth, and every feeling sacred to the human heart, or acknowledged to be honorable, by all good and upright men. Selfishness is so very predominant in some, that even at the expense of reason, light and truth, they will sacrafice the most valuable principle that ever dawned upon this earth, viz: "unity." Some may object to our position in this respect; but we would ask them a simple question. What power can a single truth have when properly weighed in comparison to the whole? We answer, but little. Well, even so with men, a man may be considered a good man, and in reality be so; but what amount of power, or influence can that man use against thirty of a similar character? We answer one thirtieth part. This being the product of our researches, we would advise every man who wishes to study his own real interest, to advise, influence and try by every lawful means to bring about unity, and make it bear on the present crisis. Would we say to do evil? No. We say to do good; and the man who is found in the discharge of such a duty cannot lose his reward. Otherwise endeavor to sow discord, and you may rest assured that eventually you shall reap the same. Be not deceived—God is not mocked—for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. Brethren and friends, would you expect to reap wheat, from a field which you had planted with corn. We believe you would answer, no. Neither do we believe, that a man, or set of men, who are constantly working for self-aggrandisement upon a false principle can prosper, or even realize their own anticipations, as long as they continue to do so. We firmly believe that there is more safety in acting upon a correct principle, either for temporal or eternal salvation, (although the actor may have to sacrifice his secular interest upon the same,) than in ten thousand fleeting vanities which are only calculated to allure for the moment and then flee away. We would advise every man, who has the least regard for his own welfare and happiness, and that of others; to commence at home first, in the family circle, and set in order every thing requisite in that sphere, and then carry the same influence to his neighbors and associates; and if we are not mistaken, this course would effect a complete cure, for all the evils which at present contaminate our moral atmosphere, and infest society at large.

Millennial Star.

We have on hand and for sale at this office, 20 volumes of (vol. xi.) the above named periodical edited by Elder Orson Pratt, Liverpool, England, whose talent, wisdom and skill is known to almost all the Saints on this continent and elsewhere, and also to a great number of individuals who do not belong to the church. We can say that his periodical is worthy of perusal by either Saint or sinner, and from its pages, intelligence and truth can be gleaned, which is able to make men wise unto salvation, through faith in Christ Jesus.

Roll round thy orb thou little Star,
And shed thy luminous rays,
On nations near—also afar;
In these the latter days.

And may your Globe be always filled,
With matter pure and free,
To cheer the hearts of honest men,
Who love sweet Liberty.

Col. Kane's Discourse Before the Philadelphia Historical Society.

We refer our readers to the article on our outside, written by Col. Thomas L. Kane, of Philadelphia, it is a discourse delivered before the historical Society in that city, on the history of the Mormons since their expulsion from Nauvoo. Col. Kane is a most sterling friend, a beautiful writer, and well versed in the history of our people, and it will be read with a great deal of interest. It is well calculated to enlighten many who have not been through the trying scenes which the church has experienced since they left Nauvoo.

Our Democratic friends at Council Bluffs, came here on election day, in a body with a flag of truce at their head, preserving good order during the day and exerting a peacable influence and after voting in a solid phalanx, proceeded to the Bluff House where they had a dinner served up in good style, after which they returned home preserving that good order and friendly feeling that they possessed when they arrived. We are glad to see men of both political parties mingling together, and notwithstanding the strong political excitement of the day, part with good feelings. Our friends of Council Bluffs labored hard for their cause (we are sorry to say) still we respect their firmness and dertermination to support their principles although we think them wrong.

Who Would Worship a Calf!

The children of Israel in Ancient days, during the absence of Moses, went to work, and made a calf, under the superintendence of Aaron, Moses' brother. We learn from a reliable source, that a certain character residing not far from this place, is about to canvass for a calf, or something similar, to be established in this county as soon as circumstances, and the voice of the people will permit. We would say to all Israel, who reside in this county; do not bring your jewels to the feet of any man, or men whose object may be to destroy the present organization of the Church at this place, or in this county, or elsewhere, lest like the People in Aaron's day, you may have to drink bitter water, mixed up with the work of your own hands, and some of you perish, upon the return of the servant of God from the Valley. A hint to the wise is sufficient."

Death of President Taylor.

How the mighty art fallen."

It becomes our painful duty to announce to our readers the death of Gen. Zachary Taylor, President of the United States. He died at Washington on the 9th inst., at 10 o'clock, P. M., of cholera morbus, after a very short illness.

In speaking of him, and of his merits and good qualities we do not feel fully competent to do them justice, but we feel to mourn the loss of a man whose whole study has been to keep union between the two great divisions of the nation, the North and the South. The nation has been deprived of one of its brightest ornaments, one of its most precious jewels. We believe that all this has been done in the economy of Heaven for the upbuilding of God's kingdom upon the earth, as it seems that nearly all the master spirits of the age are being called home to their fathers to rest a season from their labors. Perhaps the great division between the North and South is a means that the Lord is using to destroy the nation, for "united it stands, but divided it falls." Of other great men who have recently been numbered with the dead, and who have played a conspicuous part in the drama of the nation, we find John C. Calhoun, who was one of the greatest statesmen that the nation ever produced, and the great agitator of Southern principles; also, S. S. Prentiss, of Alabama, and Jame K. Polk, and all of recent date, and Henry Clay, another great statesman in about the last stages of existence.

These things betoken that something is to be done either for the promotion of the Union as it now exists or to spread division and confusion throughout the land; we think the latter will be the case as the clouds begin to lower over the nation's head they look gloomy and frightful in the extreme, and without some master spirit now arises upon the platform to avert the impending storm, we are afraid that the old ship which has carried us safely for so many years will be rent in twain. But it will be the duty of every true hearted American to stand by the old ship as long as any of her remain.

But to our subject: Gen. Taylor's character is familiar to the whole country, and particular noted as the hero of Buena Vista, and one of the greatest Generals that any nation ever produced. Few persons ever found themselves in the presence of Gen. Taylor, without being impressed with a certain degree of veneration and awe; neither did these emotions subside on a closer acquaintance, but his deportment was such as rather tended to augment them. The hard service he has seen in the battle field gave a kind of austerity to his countenance, and a reserve in his manner; yet the long life of General Taylor is unstained by a single blot. He was indeed a man of rare endowments; we scarce know where to point to a criterion, except in the Father of the Country.

General Taylor is not the idol of a day, but his name will be handed down to posterity for ages as a hero, and his course will be marked by military aspirants to cloth them with glory.

At the commencement of the Mexican War, Gen Taylor was placed at the head of the American Army under the most trying circumstances, but his perseverance overcame every obstacle; his enlarged views could plan for the best interests of the nation; he had the courage which could act or forbear to act, as the true policy dictated, without caring for the reproaches of those in or out of power. He new how to conquer by waiting in spite of reproach for the moment of victory; and he merited true praise by despising undeserved censure. In the most arduous moments of contest, his prudent firmness proved the salvation of the American army. He acted ever as if his country's welfare and that alone was the moving spring, and his excellent mind needed not the stimulus of ambition or prospect of fame for him to act: for the best interest of the nation, for glory was a secondary consideration with him, and his reward was in the consciousness of his own rectitude, and in the success of his patriotic efforts.

In his exercise of the power as Chief Magistrate, it was agreeable to the purity of its origin. As he had not solicited or usurped dominion, he had neither to contend with the opposition of rivals, nor the revenge of enemies; but stood boldly up to the true spirit of the Constitution of the United States, and used his utmost exertions to preserve the Union between the North and South, and to his death has succeeded in the undertaking. The nation has met with an imparable loss, in the person of General Taylor; one with which her national interests were at stake, but it is hoped that party strife will be hushed into oblivion, under the influence of the new President (Millard Fillmore, who now takes the Presidential chair.

Millard Fillmore.

President Fillmore assumes the responsibilities which are devolving upon the Chief Magistrate of the nation, and not being particularly familiar with his public acts, we cannot say with what ability he will fill the Presidential Chair, although he is spoken of in the highest terms by our co-temporaries. But we hope for the best; the present distracted condition of the nation will probable encompass him with many embarrassments, by the croaking of the ultras in the North and South. And in this state of affairs it requires a man of great firmness of character. His office since he has been elected Vice President, has been one of form merely, and therefore could not bring forth his views upon the important questions which are now agitating the country.

Kanesville, July 1850.

To ——— Family:—I improve the present few moments while laid down on my bed to write you a few lines:

It is enjoyment for me to have a good opportunity of communicating with those whom I love.

It is pleasing to me to have communications from those whom I have respected through acquaintance.

When the love of God is shed abroad in the heart, it is joy to meditate and lucubrate on friends; for goodness conceiveth and bringeth forth goodness, and for evil there is no place.

In a heart where love abounds, charity increaseth and evil speaking is banished therefrom.

Humility and prayer before the Lord with a virtuous and upright course of life, secures to a Saint the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, where this dwells the love of God is.

A Saint that lives in the light, sees heavenly things, and his course is guided by angels continually.

The above was found and handed to us by a friend which we consider contains too many truths to be lost.

Signs of the Times.

The signs of the times with all persons connected with the work of the last days is an all important subject. It is the province of the Guardian to keep them advised of the progress of the work, and we cannot refrain from calling our readers attention at this time to the words of the Lord upon them, as given by Revelation, March 7, 1831, nearly twenty years ago, through Joseph Smith.

"In that day shall be heard of wars and rumors of wars, and the whole earth shall be in commotion, and men's hearts shall fail them, and they shall say that Christ delayeth his coming until the end of the earth. And the love of men shall wax cold, and iniquity shall abound; and when the time of the Gentiles is come in, a light shall break forth among them that sit in darkness, and it shall be the fulness of my gospel; but they receive it not, for they perceive not the light, and they turn their hearts from me because of the precepts of men; and in that generation shall the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled: and there shall be men standing in that generation, that shall not pass, until they shall see an overflowing scourge; for a desolation sickness shall come over the land: but my disciples shall stand in holy places, and shall be moved; but among the wicked, men shall lift up their voices and curse God and die. And there shall be earthquakes, also, in divers places, and many desolations, yet men will harden their hearts against me; and they will take up the sword one against another, and they will kill one another."

And in the generation when wars and rumors of wars, and commotion covers the earth then shall the times of the gentiles shall be fulfilled, and there will be men standing upon the earth at the time the above revelation was given to witness the transactions therein mentioned; and now readers, mark! In that day those same men will stand up and bear testimony, that an overflowing scourge and a desolationg sickness had covered the land. The disciples of the Lord should stand in holy places to be preserved from this desolating sickness, and what else can we call the cholera which now exists over the whole land to a greater or less extent but a desolating and tryilg sickness, and how often do we hear of wicked men, who "lift up their voices, and curse God and die," they are things of common occurrence, and yet men harden their hearts against God and his commandments; and ere long, earthquakes, famines, wars, and desolations not yet heard of will come upon the land, and the Lord will speak with the thunders and lightnings, and with the wind, in a voice which will be unmistakeable; but still men will harden their hearts against truth and righteousness. In the face of all these warnings, it becomes the duty of every servant of God, to proclaim the plagues and destructions which are about to be poured out upon the inhabitants of the earth, and withal he should lift up his head and rejoice, (not at the calamities that are befalling the world,) but that his redemption draweth nigh.

Watch and Pray that you may not be overtaken in this day of calamity with the vengeance of God. As God sendeth rain upon the just and unjust, so his plagues must fall upon all whether Saint or sinner, if they are placed in a position where that heartless tyrant, death! can take hold of them. Therefore it is necessary for men to become wise and have their lamps trimmed and burning, and not be caught in the dark as the ten foolish virgins were.

Remember brethren and friends, the time is short, and let us improve every moment that we possibly can in the upbuilding of the kingdom of God. Do not be found in the eyes of men or of angels profaning the name of your maker, do not be seen going to any place, where you see signs similar to the following: "Rum and Brandy Exchange" because you will there be sure to exchange your right as a citizen in the kingdom of Heaven, to a loyal subject of the God of bacchus. Pray not go where a little ominous sign is exposed to view, "Bar!" for this bar which you are invited to visit is not the bar of righteousness, but is a place where Satan allures the innocent to take their first step on the road to ruin and death. Look out sharp for places where you see posted "whisky by the gallon," for at those places men can get a large quantity and take it home to his family, and thereby place them with himself liable to be caught in the snare.

Now if you do not wish to be found like the ten foolish virgins do not profane the name of your maker; don't visit doggeries; keep yourselves free from the inebriates cup; remember your God, give him thanks for his manifold blessings unto his people; be just and upright in your walk and conversation. Be cheerful and kind; love your neighbor as yourself, and keep the statutes of God, and walk humbly before him—if you do these things you will have faith to claim the promises which God has promised all his faithful Saints.

Hogs and Dogs.

This town has become invested with a host of the above animals, and we believe that their presence is not conducive to the health of our citizens, neither very profitable to those who do not keep them. It is almost impossible to fence against the above animals, and the hogs have destroyed barrels of flour entered dwellings, broken crockery ware, and played smash with all articles for domestic use. The dogs are continually prowling about houses at night, entering dwellings, stealing and carrying off meat, and frightening the inmates. In this state of things it is necessary that the community should pass some resolutions to protect themselves against the above animals. We have no objections to any persons keeping hogs, but it looks to us that it is rather more appropriate that farmers should keep and raise hogs, but it looks to us that it is rather more appropriate that farmers should keep and raise hogs, than to annoy the inhabitants of a thickly settled village with them. If persons wish to keep hogs let them have a pen made for them, where they will be at the owners entire expense of keeping them, and not place the burden upon their neighbors.

Kister, the Democratic candidate for State Treasurer received a merited rebuke by the Democrats in this county; having only received twenty-two votes, at the election, for his near connection with the stolen Poll Books.

We refer our readers to the advertisement of Mr Grenig Baker in another column. He bakes every day, we can assure the citizens that he bakes first rate bread, for we have tried it.

Missouri Statesman.—This most excellent and spirited Whig paper published at Columbia, Mo., has been enlarged, and Col. Switzler, its editor, deserves to be liberally patronized. So gentlemen fork over your dimes to him, and reward the printers as their time and talents should be rewarded.

Politics—The Election, &c.

The excitement which predominated here on Monday last has subsided in a great degree, and the Guardian will pursue the even tenor of its way, resigning the political arena to those who are thorough bred politicians; and design that the paper will be more instructive to the saints of God. As it is our place to watch for the interest of the people of Pottawattamie county and the people of Deseret, we shall come out boldly and above board. The frowns and displeasure of men will not deter the course of the Guardian; but it will pursue that course which will be calculated for the best interests of the people, without fear. The election has passed, and we hope the officers that are elected for State or county officers, will perform their duty with equity and justice, and whatever the result may be we hope in the providence of Almighty God, that it will be for the best. We have been censured by a few enemies of the press, impugning the motives under which we acted, and the independent stand that we took in regard to A. W. Babbit, Esq. Being somewhat acquainted with political life we understand well what course to pursue when such a case comes to our knowledge. We are not ignorant of what is transpiring in different parts of the nation, and feel it our duty to act as becomes freemen, to protect your interests in all emergencies, to stand by you in all danger, and be with you in all things that are right. There were some who did not seem willing to vote for the State ticket, and therefore it has run somewhat behind the county ticket. Persons going to the polls should have manly independence enough to vote for one party or the other. We do not approve of the plan of being neutral in anything. Any person who is or can call himself a friend should not lay dormant and not act; they are like drones in the hive, and should feel the sting of public frown. Suppose that you were neutral in your labors of getting to heaven; do you suppose you would ever arrive there if you did not do something towards your own salvation? The Devil, seeing your inactivity, would soon take advantage of your neutrality, and take you into his arms and carry you down the road of ruin. So it is in worldly matters. Let your enemies see that you are neutral, and do not act, they will take advantage of your neutrality and come upon you and overthrow you where you are. Either make friends of God or Mammon, and then you will have an equal chance with one party or the other; but if you are neutral you will have neither party for your friend.

The course pursued by some during the election was by no means wise or politic. But we hope that they will learn by experience the right way and walk therein. The way of the transgressor is hard.

The returns we have received denote a strong majority for the Whig ticket, and it is probable that George G. Wright is elected by a small majority in this District, to Congress. We hope now that the election is over every thing will assume quietness and peace, & that tranquility will reign in our midst. Hoping that we may all ever live to keep the commandments of God and do our duty faithfully, as his servants, and may he guide us in the discharge of our sacred duties; leaving the past to be forgotten, and looking forward for a crown of immortal life in the future.

DIED,

On Monday July 20th, at 1 o'clock, P. M., Mrs ELIZABETH P. CROMBIE, formerly of Boston, Mass, aged 38 years.

Farewell dear mother, repose in peace,
From worldly care, y've received release,
Thy sons will meet thee, in a better clime,
Where no death prevail, nor health decline.

Where life, eternal life, sustains,
The vast assemblage on there domains,
Repose in peace, unto you will come,
When God may call us to gather home.

[Telegraphed for the Louisville Journal.]

Particulars of the Death of General Taylor--Proceedings of Congress--Inauguration of President Fillmore--Great Fire in Philadelphia--150 Persons Killed, Wounded and Missing.

WASHINGTON, July 10.

The President of the United States died at thirty-five minutes past 10 o'clock last night. His death was calm and peaceful. The Vice President and Cabinet, the Mayor and Marshal of the district, the attending physicians, and family of Gen. Taylor surrounded his bed. Gen. Taylor's last words were: "I am prepared, I have endeavored to do my duty."

WASHINGTON, July 10—10 A. M.

The cabinet this morning communicate to Congress the death of President Taylor. The executive departments are all closed. The remains of the President will be exposed in state at the executive mansion until the day of the burial, which will probably be on Friday.

Thirty-First Congress--First Session.

WASHINGTON, July 10.

HOUSE.—Rev. Mr. Butler, the Chaplain of the Senate, delivered a most solemn and appropriate prayer. The Hall of the House was filled with sad and anxious faces. After an interval of five minutes, the speaker took the chair. A message was then received from Hon. Millard Fillmore, President of the United, States, and reads as follows:

Fellow citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have to perform the melancholy duty of announcing to you that it has pleased the Almighty God to remove from this life Zachary Taylor, late President of the United States. He died last evening at the hour of half past ten in the midst of his family, and surrounded by affectionate friends, calmly and in full possession of all his faculties. His last words were these, and he uttered them with emphatic distinctness: "I have always done my duty, I am ready to die. My only regret is for the friends I leave behind me."

Having announced to you, fellow-citizens this most affecting bereavement, and assuring you that it has penetrated no heart with deeper grief than mine, it remains for me to say, that I propose this day, in the Hall of the House of Representative, and in the presence of both Houses of Congress, to take the oath prescribed by the Constitution, to enable me to enter on the duties of the office which this event has devolved on me."

MILLARD FILLMORE.

Hall of the House of Representatives.

12 o'clock, M.

The House was called to order at twelve o'clock. A message was received from the Senate, stating that they had appointed a committee to wait on the President.

Judge Cranch came into the Hall, accompanied by Mr. Morse, and took his seat at the clerk's desk. A few minutes elapsed, when the Senators entered. The members of the House received them, and the Senators were seated in the area fronting the speaker's chair. Every part of the floor of the hall and gallery was crowded with ladies and gentlemen.

The President of the United States and Cabinet next came in and were received standing. Mr. Fillmore took a seat at the clerk's desk and the Cabinet immedialely in front of it.

The Speaker said that the oath of office would now be administered to the President.

Accordingly, Judge Cranch administered it, as laid down in the constitution, and the President, the Senate and the Cabinet then retired.

HOUSE—Evening Session—A message from the President was read as follows:

Fellow-Citizens of the Senate and of the House of Representatives:

A great man has fallen from among us, and a whole community is called to an occasion of unexpected, deep, and general mourning. I recommend to the two Houses of Congress and adopt such measures, as in their discretion may seem proper, to perform with due solemnities the funeral obsequies of Zachary Taylor, late President of the United States, and thereby to signify the great affectionate regard of the American people for the memory of one whose life has been devoted to the public service—whose career of arms has not been surpassed, in usefulness and brilliancy—who has been so recently raised by the unsolicited voice of the people to the highest civil authority in the Government, which he has administered with so much honor and advantage to his country, and by whose sudden death so many hopes of future usefulness have been slighted for ever. To you Senators and Representatives of the nation in tears, I can say nothing that will alleviate the sorrows with which you are oppressed. I appeal to you to aid me under the trying circumstances which surround me in the discharge of my duties, from which however much I may be oppressed, I dare not shrink. And I rely upon Him, who holds in his hand the destiny of nations, to endow me with requisite strength for the task, and to avert from our country the evils apprehended from the heavy calamity which has befallen it. I shall most readily concur in whatever measure the wisdom of the two Houses may suggest as benefitted this melancholy occasion.

MILLIARD FILLMORE.

WASHINGTON, July 10, 1850.

Eulogies were delivered on the character of the deceased and appropriate resolutions were passed.

SENATE—Proceedings similar to those in the House were held in the Senate.

WASHINGTON, July 10—P. M.

It is stated that the members of the Cabinet have tendered their resignations to Mr. Fillmore. They however still continue in office for the present. Speculation is busy as to their successors. No change will be made before the close of the present session.

Death of President Taylor.

There was intense anxiety in every portion of the the city, yesterday, caused by items of Telegraph news announcing the dangerous illness of the President, which had been published in the morning papers. It was hoped, that the intelligence thus transmitted might be exaggerated, and that a clearer report would bring more favorable news. By 9 or 10 o'clock, however, in the morning, another dispatch was received, briefly saying, that the President died at half-past 10 o'clock of the previous night, (Tuesday.) This is all the news which we have received, except a corroboration of the intelligence by way of Chicago, and we are, therefore, without any reason to doubt the truth of the mournful intelligence.

In this calamity, the nation has sustained a loss which may well cause all her people to mourn. If is not necessary now to attempt an eulogy on the character of the distinguished dead. The history of his life, his virtues and his heroic deeds, are a part of the history of the nation. They are written on its pages and engraven upon the hearts and memories of its people. In a green and vigorous old age, the fell destroyer, Death, has taken from our midst one of the greatest and best of men. His illness appears to have been sudden, and the disease to which he fell a victim was, no doubt, contracted in his campaigns in Mexico, heightened and aggravated by the incessant toil and new duties, habits of life and estrangement from former customs, imposed by his civil position.

Never has the nation had occasion to mourn the demise of a purer or nobler man. History and time will do that justice to his memory, which, living, his enemies denied him, and of which political asperites strove to divest him. His whole life was a exemplification of his patriotism and devotion to his country. In another aspect, his death at the present time is to be deplored. In his life—his ability to rule—the confidence that all men reposed in his firmness and attachment to the Constitution, and determination to support and sustain it at all hazards—the People, political friends as well as opponents, felt perfect security that, however the storm of ultraism might rage at the North or the South, there was still a power at the helm that could control it.

That he was equal to the prominent station to which the affections of his countrymen called him, is evinced by his brief administration. He came into power surrounded by peculiar circumstances. A majority of each House of Congress was against him, and, although nearly seven months of session have been wasted and no one subject embraced in his annual message has been disposed of, yet even the political majority against him has not dared to act in opposition to any of his propositions. Had he been permitted to live to see the result of his recommendations, their utility, statesmanship and forecast, would have been exemplified and vindicated.

He sleeps with his fathers, and the patriots of the land who have gone before him; but his spirit, his integrity and high purposes, will live after him in his successor to the Chief Magistracy.—[Republican.

WASHINGTON, 12th July.

A caucus of members of Congress, of all parties, favorable to the Union, was held today.

The South agreed to the line of 34 of latitude as the boundary of New Mexico, all below that line to Texas. Texas agrees to it—Clay agrees to it—the North agrees to it—and President Fillmore is content with it: so that this question bids fair to be settled to the satisfaction of all parties. A proposition is entertained in to divide California by the same line, and at the present time—12 o'clock—the proposition is still under discussion, with a prospect of its being carried.

There is a rumor current that Mr. Webster will give place to Mr. Winthrop in the Cabinet.

General Scott arrived in the city this morning. He comes to attend the funeral of Gen. Taylor, and superintend the military arrangements for the occasion.

The National Intelligencer of this morning publishes the official order of procession and ceremonies to be observed at the funeral at 12 o'clock on Saturday.

Adjutant General Jones has issued an order that all the military stations, the day after the order has been received, the troops to be paraded at 10 o'clock, A. M; the order is then to be read to them, after which all labor for that day will cease; minute guns will be fired from sunrise to sunset—officers of the army will also wear the badge of mourning on the left arm and sword—the colors of the several regiments will be put in mourning for six months. Similar orders have been issued to the Navy. The solemnities in this city to-morrow will be of the most imposing character.

A large body of the military, regulars and volunteers, will be in attendance, and an immense concourse of citizens and strangers.

Horace Greeley is talked of for the Department of the Interior in the new Cabinet.

BOSTON, July 3.

The confession of Professor Webstor was communicated to the Council by his spiritual adviser, Dr. Parkman. The Professor denied that the act was premeditated; his object in making the apointment with Dr. Parkman was to sue for further indulgence, as he was unable to meet his liabilities, and he did not state that he was ready to pay him any thing. He says that Dr. P. abused him and used the most opprobious epithets towards him, and threatened to have him turned out of his place. This irritated him to the highest degree, and in the moment of frenzy he seized a stick, and with one violent blow on the head he killed Dr. P. on the spot. The profession then goes on with the details of the after proceedings, which appears to have been carried through with the greatest coolness.

BALTIMORE, July 15.

A fire, last night, destroyed several lumber yards and several small buildings—loss estimated at $40,000. During the fire, a serious riot occurred among the firemen.

PHILADELPHIA, July 10.

Destructive Conflagration.

One of the most destructive conflagrations that ever occurred in Philadelphia broke out yesterday afternoon at No. 58 north Delaware Avenue, in the fourth story, occupied for storage. The flame spread in every direction—in a short time extending west to Water street, and south from Race to Callowhill streets. Three terrific explosions occurred, originating, as it is supposed, from about one thousand bags of salipetre stored in Brook's warehouse. Many lives were lost, among whom were many valuable, energetic and noble firemen—of these, at least thirty are supposed to be killed, and ten or more of the wounded will probably die. The total number cannot be less than one hundred. Judging from the extent of ground covered by the fire, and the nature of the property consumed, we venture to compute the loss at 4,000,000.

PHILADELPHIA, July 10, 2 P. M.

The coroner this morning held inquests over fifteen bodies and is still engaged. Many are so mangled that their nearest relatives cannot identify them. The scene where the fire has raged present a most sickening aspect. The smouldering ruins and wholly and partially destroyed buildings for squares present a distressing appearance. The sufferers, many of whom have lost everything, force upon the mind most melancholy emotions.

The City Council held a meeting at noon, and appropriated $10,000 for the relief of the sufferers.

Not less than four hundred houses were destroyed. Several insurance offices held a consultation this morning, when it was found that their total losses would not exceed half a million of dollars. Delegation of the New York firemen reached here at noon. Workmen are engaged in digging for bodies.

8 O'CLOCK, P. M.—After most diligent inquiry, I am unable to obtain a complete list of the killed, wounded and missing. From all information, I feel safe in stating the number of killed at 30, of wounded at 100; of drowned at 9, and missing at 17. A most painful specticle was exhibited at the Cherry station house. A large woman was lying on the floor. Her clothes were burned and her body bore horrid marks of fire. Her limbs were drawn up in agony, and the painful expression of her face told the suffering she must have experienced. By her side, on a scorched matress, lay three boys, terribly burned. In removing them they had been rolled together, and in attemping to seperate them, the charred flesh fell from their bodies.

THE WEBSTER CASE.—A hearing was had before the Committee on Pardon, on the morning of the 8th, in the case of Dr. Webster. A petition for clemency, signed by 984 persons of New York city, was presented. The Lieut. Governor stated that a large number of petitions for commutation from all parts had been recived—one from Mr. Greene, a juryman in the case. Several medical men showed that a blow, such as that Dr. Webster said he gave Dr. Parkman, often caused death in a short period. Edward Jarvis cited instances to show the questionable temper of Dr. Webster, and how soon it was over. In one case, when Dr. W. was a student, he commenced at play knocking off hats with another student, in which Webster was rather the worst off—finally, Webster got enraged, seized a stick to deal a blow, and had he not been prevented, would have caused death.

Next he showed no resentment. Dr. Wyman was introduced to show that Dr. Parkman's skull was a little thinner than an average.

A petition was presented by Prof. Bowen signed by President Sparks, and nearly all of the Professors of Harvard College, praying for a commutation, not on the ground of his confession, he having forfeited all claims to be believed, but upon the great probability that the act was not premeditated. Prof. Bowen urged for delay, to obtain more direct petitions, and the case was postponed to the 15th inst.

Constitution of New Mexico.

We received last evening, printed copies, Spanish and English languages, of the Constitution of New Mexico, which was declared to be adopted on the 25th of May last. The boundaries of the New State are thus set forth:

BOUNDARIES.—Beginning at the dam in the Rio del Norte, which supplies with water the "asequia," or irrigating channel of the town of El Paso del Norte; and running thence due East to the hundreth parallel; thence due north on said parallel to a point where the same intersects the river Arkansas; thence up the middle of the channel of said river to its source; thence in a direct line to a point on the Rio Colorado of California, where the same is intersected by the one hundred and eleventh parallel of longitude west from Greenwich; thence due south on the said parallel of longitude to a point on the Rio Gala, intersected by the same; thence up the middle of the main channel of said river to the point which may be designated by the Commissioners appointed to establish the line between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, as the point where said river or one of its branches shall be intersected by the western line of New Mexico; thence south on the said line, as the same shall be established by the Commissioners, to the angle formed by the States of Chihuahua, Sonora and New Mexico; thence easterly on the line between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, as it shall be laid down by said Commissioners, to a point where the same may intersect the Rio del Norte; thence down said river to the place of beginning.

The section in relation to slavery is as follows:

Article 1.

DECLARATION OF RIGHTS.—Sec 1. All men being born equally free and independent, and having certain natural inheritant and inalienable rights, amongst which are the enjoying and defending of life and liberty, the acquirement, possession and protection of property, and the pursuit of and attainment of happiness; therefore no male person shall be held by law to serve any person as a servant, slave or apprentice, after he arrives at the age of twenty-one years; nor female in like manner, after she arrives at the age of eighteen years, unless they be bound by their own consent after they arrive at such age, or are bound by law for punishment of crime.

Table Rock Fallen.

It was announced by telegraph on Saturday afternoon, the 29th ult., says the Buffalo Express, that the Table Rock, at Niagara Falls, had fallen into the abyss below. We have received the following particulars from one of the proprietors of this paper who was at the Falls:

CLIFTON HOUSE, NIAGARA FALLS, June 29th, 9 P. M.

About half-past one o'clock this afternoon, the large mass of rock known as Table Rock, gave way and went tumbling into the river below. The mass carried away was about six rods in width and twelve in length, and fortunately no one was injured. Not ten minutes before the occurrence a party of some twenty or thirty were standing on the rock but happily had just left. A gentleman was sitting in a carriage on the rock when it commenced giving way; he leaped from the carriage and was saved; the carriage went down with the mass of rock. A gentleman and lady, accompanied by guide were passing under the rock at the time it commenced falling, but fortunately got out from under, before the large mass fell. Large numbers have visited the spot this afternoon to witness the place where the table rock once was. A story was put afloat and sent off by telegraph that a number of persons were buried under the falling rocks, but there is no truth in the report.

LOUISVILLE, July 6th

S. S. Prentiss died at Natchez on 1st inst. The cholera is increasing at Cincinnati and Nashville. Deaths in Cincinnati for the 48 hours ending last evening 108, 65 of which were cholera. Interments at Nashville on Tuesday, 18—12 of cholera, and on Wednesday 29, 27 of which were cholero.

The following we copy from the Times and Seasons, published at Nauvoo, July 1st, 1845. In answer to the repeated questions asked of us concerning the cholera, and its cause; and we would advice our brethren and friends to read it, and profit thereby.

What is to Be.

As a matter of every day reflection, all people, good, bad and indifferent, are more concerned about what is to be than any thing else that appertains to life. This may be one reason why so much jealousy, hatred and persecution are manifested towards any man, men, or people, that profess to be guided by revelation.

Notwithstanding the word of the Lord, having out-lived all the speculation of the ancients, and frustrated the philosophy of the moderns, shines like diamonds among the rubbish of six thousand years, to guide the way of human beings, still every age has its own blind leader of the blind, and the result that has been, is now, and wilt be,—"both fall into the ditch."

We have said thus much for the consideration of the saints; if the world pays any regard to it, may God bless them accordingly. We profess to be governed by revelation and shall we, while fire, storm and vexation trouble the world, be lulled to sleep in false security? Shall we calculate our warfare over, and our salvation safe when the war of elements hath hardly commenced! "He only is saved that continueth faithful to the end."

"Pray without ceasing," said an old apostle, and so says a later. The troubles to come are more grievious than what have been; so be ready.

Joseph Smith, our martyred prophet, left the following prophecy to be fulfilled:

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, darkness covereth the earth and gross darkness the minds of the people, and all flesh shall become corrupt before my face! Behold vengeance cometh speedily upon the inhabitants of the earth; a day of wrath; a day of burning; a day of desolation; of weeping; of mourning and of lamentation; and as a whirlwind it shall come upon all the face of the earth, saith the Lord.

And upon my house shall it begin; and from my house shall it go forth saith the Lord. First among those among you saith the Lord; who have professed to know my name and have not known me, and have blasphemed against me in the midst of my house saith the Lord."

From the above it is evident that after the church suffers the world has to come in for its share of woe—and now after fourteen years suffering, who does not see the Lord begin to pour out a little vengeance like a whirlwind?

Be faithful and patient, then saints, and He that said to the flood "come," and make an end of wickedness, will say also "go," to the elements, and sweep the earth with the besom of destruction till it is fit for Paradise again, and then my people shall inherit the kingdom. Watch and pray.

NEW GOODS!

A. SORLEY,

St. Joseph, Missouri,

IS now receiving a splendid lot of SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS, of every description, of the Latest Style and Patterns. And is prepared to offer Great Inducements to all who may favor him with a call. His stock comprises a general assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, and Bonnets. Also, a large and well selected assortment of Iron and nails.

My plan is to sell for CASH ONLY, and at a small advance on cost; the rate charged for goods at my store, will contrast largely with prices paid by those who buy on time. Many place an undue importance on the credit system, unmidful of the fact, that constitutes a nominal profit, yet when compared with the invariable cash system it is a positive loss.

Selling on time is hazardous under the best circumstances. Those who sell on time must buy on time. Therefore, I will say to my old customers and the public generally, that you will save much by calling and examining my Stock of Goods, before purchasing.

A. SORLEY.

POETRY.

THE PRINTER.

Among the ranks of human kind,
Some go before, and some behind,
But mark them well and you shall find
Not almost is the Printer.

Of numbers oft he takes the lead,
And is a gentleman, indeed,
For whom the world has utmost need,
This very self same Printer.

The lessons which you learn at school,
That you might not grow up a fool.
Had all, in scientific rule,
Been published by the Printer.

How do your Presidents and Kings
Govern so many thousand things?
'Tis by the types, and screws, and springs,
Belonging to the Printer.

The farmer, and mechanic, too,
Would, sometimes, scarce know what to do;
Could they not get a certain view
Of work done by the Printer.

The doctor cannot meet the crooks
Of all his cases, till he looks
Upon the pages of the books
Supplied him by the Printer.

The lawyer for a wit has passed,
But high as he his head may cast,
He would be but a dunce, at last,
Were it not for the Printer.

Who is it that so neatly tells
The various goods the merchant sells,
Inviting all the beaux and belles?
Who is it but the Printer?

Two classes of the human race,
Of different size, of different face,
Appears in this and every place—
Now obvious to the Printer!

One sings the bass on sharps and flats,
Bedecked with pantaloons and hats,
And long-tailed coats, and smooth cravats;
Of this class is the Printer.

The other sings the treble sweet,
Adorned with frocks and bonnets neat.
And look! how beauteous and complete,
And lovely to the Printer!

'Tis Hymen's will, of course you know,
These classes should in couples go,
And, since the world will have it so,
So be it, says the Printer.

There's not a man below the skies,
Who better understands to prize
The charms that grace a lady's eyes,
Than does this very Printer.

Young Maidens, then, without debate,
'Tis hoped you'll duly estimate,
Before in fact it be too late,
The value of the Printer.

MISCELLANY.

We make the following extracts from Sidney Smith's "Sketches of Moral Philosophy," just published.

Change of Instinct.

The most curious instance of a change of instinct is mentioned in Darwin. The bees carried to Barbadoes and the Western Islands ceased to lay up any honey after the first year. They found the weather so fine, and the material for honey so plentiful, that they quitted their grave, prudent and mercantile character, became exceedingly profligate and debauched, eat up their capital, resolved to work no longer, and amused themselves by flying about the sugar houses, and stinging the negroes.

Man in Society.

You spend your morning in learning from Hume, what happened at particular periods of your own history. You dine where some men tells you what he observed in the East Indies, and another discourses of brown sugar and Jamaica. It is from these perpetual rills of knowledge that you refresh yourself, and become strong and healthy as you are. If lions would consort together, and growl out the observations they have made about killing sheep and shepherds, the most likely plan for catching a calf grazing, and so forth, they could not fail to improve.

Indestructibility of Enjoyment.

Mankind are always happier for having been happy; so that if you make them happy now, you make them happy twenty years hence, by the memory of it. A childhood passed with a due mixture of rational indulgence, under fond and wise parents, diffuses over the whole of life a feeling of calm pleasure, and in extreme old age, is the very last remembrance which time can erase from the mind of man. No enjoyment, however inconsiderable, is confined to the present moment. A man is the happier for life, from having made once an agreeable tour, or lived for any length of time with pleasant people, or enjoyed any considerable interval of innocent pleasure, which contributes to render old men so inattentive to the scenes before them; and carries them back to a world that is past, and to scenes never to be renewed again.

Happiness as a Moral Agent.

That virtue gives happiness, we all know; but if it be true that happiness contributes to virtue, the principle furnishes us with some sort of excuse for the errors excesses of able young men, at the bottom of life fretting with impatience under their obscurity, and hatching a thousand chimeras of being neglected and overlooked by the world. The natural cure of these errors is the sunshine of prosperity; as they get happier, they get better; and learn, from the respect which they receive from others, to respect themselves. "Whenever," says Mr. Lancaster, (in his book just published,) "I met with a boy paticularly mischievous, I made him a monitor; I never knew this fail." The cause for the promotion, and the kind of encouragement it must occasion, I confess, appear rather singular; but of the effect, I have no sort of doubt.

Power of Habit.

Habit uniformly and constantly strengthens all our active exertions; whatever we do often, we become more apt to do. A snuff-taker begins with a pinch of snuff per day, and ends with a pound or two every month. Swearing begins in anger; it ends by mingling itself with ordinary conversation. Such like instances are of too common notoriety to need that they be adduced; but as I have before observed, at the very time that the tendency to do the thing is every day increasing, the pleasure resulting from it is, by the blunted sensibility of the bodily organ diminished; and the desire is irresistable, though the gratification is nothing. There is rather an entertaining example of this in Fielding's "Life of Jonathan Wild," in that scene where he is represented as playing at cards with the Count, a gamble. "Such," says Mr. Fielding, "was the power of habit over the minds of those illustrious persons, that Mr. Wild could not keep his hands out of the Count's pocket, though he knew they were empty; nor could the Count abstain from palming a card, though he was well aware Mr. Wild had no money to pay him.

Puns.

I have mentioned puns. There are, I believe, what I have denominated them—the wit of words. They are exactly the same to words that wit is to ideas, and consist in the sudden discovery of relations in language. A pun, to be perfection in its kind, should contain two meanings; the one common and obvious; the other, more remote; and in the notice which the mind takes of the relation between these two sets of words, and in the surprise which that relation excites, the pleasure of a pun consists. Miss Hamilton, in her book on education, mentions the instance of a boy so very neglectful, that he could never be brought to read the word patriarchs; but whenever he met with it he pronounced it patridges. A friend of the writer observed to her, that he could hardly considered a mere piece of negligence, for it appeared to him that the boy in calling them patridges, was making game of the patriarchs. Now there are two distinct meanings contained in the same phrase; for to make game of the patriarchs is to laugh at them; or to make game of them is by a very extravagent and laughable sort of ignorance of words, to rank them among pheasants, partridges, and other such delicacies, which the law takes under its protection, and calls game; and the whole pleasure derived from this pun consists in the sudden discovery that two such different meanings are referable to one form of expression. I have very little to says about puns; they are in very bad repute, and so they ought to be. The wit of language is so miserably inferior to the wit of ideas, that it is very deservedly driven out of good company. Sometimes, indeed, a pun makes its appearance, which seems for a moment to redeem its species; but we must not be deceived by them; it is a radically bad race of wit. By unremitting persecution, it has been at last got under and driven into cloisters—from whence it must never again be suffered to emerge into the light of the world.

A Bet Fairly Won; Or, the Ventriloquist Nonplussed.

It was some years prior to the Revolution, when the good old laws for hanging people for numberless crimes (for which a short imprisonment answers now-a-days) were in full vogue, that a small party were gathered one bright moonlight night in an eating cellar, in the city of New York, around an old table, from which the steam rose to the ceiling as it left the surface of a large dish of soup set in its centre. The party appeared in a merry humor, and as three noted characters had that day swung from the scaffold, the topic of conversation naturally turned upon the execution.

"Old Jake died game at all events," said one of the men.

"I'm 'fraid that's mor'n you'll do," retorted another.

"I don't fear death in any shape," replied the first speaker.

"You don't hey!" suddenly chimed in a third person.

"No, I don't, nor I can't be scared either." Was the bragging answer.

"You can't, humph—allow me to doubt that, will you," sneered his opponent.

"If you don't believe it, you are freely privileged to test me, but mind you, the consequences be on your own head, not mine."

"Well, we'll see. You don't fear dead people; do you?"

"Not so much as living ones."

"Very well. Now, then, I'll bet you twenty dollars, that you darn't go down to the scaffold and feed one of the men hung to day, with some hot soup."

"Are you in earnest?"

"Never more so in my life; there's the money—let's see you cover it."

The boaster put his hand in his pocket, drew forth a well-filled wallet, and placed twenty more dollars upon the table.

"Then you take the bet!" exclaimed the opponent in a surprised voice.

"I do. Let George hold the stakes."

The preliminaries were soon all arranged, and with a bowl of soup and spoon the boaster took his way to the scaffold.

Now it so happened that the person with whom he had bet was a ventriloquist, and no sooner had he left the house, when his opponent also departed, taking a short by-way to the scaffold, by which means he reached the place three or four minutes in advance of the soup feeder, and getting under it, took his station behind one of the posts, and awaited his coming. In a few moments the bragger appeared, and when at the steps he looked cautiously around him, then quickly ascended, and stood beside one of the corpses. The wind moaned and the chains creaked, as the bodies swung to and fro, but without hesitation, the boaster seized the spoon, and raised it full of soup to the dead man's lips. Now was the ventriloquist's time. As the handle of the spoon was raised, the corpse suddenly exclaimed in the sepulchral tones of the dead—

"It's hot!"

"Well d—n you, blow it then!" was the instant retort of the feeder, as he coolly lowered the spoon, descended the scaffold, and took his way back to the cellar.

The ventriloquist also made tracks for the same place, and fully testified that the bet had been fairly won, and swearing that after what had taken place that night his opponent might brag as much as he pleased, but he wouldn't get another wager out of him.

Let your thoughts be as and suitable for the subject. Every day have higher thoughts of God — lower thoughts of self — kinder thoughts of your brethren, and more hopeful thoughts of all around you.

There's many a good wife that can't sing and dance well.

Woman's Mission.

How strange it seems, says the City Item, to hear a harsh word fall from a woman's mouth. To hear a stern rebuke issue from lips which we have always been taught to think were the portals whence fell those pearls of life, the gentle syllables of love. Since our earliest childhood, when every grief was forgotten in the kind caress and gentle tone of a doting mother, we have looked on woman as a being to brighten the dark hours of man's life, to comfort him in sorrow, and linger near him in affliction. Instead of supposing our own sex the strongest in misfortune, we have always fancied that woman was our stay and support, and that her mind was not so easily overpowered by grief. This is for the most part true. The woman's hand that soothes the burning pillow of the dying; 'tis woman's form that hovers near the abode of misery, bringing comfort and happiness where want and poverty had long reigned, and 'tis woman's love that falls on the ear of the guilty one, shows him the errors of his ways, and leads him from the path of shame and ignominy.

It is not long since we saw an instance of man's devotion, which led us to the belief that there are as kindly and gentle chords of tenderness naturally planted in his breast as there are in woman's.

With a friend we took a sent in the cars to spend a day in a neighboring town. Seated at the farthest end, we saw a woman wrapped in a large black shawl, and a hood of the same color was drawn nearly over her face. Suddenly she tore it back, and starting up, laughed and shrieked with a wild unearthly voice. She was a maniac. The light of reason was gone, and the dark pall of madness hung over her brain. By her side sat a man whose arm encircled her slim waist, while ever and anon he breathed some kind word into her ear which soothed her paroxysm. The voice, which, in halcyon days of youth, wrought the spell of love upon her heart, and not even in this dark hour lost its power, and he would gaze into her hollow orbs with so much tenderness that we almost wept to find his look rewarded only by the cold, unconscious stare of the maniac. As we gazed on them, we thought what a lesson for some in the world, some who have recently been endeavoring to severe the holy bonds of matrimony, because the gilt is worn from the chains of love. If you could have seen this man clinging to the wreck of all his hopes and joys, clinging fervently to her whom he had wedded in youth and beauty, when the bloom of health was on her cheek, and the fire of intellect in her eye, when she indeed most needed him, it would have been a sad but terrible lesson to them. There are some we know who scoff at the constancy of man, and mock the idea of his own loving, but here was an instance of as pure devotion as ever warmed a human heart. We parted from them with a deep regret that such love was so rare.

A Dandy's Creed.

I believe that a gentleman is any person with a tolerable suit of clothes, a watch and snuff-box in his pocket, and a quizzing glass suspended from his neck.

I believe that honor means standing fire well; that advice means an affront; and conviction a leaden pill.

I believe that adoration is only due to a fine woman, or her purse; and that a woman can keep one secret—namely, her age.

I believe that playing at rouge et noir is the only honorable way of getting a livelihood; that a man of honor never pays his tradesmen, because they are pack of scoundrels;" and that buying goods means ordering them without the purpose of paying.

I believe that debt is a necessary evil.

I believe dress means nakedness in females; that husband implies a person engaged to pay a woman's debts; that economy means pusilanimity; and that any person talking about decency is a bore.

I believe that there is not a cleverer or prettier fellow in the town than myself; and that as regards the women, I am perfectly irresistable.—[N. Y. Fashion.

"Aunt, Aunt Partington!" said little Bodderskins, "they will not wait until I put salt on their tails; and with that he fell a-weeping.

"The tears of childhood," said Miss Frederika Bremer, "are the true holy water. They flow in pearly clearness from the sorrows of the heart, as fresh springs from the bowels of the mountains." Mrs. Partington felt this. Like all matrons of good new England, her heart is tender and true, pulsating to its innermost radience with good.

THE MORTAL REMAINS OF JAMES K. POLK, late President of the United States, were yesterday removed from their temporary resting place in the cemetery, with appropriate and impressive ceremonies of public solemnity and respect, and deposited in the private vault prepared for them, in the beautiful lawn, in front of the family residence in this city.—[Nashville True Whig, 25.

CUBA.—All is quiet in our relations with Spain. The bodies of those shot are to be returned to the United States and be decently, perhaps honorably buried—mausoleums raised to their memory at some future time both in Cuba and the States. Those taken upon neutral grounds, and now in the dungeons of the Moro Castle, though not allowed to be visited by the American Consuls, we are assured by Don De Sa Barca, they are well supplied with all the elegancies of life, and after a few Spanish preliminaries are gone through with, will be released and conducted home in the Pizzarro. Who would not prefer so comfortable, so elevated a position to the common monotony of American freedom? Spain has more than redeemed herself in this grand enterprise. She feels it, knows it, and is now about to attack and crush the liberties of Hayti. Will the United States be dazzled with the glory and contribute her might to the grandeur of Spain? Or have we internal difficulties enough for immediate occupation?

There are two ways of gaining a reputation; to be praised by honest men, or abused by rogues.

OH YES!

The Old Pioneer on the Track Again!

MR. HENRY W. MILLER, well known in this region, as one of the first western men, has joined me as partner; and we have removed our large stock of English Goods,

Imported Direct from Liverpool,

to our new store opposite our late stand; and in addition to the largest and

Best Stock of Hardware and Smallwares

in Kanesville, we have selected some superior lots of

Dry Goods, Iron, Steel, Springs, Axles, Axes and Holloware,

in the St. Louis Market, expressly for the WINTER TRADE, and the necessities of this community.

We have re-marked all our goods and have agreed to sell off our stock—superior in quality though it lie—at prices sufficiently low to induce a continuation and increase of our trade; and to remove an influence existing, not altogether without foundation, that some of the goods of the late firm—Brown & Barham were too high; in a word, we only want to live among you and desire not to enrich ourselves, at your cost, we wish "to spend and be spent," for the good of the cause, which is to us, as to you the greatest and best. Our motto in business, is and shall be

"Small Profits and Quick Returns."

The truthfulness of which you cannot prove unless you come, see and trade with

BROWN & MILLER.

N. B. All accounts due to the late firm—Brown & Barham, will be received, settled and accounted for by THOMAS D. BROWN, at Brown & Millers store.

M., of the 1st day of July, 1850, to be decided the same day:

MISSOURI.

No. 4965. From Independence, Missouri, by Fort Kearney, Fort Laramie, Fort Bridger, Fort Smith, Salt Lake, Fort Hall, Fort Boise, Grand Ronde, and The Dalles, to Oregon City, Oregon Territory, 1,900 miles, and back four times a year;

Leave Independence on the 1st day of July, October, January, and April in each year at 6 A. M.;

Arrive at Oregon City in 60 days thereafter by 6 P. M.;

Leave Oregon City on the 1st day of July, October, January, and April in each year at 6 A. M.;

Arrive at Independence in 60 days thereafter by 6 P. M.;

Proposals to carry the mail upon the most direct route from Independence, by Salt Lake, to Oregon City will be considered; also, seperate proposals for so much of the foregoing service, either on the most direct road or by the forts named, as lies between Independence and Salt Lake and between Salt Lake and Oregon City, will be considered; also, for service to Salt Lake and back twelve times a year, leaving Independence and Salt Lake on the first day of each month and arriving at the other end of the route on the last day of same month; and also for eight trips a year.

Proposals to commence the route at Kane, Iowa, or at St. Joseph's, Missouri, instead of Independence, will be considered.

For notes see general advertisement and the following, viz:

FORM FOR A BID

Where no change from advertisement is contemplated by the bidder:

"I (or we, as the case may be) [here write the name or names in full] of [here state the residence or residences] hereby propose to carry the mail on No.——from——to——as often as the advertisement requires, in the time stated in the schedules, and by the following mode of conveyance, to wit: [Here state how it is to be conveyed,] for the annual sum of $——."

Dated

Form of a guaranty to accompany each bid.

"The undersigned [here insert the name of the guarantor or guarantors; guaranties that [here insert the name of the bidder or names of bidders, as the case may be] if his (or their) bid for carrying the mail from——to——be accepted by the Postmaster General, shall enter into an obligation prior to the first day of August next, with good and sufficient sureties, to perform the service proposed."

Dated

Form of certificate.

The undersigned, postmaster of——, certified that the guarantors above named are sufficient and able to make good their guaranty.

Dated

The bid should be sent under seal, addressed to the First Assistant Postmaster General, with "Mail Proposals to [name the State and Territory,]" written on the face of the letter; and should be despatched in time to be received by or before the 1st day of July next at 10 o'clock A. M. It should be guaranteed, and the sufficiency of the guarantors should be duly certified.

A bidder may offer, where the transportation called for in the advertisement is difficult or impracticable at certain seasons, to substitute an inferior mode of conveyance or to intermit service a specified number of days, weeks, or months. He may propose to omit an office that is inaccessible, or is not on the stage road, the railway, or at a steamboat landing, as the case may be; or he may offer to substitute an inferior mode of supply in such cases. He may propose different days and hours of departure and arrival, provided no more running time is asked, and is obvious that no mail connexion or other public accommodation is prejudiced. He may ask for more running time to the trip during a specified number of days, at certain seasons of peculiar bad roads; but beyond these changes a proposal for service different from the advertisement will prevent its being considered in competition with a regular bid not set aside for extravagance; and where a bid contains any of the above alterations their disadvantages will be estimated in comparing it with other proposals.

J. COLLAMER,

June 26th, 4t. Postmaster General.

THE MORMONS.

A Discourse delivered before the Historical Society of Pennsylvania: March 26, 1850.

BY THOMAS L. KANE.

After this consecration, which was construed to indicate an insincerity on the part of the Mormons as to their stipulated departure, or at least a hope of return, their foes set upon them with renewed bitterness. As many fled as were at all prepared; but by the very fact of their so decreasing the already diminished forces of the city's defenders, they encouraged the enemy to greater boldness. It soon became apparent that nothing short of an immediate emigration could save the remnant.

From this time onward the energies of those already on the road were engrossed by the duty of providing for the fugitives who came crowding in after them. At a last general meeting of the sect in Nauvoo, there had been passed an unanimous resolve that they would sustain one another, whatever their circumstances, upon the march; and this, though made in view of no such appalling exigency, they now with one accord set themselves together to carry out.

Here begins the touching period of Mormon history; on which but that it is for me a hackneyed subject, I should be glad to dwell, were it only for the proof it has afforded of the strictly material value to communities of a active common faith, and its happy illustrations of the power of the spirit of Christian fraternity to relieve the deepest of human suffering. I may assume that it has already fully claimed the public sympathy.

Delayed thus by their own wants, and by their exertions to provide for the wants of others, it was not till the month of June that the advance of the emigrant companies arrived at the Missouri.

This body I remember I had to join there, ascending the river for the purpose from Fort Leavenworth, which was at that time our frontier post. The fort was the interesting rendezvous of the Army of the West, and the head-quarters of its gallant chief, Stephen F. Kearney, whose guest and friend I account it my honor to have been. Many as were the reports daily received at the garrison from all portions of the Indian territory, it was a significant fact, how little authentic intelligence was to be obtained concerning the Mormons. Even the region in which they were to be sought after, was a question not attempted to be designated with accuracy, except by what are very well called in the West,—Mormon stories; none of which bore any sifting. One of these averred, that a party of Mormons in spangled crimson robes of office, headed by one in black velvet and silver, had been teaching a Jewish pow-wow to the medicine men of the Sauks and Foxes. Another averred that they were going about in buffalo robe short frocks, imitative of the costume of Saint John, preaching baptism and the instance of the kingdom of heaven among the Ioways. To believe one report, ammunition and whiskey had been received by Indian braves at the hands of an elder with a flowing white beard, who spoke Indian, he alleged, because he had the gift of tongues:—this, as far North as the country of the Yanketon Sioux. According to another yet, which professed to be derived officially from at least one Indian sub-agent, the Mormons had distributed the scarlet uniforms of H. B. M.'s servants among the Pottawatamies, and had carried into their country twelve pieces of brass cannon, which were counted by a traveler as they were rafted across the East Fork of Grand River, one of the northern tributaries of the Missouri. The narrators of these pleasant stories were at variance as to the position of the Mormons, by a couple of hundred leagues; but they harmonized in the warning, that to seek certain of the leading camps would be to meet the treatment of a spy.

Almost at the outset of my journey from Fort Leavenworth, while yet upon the edge of the Indian border, I had the good fortune to fall in with a couple of thin-necked sallow persons, in patchwork pantaloons, conducting Northward wagon-loads of Indian corn, which they had obtained, according to their own account, in barter from a squatter for some silver spoons and a feather bed. Their character was disclosed by their eager request of a bite from my wallet; in default of which, after a somewhat superfluous scriptural grace, they made an imperfect lunch before me off the softer of their corn ears, eating the grain as horses do, from the cob. I took their advice to follow up the Missouri; somewhere not far from which, in the Pottawatamie country, they were sure I would encounter one of their advancing companies.

I had bad weather on the road. Excessive heats, varied only by repeated drenching thunder squalls, knocked up my horse, my only traveling companion; and otherwise added to the ordinary hardships of a kind of life to which I was as yet little accustomed. I suffered a sence of discomfort, therefore, amounting to physical nostalgia, and was, in fact, wearied to death of the staring silence of the prairie, before I came upon the objects of my search.

They were collected a little distance above the Pottawatamie Agency. The hills of the "High Prairie" crowding in upon the river at this point, and overhanging it, appear of an unusual and commanding elevation. They are called the Council Bluffs; a name given them with another meaning, but well illustrated by the picturesque Congress of their high and mighty summits. To the south of them, a rich alluvial flat of considerable width follows down the Missouri, some eight miles, to where it is lost from view at a turn, which forms the site of the Indian town of Point aux Poules. Across the river from this spot the hills recur again, but are skirted at their base by as much low ground as suffices for a landing.

This landing, and the large flat or bottom on the east side of the river, were crowded with covered carts and wagons; and each one of the Council Bluff hills opposite was crowned with its own great camp, gay with bright white canvas, and alive with the busy stir of swarming occupants. In the clear blue morning air, the smoke streamed up from more than a thousand cooking fires. Countless roads and by-paths checkered all manner of geometric figures on the hillsides. Herd boys were dozing upon the slopes; sheep and horses, cows and oxen, were feeding around them, and other heards in the luxuriant meadow of the then swollen river. From a single point I counted four thousand head of cattle in view at one time. As I approached the camps, it seemed to me the children there were to prove still more numerous. Along a little creek I had to cross were women in greater force than blanchisseuses upon the Seine, washing and rinsing all manner of white muslins, red flannels and particolored calicoes, and hanging them to bleach upon a greater area of grass and bushes than we can display in all our Washington Square.

Hastening by these, I saluted a group of noisy boys, whose purely vernacular cries had for me an invincible home-savoring attraction. It was one of them, a bright faced lad, who, hurrying on his jacket and trowsers, fresh from bathing in the creek, first assured me I was at my right destination. He was a mere child; but he told me of his own accord where I had best go seek my welcome, and took my horse's bridle to help me pass a morass, the bridge over which he alleged to be unsafe.

There was something joyous for me in my free rambles about this vast body of pilgrims. I could range the wild country wherever I listed, under safeguard of their moving host. Not only in the main camps was all stir and life, but in every direction, it seemed to me, I could follow 'Mormon Roads,' and find them beaten hard and even dusty by the tread and wear of the cattle and vehicles of emigrants laboring over them. By day, I would overtake and pass, one after another, what amounted to an army train of them; and at night, if I encamped at the places where the timber and running water were found together, I was almost sure to be within call of some camp or other, or at least within sight of its watch-fires. Wherever I was compelled to tarry, I was certain to find shelter and hospitality, scant, indeed, but never stinted, and always honest and kind. After a recent unavoidable association with the border inhabitants of Western Missouri and Iowa, the vile scum which our own society, to apply the words of an admirable gentleman and eminent divine, "like the great ocean washes upon its frontier shores," I can scarcely describe the gratification I felt in associating again with persons who were almost all of Eastern American origin,—persons of refined and cleanly habits and decent language,—and in observing their peculiar and interesting mode of life;—while every day seemed to bring with it its own especial incident, fruitful in the illustration of habits and character.

It was during the period of which I have just spoken, that the Mormon battalion of five hundred and twenty men was recruited and marched to the Pacific Coast.

At the commencement of the Mexican war, the president considered it desirable to march a body of reliable infantry to California at as early a period as practicable, and the known hardihood and habits of discipline of the Mormons were supposed peculiarly to fit them for this service. As California was supposed also to be their ultimate destination, the long march might cost them less than other citizens. They were accordingly invited to furnish a battalion of volunteers early in the month of July.

The call could hardly have been more inconveniently timed. The young, and those who could best have been spared, were then away from the main body, either with pioneer companies in the van, or, their faith unannounced, seeking work and food about the north-western settlements, to support them till the return of the season for commencing emigration. The force was therefore to be recruited from among fathers of families, and others whose presence it was most desirable to retain.

There were some, too, who could not view the invitation without jealousy. They had twice been persuaded by (State) Government authorities in Illinois and Missouri, to give up their arms on some special appeals to their patriotic confidence, and had then been left to the malice of their enemies. And now they were asked, in the midst of the Indian country, to surrender over five hundred of their best men for a war march of thousands of miles to California, without the hope of return till after the conquest of that country. Could they view such a proposition with favor?

But the feeling of country triumphed. The Union had never wronged them: "You shall have your battalion at once, if it has to be a class of our elders," said one, himself a ruling elder. A central 'mass meeting' for Council, some harangues at the more remotely scattered camps, an American flag brought out from the storehouse of things rescued, and hoisted to the top of a tree mast—and, in three days, the force was reported, mustered, organized and ready to march.

There was no sentimental affectation at their leave taking. The afternoon before was appropriated to a farewell ball; and a more merry dancing rout I have never seen though the company went without refreshments, and their ball room was of the most primitive. It was the custom, whenever the larger camps rested for a few days together, to make great arbors, or Boweries, as they called them, of poles and brush and wattling, as places of shelter for their meetings of devotion or conference. In one of these, where the ground had been trodden firm and hard by the worshippers of the popular Father Taylor's precinct, was gathered now the mirth and beauty of the Mormon Israel.

If anything told the Mormons had been bred to other lives, it was the appearance of the women, as they assembled here. Before their flight, they had sold their watches and trinkets as the most available resource for raising ready money; and hence, like their partners, who wore waistcoats cut with useless watch pockets, they, although their ears were pierced and bore the loop-marks of rejected pendants, were without ear-rings, finger rings, chains or brooches. Except such ornaments, however, they lacked nothing most becoming the attire of decorous maidens. The neatly darned white stocking, and clean bright petticoat, the artistically clear starched collar and chemisette, the something faded, only because too well washed, lawn or gingham gown, that fitted modishly to the waist of its pretty wearer,—these, if any of them spoke of poverty, spoke of a poverty that had known its better days.

With the rest, attended the elders of the church within call, including nearly all the chiefs of the High Council, with their wives and children. They, the gravest and most trouble-worn, seemed the most anxious of any to be first to throw off the burden of heavy thoughts. Their leading off the dancing in a great double cotillion was the signal bade the festivity commence. To the canto of debonnair violins, the cheer of horns, the jingle of sleigh-bells, and the jovial snoaring of the tambourine, they did dance! None of your minuets or other mortuary processions of gentles in etiquette, tight shoes, and pinching gloves, but the spirited and scientific displays of our venerated and merry grandparents, who were not above following the fiddle to the Fox-Chase Inn or Gardens of Gray's Ferry. French fours, Copenhagen jigs Virginia reels, and the like forgotten figures, executed with the spirit of people too happy to be slow, or bashful or constrained. Light hearts, lithe figures and light feet, had it their own way from an early hour till after the sun had dipped behind the sharp sky line of the Omaha hills. Silence was then called, and a well cultivated mezzo-soprano voice, belonging to a young lady with fair face and dark eyes, gave with quartette accompaniment a little song, the notes of which I have been unsuccessful in repeated efforts to obtain since.—a version of the text, touching to all earthly wanderers:

"By the rivers of Babylon we sat down and wept."
"We wept when we remembered Zion."

There was danger of some expression of feeling when the song was over, for it had begun to draw tears; but breaking the quiet with his hard voice, an Elder asked the blessing of Heaven on all who, with purity of heart and brotherhood of spirit, had mingled in that society, and then, all dispersed, hastening to cover from the falling dews. All, I remember, but some splendid Indians, who in cardinal scarlet blankets and feathered leggings, had been making foreground figures for the dancing rings, like those in Mr. West's picture of our Philadelphia Treaty, and staring their inability to comprehend the wonderful performances. These loitered to the last, as if unwilling to seek their abject homes.

Well as I knew the peculiar fondness of the Mormons for music, their orchestra in service on this occasion astonished me by its numbers and fine drill. The story was, that an eloquent Mormon missionary had converted its members in a body to an English town, a stronghold of the sect, and that they took up their trumpets, trombones, drums and hautboys together, and followed him to America.

When the refugees from Nauvoo were hastening to part with their table-ware, jewelry, and almost every other fragment of metal wealth they possessed that was not iron, they had never a thought of giving up the instruments of this favorite band. And when the battalion was enlisted, though high inducements were offered some of the performers to accompany it, they all refused. Their fortunes went with the Camp of the Tabernacle. They had led the Farewell Service in the Nauvoo Temple. Their office now was to guide the monster choruses and Sunday hymns; and like the trumpets of silver made of a whole piece for the calling of the assembly, and for the journeying of the camps,' to knoll the people in to church. Some of their wind instruments, indeed, were uncommonly full and pure toned, and in that clear dry air could be heard to a great distance. It had the strangest effect in the world, to listen to their sweet music winding over the uninhabited country. Something in the style of a Moravian death-tune blown at day-break, but altogether unique. It might be when you were hunting a ford over the Great Platte, the dreariest of all wild rivers, perplexed among the far-reaching sand bars and curlew shallows of its shifting bed:—the wind rising would bring you the first faint thought of a melody; and, as you listened, borne down upon the gust that swept past you a cloud of the dry sifted sands, you recognized it—perhaps a home-loved theme of Henry Proch or Mendelssohn. Mendelssohn Bartholdy, away there in the Indian Marches!

The battalion gone, the host again moved on. The tents which had gathered on the hill summits, like white birds hesitating to venture on the long flight over the river, were struck one after another, and the dwellers in them and their wagons and their cattle hastened down to cross it at a ferry in the valley, which they made ply night and day. A little beyond the landing they formed their companies, and made their preparations for the last and longest stage of their journey. It was a more serious matter to cross the mountains then than now, that the thirst of our people for the gold of California has made the region between them and their desire such literally trodden ground.

Thanks to this wonderful movement, I may dismiss an effort to describe the incidents of emigrant life upon the Plains, presuming that you have been made more than familiar with then already, by the many repeated descriptions of which they have been the subject. The desert march, the ford, the quicksand, the indian battle, the bison chase, the prairie fire:—the adventures of the Mormons comprised every variety of these varieties; but I could not hope to invest them with the interest of novelty. The character of their every-day life, its routine and conduct, alone offered any exclusive or marked peculiarity. Their romantic devotional observances, and their admirable concert of purpose and action, met the eye at once. After these the stranger was most struck perhaps by the strict order of march, the unconfused closing up to meet attack, the skilful securing of the cattle upon the halt, the system with which the watches were set at night to guard them and the lines of corral—with other similar circumstances indicative of the maintenance of a high state of discipline. Every ten of their wagons was under the care of a captain. This captain of ten, as they termed him, obeyed a captain of fifty; who, in turn, obeyed his captain of a hundred, or directly a member of what they call the High Council of the Church. All these were responsible and determined men, approved of by the people for their courage, discretion and experience. So well recognized were the results of this organization, that bands of hostile Indians have passed by comparative small parties of Mormons, to attack much larger, but less compact bodies of other emigrants.

The most striking feature, however, of the Mormon emigration, was undoubtedly their formation of the Tabernacle Camps and temporary Stakes, or Settlements, which renewed in the sleeping solitudes everywhere along their road, the cheering signs of intelligent and hopeful life.

I will make this remark plainer by describing to you one of these camps, with the daily routine of its inhabitants. I select at random, for my purpose, a large camp upon the delta between the Nebraska and Missouri, in the territory disputed between the Omaha, and Otto and Missouria Indians. It remained pitched here for nearly two months, during which period I resided in it.

It was situated near the Petit Papillon, or Little Butterfly River, and upon some finely rounded hills that encircle a favorite cool spring. On each of these a square was marked out; and the wagons as they arrived took their positions along its four sides in double rows, so as to leave a roomy street or passage-way between them. The tents were disposed also in rows, at intervals between the wagons. The cattle were folded in high fenced yards outside. The quadrangle inside was left vacant for the sake of ventilation, and the streets, covered in with leafy arbor work and kept scrupulously clean, formed a shaded cloister walk. This was the place of exercise for slowly recovering invalids, the day-home of the infants, and the evening promenade of all.

From the first formation of the camp, all its inhabitants were constantly and laboriously occupied. Many of them were highly educated mechanics, and seemed only to need a day's anticipated rest to engage them at the forge, loom, or turning lathe, upon some needed chore of work. A Mormon gunsmith is the inventor of the excellent repeating rifle, that loads by slides instead of cylenders; and one of the neatest finished fire-arms I have ever seen was of this kind, wrought from scraps of old iron, and inlaid with the silver of a couple of half dollars, under a hot July sun, in a spot where the average height of the grass was above the workman's shoulders. I have seen a cobbler, after the halt of his party on the march, hunting along the river bank for a lap-stone in the twilight, that he might finish a famous boot sole by the camp fire; and I have had a piece of cloth, the wool of which was sheared, and dyed, and spun, and woven, during a progress of over three hundred miles.

Their more interesting occupations, however, were those growing out of their peculiar circumstances and position. The chiefs were seldom without some curious affair on hand to settle with the restless Indians; while the immense labor and responsibility of the conduct of their unwieldy moving army, and the commissariat of its hundreds of famishing poor, also devolved upon them. They had good men they called Bishops, whose special office it was to look up the cases of extremest suffering: and their relief parties were out night and day to scour over every trail.

At this time, say two months before the final expulsion from Nauvoo, there were already, along three hundred miles of the road between that city and our Papillon Camp, over two thousand emigrating wagons, besides a large number of nondescript turn-outs, the motley make-shifts of poverty; from the unsuitably heavy cart that lumbered on mysteriously with its sick driver hidden under its counterpane cover, to the crazy two-wheeled trundle, such as our own poor employ for the conveyance of their slop barrels, this pulled along it may be by a little dry dugged heifer, and rigged up only to drag some such light weight as a baby, a sack of meal, or a pack of clothes and bedding.

Some of them were in distress from losses upon the way. A strong trait of the Mormons was their kindness to their brute dependents, and particularly to their beasts of draught. They gave them the holiday of the Sabbath whenever it came round: I believe they would have washed them with old wine, after the example of the emigrant Carthaginians, had they had any. Still, in the Slave-coast heats, under which the animals had to move, they sometimes foundered. Sometimes, too, they strayed off in the night, or were mired in morasses;—or oftener were stolen by Indians, who found market covert for such plunder among the horse-thief whites of the frontier. But the great mass of these pilgrims of the desert was made up of poor folks, who had fled in destitution from Nauvoo, and been refused a resting place by the people of Iowa.

It is difficult fully to understand the state of helplessness in which some of these would arrive, after accomplishing a journey of such extent, under circumstances of so much privation and peril. The fact was, they seemed to believe that all their trouble would be at an end if they could only come up with their comrades at the Great Camps. For this they calculated their resources, among which their power of endurance was by much the largest and most reliable item, and they were not disappointed if they arrived with these utterly exhausted.

I remember a signal instance of this at the Papillon Camp.

It was that of a joyous hearted clever fellow, whose songs and fiddle tunes were the life and delight of Nauvoo in its merry days. I forget his story, and how exactly, it fell about, that after a Mormon's full peck of troubles, he started after us with his wife and little ones from some 'lying down place' in the Indian country, where he had contended with an attack of a serious malady. He was just convalescent, and the fatigue of marching on foot again with a child on his back, speedily brought on a relapse. But his anxiety to reach a place where he could expect to meet friends with shelter and food, was such that he only pressed on the harder. Probably for more than a week of the dog-star weather, he labored on under a high fever, walking every day till he was entirely exhausted.

His limbs failed him then; but his courage holding out, he got into his covered cart on top of its freight of baggage, and made them drive him on, while he lay down. They could hardly believe how ill he was, he talked on so cheerfully—"I'm nothing on earth ailing but home-sick: I'm cured the very minute I get to camp and see the brethren."

Not being able thus to watch his course, he lost his way, and had to regain it through a wretched tract of Low Meadow Prairie, where there were no trees to break the noon, nor water but what was ague-sweet or brackish. By the time he got back to the trail of the High Prairie, he was, in his own phrase, 'pretty far gone.' Yet he was resolute in his purpose as ever, and to a party he fell in with, avowed his intention to be cured at the camp, 'and no where else.' He even jested with them, comparing his jolting couch to a summer cot in a white washed cockloft. "But I'll make them take me down," he said, "and give me a dip in the river when I get there. All I care for is to see the brethren."

His determined bearing rallied the spirit of his travelling household, and they kept on their way till he was within a few hours journey of the camp. He entered on his last day's journey with the energy of increased hope.

I remember that day well. For in the evening I mounted a tired horse to go a short errand, and in mere pity had to turn back before I had walked him a couple of hundred yards. Nothing seemed to draw life from the languid air but the clouds of gnats and stinging midges; and long after sundown it was so hot that the sheep lay on their stomachs panting, and the cattle strove to lap wind like hard fagged hunting dogs. In camp, I had spent the day in watching the invalids and the rest hunting the shade under the wagon bodies, and veering about them, like the shadows round the sun-dial. I know I thought myself wretched enough, to be of their company.

Poor Merryman had all that heat to bear, with the mere pretence of an awning to screen out the sun from his close muslin cockloft.

He did not fail till somewhere hard upon noon. He then began to grow restless to know accurately the distance travelled. He made them give him water, too, much more frequently; and when they stopped for this purpose, asked a number of obscure questions. A little after this he discovered himself that a film had come over his eyes. He confessed that this was discouraging; but said with stubborn resignation, that if denied to see the brethren, he still should hear the sound of their voices.

After this, which was when he was hardly three miles from our camp, he lay very quiet, as if husbanding his strength; but when he had made, as is thought, a full mile further, being interrogated by the woman that was driving, whether she should stop, he answered her, as she avers, "No, no; go on!"

The anecdote ends badly. They brought him in dead, I think about five o'clock of the afternoon. He had on his clean clothes; as he had dressed himself in the morning, looking forward to his arrival.

Elders Hymn.

O come! come, away! from home and friends receding,
From Zion's light—our hearts delight—O come, come, away,
The Gospel trump we're called to blow,
That the meek and humble all may know,
That God's with man below, O come, come away.

O come! to the world, where darkness is prevailing,
Where all is strife—contentions rife, O come, come away,
And tell the news that God to man,
Has sent the ancient Gospel plan,
That Saints all may be one, O come, come, away.

O come! come, away! the harvest now is rip'ning,
And men do fear—that something's near, O come, come, away.
Perplexity does fill the heart;
The signs appearing wise men start,
Up Elders!—light impart! O come, come, away.

O come! come, away! where pestilence is stalking,
Abroad the land—by Heavens command, O come, come, away.
How pleasant 'tis now to proclaim,
Deliverance as sent again.
To which God's pledged his name, O come, come, away.

O yes! let me go! for mankind to be saving
From war, and death—plagues, and distress, O come, come, away.
Behold how Joseph hath pourtrayed,
The blessings which our God hath laid,
On those who Zion aid, in this the Latter-day.

O yes! I will go, for God my heart's inspiring,
His word to preach, the truth to teach, O come, come, away.
I love the truths of heaven to tell,
And on God's kindness sweetly dwell,
When grace my heart does swell, O come, come, away.

Celebration of the 24th of July, at North Pigeon.

Wednesday, July 24, 1850.

The inhabitants of the North Pigeon Branch, met pursuant to previous appointment, for the purpose of recreating themselves, on the day above mentioned. The Presidency of the day having arrived, and also Br. Lyman Stoddard. The music played several tunes while the people were assembling. The meeting was opened by singing "Come let us anew," and prayer by President John Wood, of Honey Creek. The music then gave us another specimen of their professional attainments. Father Stoddart then arose and addressed the people on the object for which they had assembled on the present occasion; in which he set forth the necessity of the Elders of Israel's getting a spirit of wisdom on the present occasion, and be careful how they spoke their sentiments in full, as we know not how many there are in our midst who are ready to make a man an offender for a word. Therefore it is necessary for us to be wise. For we do not celebrate this as a day of liberty; but as a day of thanksgiving before the Lord, for his protecting care manifested in behalf of our brethren, whilst traveling the sandy and barren sage plains of the West, in search of a resting place for the saints of the Most High God. And, also, for the glorious discovery of the Valley where the saints might gather together in peace. And that our spirits may commingle with the spirits of our brethren who have already been blessed with the glorious privilege of settling in peace at the place destined and prepared for the gathering of the saints of the Most High God. These are a few of the reasons why we should seek for a spirit of wisdom, upon this and all other occasions, that we may at all times be blessed with a sufficient portion of the spirit of God, to lead and guide us in the ways of truth and righteousness. He was followed by A. P. Chesley, one of the hundred and forty four that first entered the Valley of the Great Salt Lake from Winter Quarters, July 24, 1847. He read a chapter in the book of Genesis, from which he stated he should endeavor to make some remarks in reference to the saints' emigrating from Nauvoo to Council Bluffs, and from thence to the Valley of the Great Salt Lake. By a chain of powerful ideas he handled his subject in a masterly manner. He also gave an elaborate description of his travels whilst he was one of the pioneers. He also stated that it was impossible for him to give anything like an elaborate description of his feelings, on his view of that Great Valley. We were then favored with another treat from our professional brethren. Prest. Gardner then said that we would have an intermission for the purpose of partaking of some refreshments. Benediction by James Ware.

ham. The procession was then formed in the following order, viz:

Presidents of the day and Father Stoddard.
Vice Presidents.
Clerks of the Day.
Marshal. Strangers. Marshall.
Visitors.
Aged People.
Youth.

The music being placed at the head of the procession, we were then marched around the square near the Bowery, and were seated at the table, covered with the luxuries of life, and first fruits of the earth, even to overflowing. There were seated around the table, one hundred and seventy-six couple, and all partook freely, till every heart was satisfied. After dinner was over, Br James Wareham arose, and made some very appropriate remarks in reference to the trials and tribulations of the Saints in these last days; and also the blessings they have received. Even the privilege we have this day enjoyed, is a demonstrating proof, that we are blessed above all people. Father Stoddard then arose, and spoke upon the principles that had been advanced through the day, and also gave the brethren some very good counsel and advise, which was truly edifying to every true and faithful saint of God.

Closing Benediction by John Laird.

Presidents of the day,
BENJAMIN GARDNER,
JOHN WOOD.
JOHN W. LASLEY, Clerk.

Washington's Farewell Address.

Gen. George Washington in his farewell address being endowed with the spirit of truth, and foreseeing that a day would come when party spirit would run high, and that it would distract the councils of the nation, and admit of Foreign influence to creep in; and that party spirit, if allowed, would soon get so hot that the utmost diligence and caution would not prevent it from bursting into a flame and thereby consume the nation.

We make the following beautiful extract from it:

"I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the State, with particular reference to the founding of them on geographical discriminations. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you, in the most solemn manner, against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness and is truly their worst enemy.

"The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge, natural to party dissension, which, in different ages and countries, has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads, at length, to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result, gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual; and sooner or later, the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

"Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind, (which, nevertheless, ought not to be entirely out of sight,) the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

"It serves always to distract the public councils, and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foments, occasionally riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which find a facilitated access to the Government itself, through the channels of party passions. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

"There is an opinion that parties, in free countries, are useful checks upon the administration of the Government, and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This, within certain limits, is probably true; and in governments of a monarchical cast, patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency, it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose. And there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be, by force of public opinion, to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest, instead of warming it should consume.

MILITARY POSTS.—As the government has issued orders, directing a reconnoisance of the country, between Fort Leavenworth and Senata Fe, for the purpose of selecting suitable sites for the erection of four military forts on that route, we hope the government will extend their operations a little further, and erect a fort near Counil Bluffs. At this time, a heavy and important trade is now carried on between the Mormons at Salt Lake, and the citizens of the United States, and it is but just and proper that some protection should be shown them. In addition to this, there are at this time several tribes of Indians near the Bluffs, who are continually committing depredations upon the citizens in the neighborhood, and a few companies of dragoons at some point near the Bluffs would have the effect of keeping these red men under proper subjection.—[Adventure.

BOSTON, 25th July.

Littlefield and Professor Webster had an interview yesterday in jail, at the desire of the latter. The Professor said he could not rest until he had acknowledged that he had done Littlefield great injury, and asked his forgiveness. He said that Littlefield, in his testimony, had told nothing but the truth, but that he [Webster] knew nothing about the sledge hammer.

We publish the following letter by request of a gentleman at Council Bluffs. The signatures we are acquainted with and acknowledge them to be genuine. A. W. Babbitt, who came here on an electioneering tour acknowledges them, and also claims to be under their instructions to go to Washington to transact business for the people of Deseret. If he was the Delegate of the people of the Great Basin, and sent to Washington to transact business for the inhabitants of that place—which we have no doubt—why did he transcend the bounds of his mission, and leave the interests of the people of Deseret to take care of themselves at Washington and run to Kanesville to advise the people of this place if they did not vote the Locofoco ticket, to undertake to procure any kind of Government for Deseret would be useless! If Congress does not think proper to establish a State or Territorial Government in Deseret, perhaps, she will be able to sustain herself a year or two longer, as well as she has heretofore. Why did Mr. Babbitt forsake the interests of the people of Deseret at Washington to come here and spend $500 dollars to try to prevent men from voting the Whig ticket, according to his own acknowledgement in a public speech? It looks to our vision that he could not considered the interests of the people of Deseret very sacred to leave them in the hour of trial.

According to the following telegraphic dispatch, dated Washington July 20th, it shows that he should have been there to lay before Congress the expediency of admitting him as the Delegate of the people of Deseret, instead of his being here, and it is not probable that he will get back in season to do anything for her interest before Congress adjourns, which has probably adjourned. Pray what effect can the vote of Pottawatamie have on Congress when it will not reach Washington much before it adjourns?

"HOUSE.—The Mexican delegate question was disposed of finally, by excluding him by a vote of 105 to 93. Finally, after considerable debate the report of the committee of elections, declaring it inexpedient to admit A. W. Babbitt to a seat in the House, as delegate from Deseret, was adopted by yeas 108, nays 77. The Committee then rose and the House adjourned.

We have been on nettles for sometime to know where Mr. Babbitt got this $500 to spend so lavishly for electioneering. Perhaps some of the knowing ones can give the desired information. A person who is sent as a delegate is answerable to those who send him, and if he can account to the people of the State of Deseret for his conduct, we have nothing to say. His business according to an extract in the following letter to A. C. Dodge, Esq., was as follows: "Mr. Babbitt, goes out as the Delegate of this people to transact business at Washington." We cannot find a word authorizing him to come to Kanesville, or delegated to use his influence against Prest. Hyde, or to counsel and advise the people of Pottawatamie county, but we can find plenty authorizing Prest. Orson Hyde, to advise and counsel the members of our church in all matters pertaining to their present interest and future welfare. Every man should know his place in the kingdom of God, and Mr. Babbitt knows very well that his field of labor is at Washington, and not here. He might with equal propriety proceed to England, and at the Court of St. James ask the British Government to extend their laws over the State of Deseret, because some of her subjects had congregated in the valleys of the Mountains as to come here and tell the people of Pottawatamie county to vote the Locofoco ticket, if they did not, every thing in regard to Deseret would be lost. We believe that there is still virtue enough in Congress to give Deseret an equal chance with the other Territorial Governments. We respect every man in his place, and are willing to aid and assist him in the discharge of his lawful duties.

We respect Mr. Babbit as the Delegate of the people of Deseret to lay before Congress their wants, and to use all the influence that he could bring to bear upon the final result of their obtaining either a State or Territorial Government, and sincerely hope that Congress will give them the desired Government.

Mr. Hyde is placed here by the authorities of the Church in the Valley to counsel and advise the people of our Church in all matters pertaining to their interests, and it is not the desire of the people that any person should come here to counsel and advise them without they have the authority from the right source.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY,
July 20, 1849.

Hon. A. C. DODGE—Dear Sir: We learn with great pleasure through our much esteemed friend, A. W. Babbitt, Esq., that you have been elected by the Legislature of your State, Senator for the term of six years. We have not had the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with you but from representations of Mr. Babbitt, and from other sources, we cannot but indulge the belief that your election will give general satisfaction to our people.

Mr. Babbitt goes out as the Delegate of this people to transact business at Washington, and any assistance you shall render him will be truly appreciated by a grateful people, while you may be assured of our highest satisfaction and esteem.

BRIGHAM YOUNG,
HEBER C. KIMBALL,
WILLARD RICHARDS.

Jacob Bigler and A. P. Chesley, are intending to take cattle upon the Rushes, on the Boyou to winter, they are both men of experience in these matters as they have been there several winters before. See their advertisements in another column.

Our Town and Merchants.

This place is growing very rapidly, and we have in addition to about fifty dwellings put up this season, a large commission house, also, two large and commodious stores are in progress of erection, one by our enterprising friends, Donnel, Stutsman & Co., the other by Mr. Hall, a thorough business man; both of which will be completed in season for the reception of their heavy stocks of goods which they intend purchasing this fall. Mr. Voorhis is also making large additions to his heretofore well known house. Messrs. Needham & Ferguson of the Bee Hive, are continually at work carrying honey to their hive. The Elephant, under the management of Messrs. Tootle & Brother are filling its trunk, to be prepared for a heavy trade at fair prices. The Bluff Store, kept by the Old Pioneer, is determined that it shall not be surpassed, and they have a large and heavy stock of Goods. The Emporium who are always busy with every notion that you could name; if you should visit the other stores and not find the article you want, just run into the Emporium, you will be sure and find it there. Not forgetting if you want the news of the day call at the Frontier Guardian Office, and subscribe for it.

Our enterprising merchants are intending to lay in heavy stocks of goods for the Spring trade. They expect a heavier emigration this way next spring than ever before. This frontier country is growing in importance, and a great quantity of goods are wanted here for emigrants, also there are many goods purchased here to trade with again at Salt Lake. Persons having from 500 to $1000 capital would spend there money at this point if they could only have the goods here; and these things our merchants understand, and are preparing to lay in very heavy stocks of goods. Emigrants need not fear but what everything can be obtained here lower than they can afford to haul it to this place. We are in hopes that two or three thousand head of cattle will be drove into this market during the winter; they will all be needed.

FROM ELDER ORSON HYDE.

We have received a letter from Elder Orson Hyde, editor of this paper, written 15 miles on this side of Fort Kearney, dated July 11th. He states that himself and his company are well and getting on finely; but that the emigrants have suffered much from cholera; about 60 of our people have died between the Missouri river and the Fort. (names not given.) He also states that sickness was abating pretty much. Grass and water plenty, and musketoes by the wholesale.

Just as we were writing the above, another letter was laid on our table from Joseph Kelly, one of Elder Hyde's company written on the banks of the Platte, beyond Fort Laramie, dated, July 23d. It also contains the cheering news that they are all well and in sight of the mountains, and that they expect to complete the journey in 35 days from the time of starting.

We are glad to hear from our friends, and it increases our joy to learn that our much esteemed friend and fellow citizen, Elder Orson Hyde, and his company are well, and in good spirits: and we hope that they will continue to enjoy the same blessing until they return, and we have the pleasure of receiving them again into our midst to share of the hospitality and kindness of our citizens.

From the Plains.

We have received two letters from the two last emigrating companies for the Valley. One from Bishop Hunter's company, another from Joseph Young's. Both letters were written at Fort Kearney. Out of the Bishop's company, 3 were sezed with cholera, but only one died, and out of Joseph Young's, Ezra Bickford, from Bullock's Grove in this country, died since the mail came through.

We are glad to learn of the health and prosperity of these two companies, notwithstanding the false reports which were put in circulation at this place respecting the Bishop's company. We felt confident at the time, that they were not true, but now our faith is confirmed, and we leave the public to judge the truth of similar reports, which were put in circulation through the same channel.

Further News From the Plains.

Two men from the State of New York, arrived here on the 13th inst., they left Fort Leavenworth, on the 10th of May en route for California, in company with ten others. They proceeded up the southren route and they state that the scene witnessed by them was truly lamentable. Mr. William Townsend, one of the above named gentlemen says: that it is his unqualified opinion, that not less than one thousand persons have died between Fort Leavenworth, and Fort Laramie. And that at several of the camping places he saw from ten to twelve graves close together in one place. He attributes the sickness to the bad water, on the south route.

Mr. T. and his companion Mr. W. Roberts, proceeded as far as the Upper Crossing of the Platte and there lost the last of their Company by cholera. Becoming discouraged, they returned, coming back on the northren route which they state is very healthy, and all the graves seen by them, were only four.

Profanity.

Swearing or taking the name of the Lord in vain, is considered by some, and we may safely say by many, not only in this town, but in other towns and cities also, to be highly respectable, or is used as being such; Why? Because the persons who use it, only do it to endorse their own vile sentiments, and try to carry into effect their evil purposes under the endorsement of this holy name. Will the Lord hold guiltless such characters, who thus impose upon him? We answer no. The Lord is jealous of his honor, and he has declared in these last days, that his scourges will inevitably fall on those who blaspheme his name, and do not fear him. In the world such things may be looked for, but among the Saints, who profess to know his name and fear him, these things ought not to exist, 'A gentleman in the real sense of the term would not use such language, because it is low, mean, and disgusting, yea, revolting to the hearts of such as love morality and virtue. Cease then, from this unbecoming course, and teach your children to reverence the name of the Lord, and to keep his commandments, then will your light spring forth like the morning, and your path be enlightened as the noon-day.

Fort Desmoine Mail.

Messrs. Frink & Walker, we understand have taken the contract of carrying the mail between this point and Fort Desmoine. They come in punctually, at the time specified in their contract with the Post Office Department. We now feel confident that the mail service for this place will be performed with punctuallity.

Things to be Remembered.

Are you procuring the requsite quantity of hay? Is it well stacked, and secured against destruction from cattle, &c. If so, all is well, you are doing your duty, and God will bless you; if not, remember that the lazy ought not to share of the labors of the industrious and dilligent. Have you broke up the prairie, and making the necessary preparations to sow fall wheat? If you are, you are doing what is right. Have you attended to establishing schools, &c., throughout the county and filled up the little vacancies by your own good judgement and spent part of your time in prayer, thanksgiving and watchfulness? These things ought to be done, and not leave any other duty undone.

We love to see the Saints prosper, and others equally so, although they may not belong to our community. The Guardian will not differ with any class of men, either political or religious without they are deviating from a course that we believe to be right, although we advocate more particularly the doctrine of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Who would not support a paper of such a character? whose whole object and aim is to exalt virtue and depricate vice in its various forms. We think a man or woman that would not support it, has not that interest for their own salvation that they should have, and are a detriment to the cause of virtue and truth. We leave the people to judge.

Cholera.

There has been several cases of cholera in our town this season, but not enough to create the alarm which at present exists. There has been but twelve deaths since the commencement of the season, The following persons have died of cholera since the 1st of May. Mr. Richard Hewitt, Mrs. Hannah Martin, Mr. Roberts, late of Ohio, B. J. Bgler, son of Jacob G. Bigler, Mrs. E. P. Cromby, Mrs. Sarah Evans, Mrs. Mifflins youngest child, T.B. Parker, Kelsey Barton's youngest child, Miss Evira Sherman and Mrs. Elizabeth Kelting. A number of the above have died more from fright than actual cholera.

We deprecate in the strongest terms the practice that is prevalent among the female portion of our community going from one house to another mourning over the sick and diseased, and in time of cholera it is entirely wrong, for if person are naturally timid. It commences upon the mind, their mind runs down, and then imagination is very powerful, which brings on the diarrhœa, and the system becomes relaxed, and capable of receiving any kind of disease. Although we may feel to mourn the loss of friends near and dear, we cannot approve at this time of persons going from house to house to mourn. If you feel like mourning, wait till the season is more healthy, and no cholera lurking in our midst, but at this time, when it is sickly, keep up your spirits; be cheerful to all around you, which is the best remedy against this "overflowing scourge and desolating sickness." It has been reported abroad that eight deaths were occuring here daily, which are about as many as have occurred for three months.

Since writing the above there has four more deaths occurred by cholera. Mrs. Lewis Robins, Mrs. Alice Moody, Janette Huntington, of cholera infantum, and Seth Sherman. At present there is no new cases, and those that were attacked are fast recovering.

Hon. R. C. Winthrop has been appointed United States Senator in Massachusetts, to fill the vacancy occassioned by the resignation of Mr. Webster. We regard this as a most excellent selection. Mr. Winthrop is a man of superior attainments, and one of the purest whigs in the land.

Death of Hon. Daniel P. King.

BOSTON, July 26.

The Hon Daniel P. King, member of Congress from the Second District of this State, died yesterday of dysentery contracted at Washington. His funeral took place this afternoon at Danvers.

Pearson the murderer was hung to-day, for the murder of his wife and children.

Three Cent Pieces.

This new coin has just been issued from the mint at Philadelphia. On one side are the words "United States of America," in which is a circular wreath, enclosing the numerical "III." On the reverse side is the Liberty Cap, inscribed with the word "Liberty," and surrounded with rays. Underneath the cap are the figures "1850."

We refer our readers to the medical notice of B. Y. Shelly in another column. He is located for the present at the Bluff House. He is spoken of in high terms by those who have employed him, as a skilful and gentlemany physician.

Weekly Coach from Kanesville to St. Joseph, Mo.

Our friends Ferrin & Sandford have put some good coaches on the above route. They come in and leave punctually at the hour advertised. Passengers can rely upon the arrangement which they have made in their advertisement. See Advertisement in another column.

Repuest.

Dr. Luke Johnson, Assistant Marshall, for Pottawatamie county, would feel obliged if the Presidents or clerks, of the different branches of the church in this county would furnish him with the names of their members, and also the names of any other person who may be living near, although they may not belong to the church; so as to aid him in obtaining the necessary information, where to find them when he is out taking the census, as his business will commence soon. Please advertise the foregoing at your first public meeting so as to facilitate his progress in the performance of this dut/.

We have received a communication from "40 Gals," which we shall publish in our next.

California.

An overland party, which left Independence in April last, has arrived at the gold mines. They had packed mules, and in ten days passed 600 teams. In crossing the mountains they found the snow from 15 to 30 feet deep, but so hard, that their mules made but slight impression on it. They averaged 30 miles per day, and men and mules arrived in good health and condition.

Wanted.—Cash will be paid for prime butter at this office.

Weather.

The weather has been excessively hot and dry since the 1st of July, until Monday morning, when it changed and in the evening we had a fine shower of rain. We have not had rain enough since the 1st ult., to wet the face of the earth, and every thing is dried and parched up. We are in hopes now that the weather has changed that we shall have still more rain. It has rained in every direction, but at this point and a circumference of about 20 miles.

Flour, butter, eggs, chickens, honey, potatoes, corn, &c., wanted in exchange for the Guardian.

To the Editors of the Frontier Guardian:

DEAR SIRS: The peculiarity of the season, the intense heat and the prevalence of a specie of cholera, and its fatality call for some energetic measures to avert the calamity. I would recommend that a meeting be called to adopt some measures for this purpose. There are several items that are important among the first is, that some more speedy way of interment be adopted, and so prevent persons who have died with cholera being kept forty-eight or even twenty-four hours. It is only contagious when persons dying with it are kept above ground. 2d, persons should be prohibited from feeding their horses in the Public Square and so make a place for hogs, dogs and cattle to gather at day and night. 3d. No slaughtering house should be allowed to exist in town, and restrictions placed upon the meat market, for meat is not good this hot and unhealthy season, not only that, but cholera is in almost every thing that grows and especially that breathes this atmosphere. A committee of vigilance to see these things (if adopted,) carried into effect ought to be appointed, and to visit the back premises of every house, and see that the streets are cleaned. These things, will, I conceive, be productive of health. Yours, &c.,

A LOVER OF HEALTH.

No election was held at Silver Creek precinct.

DEATH OF SIR ROBERT PEEL—Sir Robert Peel, Ex-member of the British Parliament was killed by being thrown from his horse on the evening of June 29th.

Elections Returns.

We have not received sufficient returns from the eastern part of the State to tell what the result will be, but from the complexion of affairs. It seems that the State Ticket will be entirely Democrat. Wright's election is still uncertain, although he run very strong in Lee county. We shall be able to give our readers a better account in our next. By that time we shall ascertain what has been done throughout the entire State.

Cattle, Hogs and Chickens.

We are more than astonished at the patience of some of the citizens of this place, who can look on, and see the fruits of their spring and summer's labor totally destroyed, scarcely without a murmur or complaint. Brethren, and friends you have borne until forbearance remains no longer a virtue, and we are determined to speak in your behalf; and let those who are so careless, about their cows, hogs and chickens know, that if they do not endeavor to restrain them from such depredations, they will have to foot the bill. It is aggravating in the extreme to have your corn, &c., torn down and trampled under feet of animals, about the time that you are expecting to lay up your little treasure for yourself and family against a day to come; and to have your potatoes dug up by hogs and destroyed, when you are contemplating upon the happy period that you and your family will share of the blessed repast. Chickens have eaten your cabbage, &c., and out of all that you sowed and planted in the spring, you have nothing in return but disappointment and chagrin. We have a word of consolation for you, "remember that it is better to suffer wrong than to do wrong," and the owners of such breachy creatures, should have to pay you four fold; inasmuch as you have done your duty towards having a good fence around your lot. Where is the person that is so dead to the interest of his neighbor and humanity that would look on with indifference? we hope they cannot be found. But at the same time such things are permitted to exist in our midst, and no effort being made to put a stop to them. You who have cows, and are careless as to their whereabouts at night, had better look out, for if they are in your neighbor's garden destroying and eating up his scanty supply you may rest assured, that no blessing can flow from such acts, and you are in a great degree responsible for them. We would suggest a plan, get a few rails and fence in your cows every night and the present evil will be obviated, and society in general benefited by the operation.

Congressional.

The following proceedings of Congress, we copy from the Washington "Republic" of July, the 20th:

Delegate From Deseret.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and proceeded to the consideration of the special order, being the report of the Committee of Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of Almon W. Babbitt, Esq., and his memorial praying to be admitted to a seat in the House of Representatives as a delegate from the provisional State of Deseret, and concluding with a recommendation to adopt the following resolution, viz:

That it is inexpedient to admit Almon W. Babbitt, Esq., to a seat in this body as a delegate from the alleged State of Deseret.

Mr. Strong said that the report of the committee was unanimous, and at his request it was read. Among the arguments for the exclusion of the delegate are these: The memorialist, comes as the Representative of a State; but of a State not in the Union, and therefore not entitled to a representation here; that the admission of Mr. Babbitt would be a quasi recognition of the legal existence of the "State of Deseret;" and that no act should be done by this House which, even, by implication, may give force and vitality to a political organization extra-constitutional and independent of the laws of the United States; and that in the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the "State of Deseret," after praying for the admission of the State into the Union on an equal footing with the other States, or for the establishment of some other form of civil government, ask that, "upon the adoption of any form of government, their delegate may be received, and their interests be faithfully and properly represented in the Congress of the United States." It is thus apparent that those by whom Mr. Babbitt was sent do not contemplate his admission to a seat in this House until some form of government shall have been given to them by Congress.

Mr. Strong, after a few remarks in support of the report, said that if no gentleman was desirous to discuss the question, he would move the previous question.

Mr. McDonnald wished to say a few words, and moved to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "Resolved," and inserting, "That A. W. Babbitt be admitted as a delegate from Deseret for the present Congress." He contended that Deseret has a provisional government and a political organization, and that the interests of the people should be furthered by having an accredited agent here to furnish information respecting them to the House. Deseret is situated in the central portion of California, a thousand miles from any organized government. It was eight months after the Presidential election when the people there knew who was elected. He did not believe, with Mr. Strong, that the admission of Mr. Babbitt would be recognition of the form of government framed by the convention in that Territory.

Mr. Gentry said he voted for the admission of the delegate from New Mexico, and intended to vote for the admission of the delegate from Deseret. He held to the opinion that it was within the discretion of the House to admit or refuse to admit a man presenting himself here in the character of the representative of any given number of persons claiming to be citizens of the United States. While the right to rule and govern is asserted, it carried with it correlative right to be representated, else the struggle of the patriots of the Revolution was in vain.

Mr. Woodward confessed that he desired to see Deseret become prosperous. He had no prejudices. He wished that he could vote for the admission of the delegate.

Mr. Gentry desired to say that New Mexico has had a regular organized political community for more than a hundred years; sometimes as a State, sometimes as a department, and sometimes subject to the absolute rule of a dictator.

Mr. Woodward replied to the gentleman, and in the course of his remarks he said that nobody knew by what portion of the people Mr. Smith was elected, nobody knew but what the people would have sent another here within a month. He could not vote to admit the delegate, because he came here not by provision of law, and not in conformity with the practice of the Government. Have the whole people co-operated to send him? It was known that some people, assembled in convention, had sent him here. There is no proof that any Mexican, who claims the rights of protection and privileges under the treaty of Hidalgo Guadalupe, united in the election. All the rights under the treaty are for Mexicans, and American citizens can claim nothing under it. We can pass laws to exclude all inhabitants of the United States, but cannot exclude Mexicans from the territories acquired, because they hold their rights under the treaty.

Mr. Evans, of Maryland, said it was his belief that we are bound to give Territorial governments to New Mexico and Deseret at the proper time. He believed that the proper way to do this was by adopting the Compromise bill of the Senate, to which he would give his support. All other measures would be dilatory. He was not opposed to the admission of California. There were others, he would not say here, who professed to be friends of the admission of that State, and were not. He was for such steps as would organize Territorial governments in the most speedy way. He rebuked the assertions that those only who voted for the admission of the delegate from New Mexico are the friends of representative government.

Mr. Brown, of Mississippi, replied to Mr. Gentry. He was willing to vote for territorial governments whenever the territories ask to come in at the straight gate; but he was not willing to admit a delegate in advance of a government. For more than two years we have had a right to give the territories governments, but have refused to do it. With regard to the allusion of the gentleman as to the causes of the Mexican revolution, Mr. B. said the British crown did govern us; governors were sent hither, and laws were enacted for colonies, but they refused to give us representation. Have we sent any officers to Deseret? Where is the governor, the judiciary, or the tax-gatherers? We have failed and refused to do that which we were bound to do. He reproached no man more than others might reproach him. He had voted against the admission of Mr. Smith, and should vote against the admission of Mr. Babbitt. He would vote for any delegate elected according to the law of the land, and would not care whether he was for or against slavery; but he should not break down law and trample the Constitution beneath his feet.

Mr. Root replied to Mr. Woodward, and argued in favor of the exclusion of slavery from the Territories, and said that the House would violate good citizenship by refusing a voice to Deseret, to be heard when Congress is about to provide a government for her. He went for California, all alone, and wanted her to stand out in all her pride and dignity as a State, without being clogged with the Fugitive bill, the New Mexico and Utah boundaries, and trash. He said that the omnibus bill will not give peace, and, if passed, will produce more agitation than was ever dreamed of. Any man from a free State who votes for it will have the seal of condemnation put upon him.

Letter of John Taylor to the French.

We have received the "INTERPRETER" published at Boulogne, France, dated June 25th, containing Br. John Taylor's proclamation to the French people. It is worthy the perusal of all:

To the Editor of the "INTERPRETER."

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER—, June 25th, 1850.

MY DEAR SIR:—As I perceive by your paper that you are liberal in you sentiments and that your columns are open to all professions, I have taken the liberty of forwarding to you the following communication for an insertion in your excellent journal.

I have lately arrived at Boulogne in company with three other gentlemen Mr. Curtis E. Bolton, Mr. John Pack, and Mr. William Howell. We are Elders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints: We have come to Boulogne for the purpose of preaching or lecturing on the religious principles believed in by us as a people, and we are desirous of laying those principles as fully before all classes of the citizens of Boulogne as circumstances will admit of. What those principles are, will of course be more fully developed in the lectures which will be given; but at present I will give a brief synopsis or outline of the leading items of our faith. But before I commence, perhaps it may be proper to answer one or two questions that I have had put to me frequently since my arrival here. Have you any political object in view? No. We are ministers of the Lord Jesus Christ, and have come to teach his word as committed unto us and desire to infringe on no man's rights: nor to interfere with the government or policy of this nation. We wish to be in subjection to all law, rule, and authority; and to sustain them so far as our humble influence will extend. Are you Protestant or Catholic? neither, in the common acceptation of the term: Both, in many particulars.

The church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was first organized in Town of Manchester, Ontario County, State of New York, U. S. A. 6th, April, 1830. Previous to this an angel appeared unto a young man about fifteen years of age, a farmer's son, named Joseph Smith, and communicated unto him many things pertaining to the situation of the religious world, the necessity of a correct Church organization, and unfolded many events that should transpire in the last days, as spoken of by the Prophets.

As near as possible I will give the words as he related them to me. He said that "in the neighborhood in which he resided there was a religious revival, (a thing very common in the country) in which several different denominations were united; that many professed to be converted: among the number, two or three of his fathers family. When the revival was over, there was a contention as to which of these various societies, the persons who were converted, should belong. One of his father's family joined one society, and another a different one. His mind was troubled, he saw contention instead of peace, and division instead of union; and when he reflected upon the multifarious creeds and professions there were in existence he though it impossible for all to be right, and if God taught one, he did not teach the others "for God is not the author of confusion." In reading his Bible, he was remarkably struck with the passage in James 1. Chapter 5th verse. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not and it shall be given him." Believing in the word of God he retired into a grove, and called upon the Lord to give him wisdom in relation to this matter. While he was thus engaged, he was surrounded by a brilliant light, and two glorious personages presented themselves before him, who exactly resembled each other in features, and who gave him information upon the subjects which had previously agitated his mind. He was given to understand that the churches were all of them in error in regard to many things; and he was commanded not to go after them; and he received a promise that the fulness of the Gospel should at some future time be unfolded unto him: After which the vision withdrew leaving his mind in a state of calmness and peace.

Some time after, when engaged in fervent prayer, on a sudden a light like that of day, only purer, and far more glorious and bright burst into room. The first appearance was as though the house was filled with consuming fire. This sudden vision of a light so effulgent and glorious, occasioned a sensation or shock which thrilled through his whole system: it was however followed by a calmness and serenity of mind, and an overwheiming rapture of joy; and in a moment a personage stood before him. This being was surrounded by a halo of glory more brilliant than the before mentioned, of which he was then in the midst; and though his countenance was as lightning, yet it was of a pleasing, innocent, and glorious appearance; so that every fear was banished from his heart and nothing but calmness pervaded his soul. The statute of this personage was a little above the common size of men in this age; his garment was perfectly white and had the appearance of being without seam. He declared himself to be an angel of God, sent forth by commandment, to communicate to him that his sins were forgiven, and that his prayers were heard; and also to bring the joyful tidings, that the covenant which God made with ancient Israel, concerning their posterity, was at hand to be fulfilled; that the great preparatory work for the second Coming of the Messiah was speedily to commence—that the time was at hand for the Gospel, in its fulness to be preached in power unto all Nations; that a people might be prepared with faith and righteousness, for the Millenial reign of universal peace and joy; and that he was called and chosen to be an instrument in the hands of God, to bring about some of his marvellous purposed in this latter dispensation."

There are many other things relating to this vision too lengthy for a communication of this kind, but which we hope hereafter to be able to lay before the people. Such as the gathering of Israel; the restoration of the ten tribes; the personal reign of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ upon the earth; the discovery of Ancient Sacred Records; the dealings of the Lord with the North American Indians in former days; the Urim and Thummim; the Melchisedeck Priesthood; the situation of the Churches and the world; the organization of a pure Church after the order of that of the Apostles, and the restoration of the Gospel in all its fulness, riches, power, glory, gifts and blessings as in former days.

Without entering into any further details I shall proceed to state the leading doctrines or items revealed unto us, and which we teach.

We believe in the scriptures of sacred truth, and in the doctrines contained therein.

We believe that the Church established by Jesus Christ, and his Apostles was a pure church: and that any departure from that, is not right—Gal., 1—8.

We believe that it is now as necessary to have Apostles, Prophets, Evangelists, Pastors and Teachers [inspired men] as it was formerly; and that the Church cannot now, any more than it could then, be perfected without them—Ephesians 4th chap. 11 to 14 verses, 1 Cor. 12th chap. 28th verse.

We believe in faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; repentance towards God; baptism for the remission of sins, [viz adult baptism by immersion] and laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Acts 2 chap. 38 39 verses,—Mark 16 chap. 16 to 20. Acts 8 chap. 14 to 18. We believe also in the resurrection of the dead and eternal judgement, as being among the first principles of the Gospel,—Hebrews 6 chap. 2 v.

We believe that when men receive the gift of the Holy Ghost it will do the same things for them now, as it did formerly. Acts 2 chap. 16 to 18. Acts 19—6; they will have also the gifts of tongues, healings, wisdom utterance, knowledge, faith and everything that existed in former days associated with the same Gospel. 1 Cor. 12, 8 to 11.

We believe all that the Lord has revealed, what he now reveals, and are prepared to believe all that he will reveal. We are not circumscribed in our feelings or views; our creed embraces all truth, philosophical, moral, or religious, that will benefit men in time, or eternity. Consequently wherever we find a principle of truth that we do not possess, in any society or with any individual, we gladly embrace it as part and parcel of our creed; we at the same time feel ready to communicate as freely to others. For this purpose we have come from the Territory of Deseret, near the Great Salt Lake Upper California United States a distance of eight thousand miles over mountains, deserts, plains and oceans in the name of Israel's God as his servants to make known to the inhabitants of this nation, the things in which we ourselves rejoice, and to call upon all men in the name of Jesus to repent and be baptized for the remission of sins, and they shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

I have the honor to be yours

Very respectfully,

JOHN TAYLOR.

M'Holland Comes out Again.

I first commenced a boarding house,
I've now got up a sign,
Within my bar I always keep
Good Brandy, Ale and Wine.

I have Sardines and Oysters too,
With trimmings all complete,
A genteel room I always keep,
Where you may sit and eat.

You lawyers and physicians too,
I courteously invite,
Come to my house and fetch your friends—
Come Gents that use the type.

Mechanics I must not forget,
I owe them right good will,
I make them welcome to my house,
They always pay their bill.

My thanks I tender to my friends,
For favors that are past,
I hope my conduct will be such
That favors still may last.

McHOLLAND, on the Levee.

Response.

Now Mr. Jim you're out again,
How sacred your devotion
Toward your Brandy, Ale and Wine,
To keep the same in motion.

You're partial to lawyers too,
And Gents that use the type;
Mechanics, you must not forget,
You love them as your life.

The screw hid down at Trading Point,
Was used by the mechanic;
To make the dimes, forsooth you know,
Pray would you let us have it.

Highly Important from California—Another Terrible fire at San Francisco.

NEW YORK, July 22.

The steamer Crescent City, with dates from San Francisco to 15th June, has reached her dock. Passengers have $180,000. On the 14th June another terrible fire occurred at San Francisco, which destroyed 300 buildings. The total loss is estimated at $5,000,000.

The New Cabinet.

The Cabinet nominations, announced by telegraph, prove to be correct; they were transmitted to the Senate, by the President, and immediately confirmed. The official announcement is as follows:

Daniel Webster, of Massachusetts, Secretary of State.

Thomas Corwin, of Ohio, Secretary of the Treasury.

J. A. Pearce, of Maryland, Secretary of the Interior.

W. A. Graham, of North Carolina, Secretary of the Navy.

Edward Bates, of Missouri, Secretary of War.

N. K. Hall, of New York, Postmaster General.

John J. Crittenden, of Kentuckey, Attorney General.

We learn by telegraph since receiving the above that J. A. Pearce, of Maryland, and Edward Bates, of Missouri, both have declined a seat in the Cabinet.

Paper-Folding Machine.

We have seen several descriptions of the newly invented machine for the folding of sheets from the press, but until yesterday never saw it in operation. One of the inventions has been temporarily attached to the printing press of the Transcript, and the sheet, as worked off fully printed, passes through a succession of four sets of cylinders, placed at right angles, one above the other, which delivered the paper upon a platform, completely as fast as it is printed. We have a young man in our office who thinks that he can beat steam in folding papers, but the machine.—[Boston Courier.

Arrival of the Steamer America.

Sir Robert Peel was killed on the 28th June by being thrown from his horse. Speculation is rife as to the probable effect his death will have on the position of affairs; the general belief appears to be that the event will rather strengthen than weaken the position of the present Ministry.

Accounts from Lisbon state that great excitement prevailed in consequence of the arrival of an American squadron in the Tagus to enforce the claim of the United States. LOUISVILLE, July 16.

Dates have been received from the City of Mexico to 25th June. The Cholera was raging, 200 dying daily; during the month there have been 8000 cases and 2700 deaths. At Zacatecas the Cholera was equally bad, the deaths averaging 80 per day. On account of the prevalence of the epedemic the Mexican Congress was not able to obtain a quorum. It was rumored at Vera Cruz that the deaths by cholera in the different cities average 1000 a day. The Popes return to his dominions was celebrated in grand style in the city of Mexico. The approaching Presidential election is exciting much interest; one paper mentions Santa Anna, but he is ineligible, not being a resident.

Crossing the Atlantic in Five Days.

The citizens of Portland, Maine, have petitioned their Legislature to ascertain the most practicable route for a railroad from Bangor in the direction of St. John, New Brunswick, to some good harbor at Nova Scotia, best fitted for a terminus for a line of transatlantic navigation. From Cape Canso, Nova Scotia, to Galway bay, in Ireland, the distance is said to be two thousand miles. Assuming the speed of steam vessels to be seventeen miles an hour, the ocean will thus be crossed in five days time.

KANESVILLE MARKET.

WEDNESDAY, August 21, 1850.

The market for several weeks past, has been very inactive at this point; nevertheless staple articles still command high prices. Flour is very scarce, and to all appearance will be, as the wheat crop is very light in this section of country. The consumers must look to a foreign market to supply the deficiency. We are of the opinion that 3000 bbls. of flour will scarcely supply the market till the 1st of May next. Consequently heavy shipments should be made to this point this fall, and we are satisfied the speculation will justify any party who may undertake it. The corn crop bids fair, and a heavy crop is expected.

TYPES.

Click—click,
Go the types in the "stick."
They glide in together with ominous sound,
As swiftly the hand that collects them goes round
And arranges them firm in the "stick."
Click—click.

Click—click.
See them now in the "stick,"
What wonderful things they are now, as they sit;
One moment 'tis satire, and then it is wit—
Unmeaning when single—combined then they hit,
A terrible blow with their click—click—
In putting them up in the "stick."
Click—click!

Click—click.
See them now in the "stick."
To the thief or assassin they sorrow betide,
And the wealthy oppressor in vain tries to glide
Away from the clicking—the world cannot hide,
Him, away from the sound of that click—click,
In putting up types in the "stick."
Click—click.

Click—click.
As they go in the "stick."
See guilt, at the sound, with a visage of fright,
Recoiling from self by day or by night,
As it views with suspicion each method of flight;
But it never can flee from the click—click,
Of putting the types in the "stick."
Click—click.

Click—click.
Monarchs and Kings their approaches dread;
They know that with Liberty types have been wed,
And visions they see of their thrones blood-red,
As they tremblingly bow to the click—click,
Of putting up types in the "stick."
Click—click.

Click—click.
See them now in the "stick."
By the midnight lamp, or the broad sun-light,
Still ever they're working with power and might;
While their voice, from despots demanding their right,
Is louder, somewhat, than the click—click,
Of putting the types in the "stick;"
Click—click.

Click—click,
See them firm in the "stick"—
Their loud voices, echoing sound through the world,
At the sound, the bright banner of freedom's unfurl'd
Wherever 'tis heard, there the tyrants are hurled
From their power, by the sound of that click,
click,
Of putting the types in the "stick."
Click—click.

Click—click.
Go the types in the "stick."
States, Rulers, and Monarchs, Pachas, and Kings,
The Poet, the Printer, the Minstrel that sings,
Have a most "holy horror" of these little things—
Of the noise that they make, with their click,
click,
When setting them into the "stick."
Click—click!

Click—click.
Go the types in the "stick."
To the good and the just—all the nations around—
To the rest of mankind,' and where virtues abound,
With high throbbing hearts, there is welcomed the sound,
And the noise that is made by the click—
click,
Of putting the types in the "stick."
Click—click.

MISCELLANY.

The "Spirits" in Town.

Our preceding papers upon the "Rochester Spirits" (who have become of late as notorious as Jamaica spirits) were based upon certain pamphlets issued under their auspicies, and most probably copyrighted in the Spirit land. In the last of those papers we promised records of a visit to them.

The "Knockings" have been in town for a fortnight. They came by the way of the river; they were hustled by hackmen: they were booked at "Barnum's Hotel;" they were fed at the "ordinary;" and if eye-witnesses are credible, they eat pudding like the mountebank of your English fair.

Without counting the "Peter Funks" who are en suite—the "Knockings" are three in number, and are not very dangerous. None of them "look killing." They hold audiences (like their fellow-wonders at upper Barnum's—the Chinese ladies.) They demand a dollar admission money; and unless Congress take the initiative very soon, will have a private mint of their own before that of the United States be out of the Architect's office; for they attract crowds even in June.

——"The pleasures is as great
In being cheated as to cheat."

Without more parlance we crave leave to take the reader with us to a public interview.

Time one o'clock, P. M., of a June day. Scene, Barnum's Hotel (quondam Howard House.) Entering a flight of stairs from private entrance in Maiden Lane, behold a tall gentleman in a black body coat, white cravat, and pale face, astride of the banisters.

Tall gentleman—Spirits?

Visitor—Thank you, we don't drink before dinner.

T. G—Mysterious Knockings?

V.—Oh—beg pardon—you're right—we are in quest of them. (presenting a card.)

T. G.—Very sorry, sir. The spirits are quite fatigued; been three parties in already; very sceptical parties, too sir; won't believe anything; the harder we rap the worse they get; reg'lar double knockers we gave 'em; won't believe Moses and the prophets, won't believe anything, eh, sir?

V.—Pray, have you had Moses up to-day?

T. G.—No; not to-day; we left Moses in Rochester. We did have one of the prophets here once, but he didn't stay long; must be city air.

V.—Am I to be admitted?

T. G.—Pardon again; rather late, and may be unnecessary. I'll see. [Tall gentleman pokes his head in at the door opened on a crack; creaking of boots and a buzzing of voices heard; some whispering; tall gent withdraws his head and points to a printed placard on the door, emphasizing with his thumb nail one of the rules thereon. "It is expected the visitors will preserve the decorum of a religious assemblage," &c. Enter Visitor.

SCENE.

Small room in Burnum's Hotel, window overlooking yard in Maiden Lane. Sofa against the wall, on which is seated a stout man with a red face; young lady (youngest Miss Fox) from the highest form of a country school; young lady No. 2, second Miss Fox; young lady (a widow sister,) No. 3, Mrs. Fish; on a chair at latter's left, an individual, of the Spiritual Peter Funks. Before the sofa, and pushed up very close a long table, covered with red cloth; around which is seated half a dozen ladies and gentlemen with pencils and bits of paper. Bystanders scattered about. As the Visitor enters he hears a sound something like the scratching of mice in a champaigne basket, which changes to an imitation of a shoemaker round the corner, hammering some wet sole leather. Doorkeeper—a short man with short hair and a short step, is continually flitting about.

Visitor (whispering to a long-faced bystander.) What are the spirits at?

Long-faced Bystander (with an Aminadab Sleek look to the ceiling.) Ah; working into the stony heart of that sceptical young man in the yellow vest; but he is impenetrable.

Stony-Hearted Young Man. What was my brother's age?

Mrs. Fish—The Spirits have never answered sich a question, and they never will (!) If you want it, check off numbers on a piece of paper.

S. H. Y. M.—Was it this? this? (two shoemaker's taps.)

Peter Funk.—Was it right.

S. H. Y. M.—Yes.

L. F. B. S.—(triumphantly.) Now you ought to be satisfied; ne'er a miss to you.

S. H. Y. M.—Stuff! I had a dog which did as well as that.

Mrs. Fish.—Now, sir, give next gentleman a chance.

Blushing youngster (in a low sepulchral voice.) Will the spirits converse with me? (No answer.) Will it some time hence? tap at the word "some." Will it this afternoon?

Mrs. Fish.—I wish it understood that if the manifestation is promised hereafter, we make no extra charge.

Audacious bystander—Could'nt you make a table move now? Isn't that usual and more effective?

Peter Funk.—Silence, sir; such levity is unbecoming the sanctity of this place—Youngest Miss Fox slightly laughs, and bites her handkerchief.

Meek-faced gentleman. Are my dear infants in heaven? Taps are heard. [Meek-faced gentleman fetches up a tear in his eye, and continues.] Are they happy? Tremendous tapping.

Peter Funk (in chorus.) Ah!

Interesting looking Lady.—Is my dear husband alive? [Answer in the negative.]

Did he die of disease? No!

A Homœpath.—Did the Doctors bleed him too much? [A signification that they did, and consequent profound sensation in the audience.]

Visitor [to bystanders in a whisper.] How do you account for the knockings?

1st Bystander.—Boot heels!

2d Bystander.—Ventriloquism!

3d Bystander.—Electricity!

4th Bystander.—Back teeth!

5th Bystander.—A set of spiritual loafers on a spree!

Visitor.—Explain yourselves.

1st B.—Boot-heels, a la Elssler in Cracovienne. When one girl is suspected another takes it up, if all are suspected, Peter Funk does duty.

2d B.—All wrong, sir, its in the throat. See how these girls are dressed. High-necked dresses, and broad ribbons on their necks to hide the vibration.

3d B.—Magnetism! One of 'em has a diet of brass chains and balls. The other eats pounded glass and amalgam.

4th B.—Nonsense. It's in the back teeth of the red-faced man who sits so silently. He gaped a minute ago, and I saw teeth like pebble stones.

Mrs. Fish.—There is really too much of levity in the room, and I don't like it a bit. It's enough to discourage one; but I wont be discouraged.

S. H. Y. M. (aside.)—No, not so long as you have a dollar a head!

Mrs. Fish.—People who come here, come primed with the idea that it's all a humbug. We (looking at Fishbough) know it isn't; we are not here voluntarily! The spirits directed us to come to advance the cause of futurity, and so we obeyed. It's not for me to explain the phenomenon of the matter, when it's to be had for a shilling at Fowlers and Wells; and we've no interest in the matter either (loud tapping by the invincibles.)

Peter Funk.—They are calling for the alphabet.

Mrs. Fish.—A, B, C, D, (tap: without commencing again.) E, F, G, H, I J, K, L, M, N, O, (tap: and Peter Funk began to look at watches.) A, B, C, D, etc., to N (tap.) A, B, C, D, E (tap: without running over the alphabet again!) There, D O N E. The Spirits are withdrawing.

S. H. Y. M. (aside, and looking at the placard put on the room door, A LA MODE HOTEL, "Beware of Robbery.") Done! yes, reg'larly.

(Exit Visitor and Victims. Manent Peter Funk and Spirits!)

"It's all very well to ridicule," says some Rochester subscriber; "the Jews did that in the times of Christian miracles! But that does not account for the noises."

Accounting for the noises, we humbly submit to be a petitio principii. Are they the product of a spiritual agency? [!] that's the question. In view of all heard or read on the subject, and from personal observation, we continue to repeat, they are clearly not. There is no manifestation of superior intelligence beyond the range of the conjuror. The queries answered are exceedingly common-place in character, stereotyped in design, and not beyond the reach of a clever and adroit mind, who, from observation of the voice, inflexion of the querist, and from the study of physiognomy, may well answer them. The ladies engaged are invariably present when the knockings are heard. They are accompanied by one or more gentlemen acquaintances, who are more intimately connected with the "doings" than they seould be, who are present from sympathy, or love investigation [!] The "knockings" have the advantage of receiving a leading question, and of choosing a querist. Shoud one present himself who has the sharp look of an ugly customer the ci devant spirit immediately declines close engagement.

We have a word of advice to the spirits (as' they take advice from an unbelieving quarter,) and it is embodied in the old saying, carpe diem. Nothing glorious was ever long without imitation. Cæsar had his after-age; Napoleon and Washington their Bolivar. So profit-makers have their imitators. Brandreth had his sugar-coated contemporary; Sands his Townsend; and very soon the "Rochester company" will find "Knockings" South and West, who are more adroit, more ingenious and less expensive.—[N. Y. Literary World.

To Make Good Bread.—This is one of the most important duties of a good housewife, and we present a receipt of a new mode taken from the Chicago Tribune, which is said to be the best extant:

Take three pounds of flour, mix with it three teaspoonful of soda, passing the whole through a seive, in order that the soda may be well mixed with the flour; to one quart of water add a table spoonful of muriatic acid in the liquid form, pour the mixture into the flour, and mix the whole just enough to get the ingredients fairly incorporated together. Wet the hand in cold water and mould into shape, clap it at once into the oven and during the cooking of any meal, with five minutes' labor, you can have excellent bread. The soda and acids constitute the elements of common salt, and they not only raise the bread by combination, but salt in the bargain.

Professor Webster.—As we anticipated, this miserable man is to die. All the powerful influences brought into action from a thousand points, have failed to shake the determination of the Governor of Massachusetts, or induce the Council or pardons to lend credence to his latter statements. On a calm and dispassionate review, we earnestly believe that hope had not fled from his case, until the appearance of the confession, proclaiming all those solemn appeals to the Supreme Being, mere juggling and concocted lies to enlist sympathy.

Affairs at Washington seem to be in a bad fix. People are talking about danger to the Union, and the Republic going to a total wreck.

We Go For the Pledge.—The women ought to make a pledge not to kiss a man who uses tobacco, and it would soon break up the practice; and a friend of ours says they ought also to kiss every man that dont use it—and we go for that too.

A little girl, walking one day with her mother in a grave-yard, reading one after another the praises of those who sleep beneath, said: "I wonder where they bury the sinners?"

The aggregate value of the real and personal property, in the city of New York is estimated at $254,493,527. That of San Francisco in the "Far West," is set down at $300,000,000.

A Good Paying Stock.

Gov. Briggs in his message to the Legislature, says that Massachusetts has $2,700,000 invested in school houses, and more than two millions of the sum has been expended within the last twelve years. In 1849 there were in her 324 towns 3749 public schools in which were employed 8163 teachers. The amount of money raised for the support of Public schools was $630.000. This, added to the amount paid for instruction in academies and private schools will make the sum expended for education during the year, $1,168,234. All this is exclusive of the money paid for collegiate and professional education—and now is this not money well invested? Does not a citizen of that noble State point to them as among the ornaments that beautify her? What bulwark against anarchy, licentiousness in morals and misgovernment, are these schools! Next to her churches, of which they are at the same time the offspring and the support, they constitute her glory. They introduce knoledge into minds that but for them would wander on in darkness. In these schools the rich and the poor meet together, and together become obedient to law, and the children of poverty often win the palm from the favored sons of affluence. They are the nurseries of Republicanism, and since knowledge is allied to virtue, they cherish virtue also. In no State in the Union are the people better clothed, better fed, more industrious or religious.—[Lewiston Falls Journal.

Love is as natural to a woman as fragrance is to a rose. You may lock a girl in a convent—you may confine her in a cell—you may cause her to change her religion, or forswear her parents—these things are possible—but never hope to make the sex forego their heart-worship, or give up their reverence for casimere.

The man who would systematically and willfully set himself about cheating a Printer, would commit highway robbery upon a crying baby, and rob it of its gingerbread—take the last bit of hoe-cake from a starving negro—rob a church of counterfeit pennies—lick the butter off a blind negro's "flitter"—pawn the false whiskers of a dandy for a drink of liquor—skin a toad for its hide, —and take the clothes off a scare crow, to make a respectable appearance in society!

People are too prone to condemn in others what they practice themselves without scruple. Plutarch tells of a wolf, who, peeping into a hut where a company of shepherds were regaling themselves with a joint of mutton, exclaiming, "what a clamor they would have raised if they had caught me at such a banquet!"

Wherever you find an ignorant people, rely upon it, but few papers are taken. Men and children are well informed only when well supplied with newspapers.

Vicious.—To persist in kissing a pretty, black-eyed girl, when she resolutely declares she wishes you not to. It looks just as though you would'nt take her word.

NEW GOODS!

A. SORLEY,

St. Joseph, Missouri,

IS now receiving a splendid lot of SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS, of every description, of the Latest Style and Patterns. And is prepared to offer Great Inducements to all who may favor him with a call. His stock comprises a general assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, and Bonnets. Also, a large and well selected assortment of Iron and nails.

My plan is to sell for Cash Only, and at a small advance on cost; the rate charged for goods at my store, will contrast largely with prices paid by those who buy on time. Many place an undue importance on the credit system, unmidful of the fact, that constitutes a nominal profit, yet when compared with the invariable cash system it is a positive loss.

Selling on time is hazardous under the best circumstances. Those who sell on time must buy on time. Therefore, I will say to my old customers and the public generally, that you will save much by calling and examining my Stock of Goods, before purchasing. A. SORLEY.

THE MORMONS.

A Discourse delivered before the Historical Society of Pennsylvania: March 26, 1850.

BY THOMAS L. KANE.

Beside the common duty of guiding and assisting these unfortunates, the companies in the van united in providing the highway for the entire body of emigrants. The Mormons have laid out for themselves a road through the Indian Territory, over four hundred leagues in length, with substantial, well built bridges, fit for the passage of heavy artillery, over all the streams, except a few great rivers where they have established permanent ferries. The nearest unfinished bridging to the Papillon Camp, was that of the Corne a Cerf, or Elk-horn, a tributary of the Platte, distant may be a couple of hours' march. Here, in what seemed to be an incredibly short space of time, there rose the seven great piers and abutments of a bridge, such as might challenge honors for the entire public spirited population of lower Virginia. The party detailed to the task worked in the broiling sun, in water beyond depth, and up to their necks, as if engaged in the perpetration of some pointed and delightful practicle joke. The chief sport lay in floating along with the logs, cut from the overhanging timber up the stream, guiding them till they reached their destination, and then plunging them under water in the precise spot where they were to be secured. This the laughing engineers would execute with the agility of happy diving ducks.

Our nearest ferry was that over the Missouri. Nearly opposite Pull Point, or Point aux Poules, a trading post of the American Fur Company, and village of the Pottawatamies, they had gained a favorable crossing by making a deep cut for the road through the steep right bank. And here, without intermission, their flat-bottomed scows piled, crowded with the wagons and cows and sheep and children and furniture of the emigrants, who, in waiting their turn, made the woods around smoke with their crowding camp fires. But no such good fortune as a gratuitous passage awaited the heavy cattle, of whom, with the others, no less than 30,000 were at this time on their way westward: these were made to earn it by swimming.

A heavy freshet had at once swollen the river to a width, as I should judge of something like a mile and a half, and dashed past its fierce current, rushing, grurgling, and eddying, as if thrown from a mill race, or fountain of the deep. Its aspect did not invite the oxen to their duty, and the labor was to force them to it. They were gathered in little troops upon the shore, and driven forward till they lost their footing. As they turned their heads to return, they encountered the combined opposition of a clamorous crowd of by-standers, vieing with each other in the pungent administration of inhospitable affront. Then rose their hubbub; their geeing and woing and hawing, their yelling and yelping and screaming, their hooting and hissing and pelting. The rearmost steers would hesitate to brave such a rebuff; halting, they would impede the return of the outermost; they all would waver; wavering for a moment, the current would sweep them together downward. At this juncture, a fearless youngster, climbing upon some brave bull in the front rank, would urge him boldly forth into the stream: the rest then surely followed; a few moments saw them struggling in mid current; a few more, and they were safely landed on the opposite shore. The driver's was the sought after post of honor here; and sometimes when repeated failures have urged them to emulation, I have seen the youths, in stepping from back to back of the struggling monsters, or swimming in among their battling hoofs, display feats of address and hardihood, that would have made Franconi's or the Madrid bull-ring vibrate with bravos of applause. But in the hours after hours that I have watched this sport at the ferry side, I never heard an oath or the language of quarrel, or knew it provoke the least sign of ill feeling.

After the sorrowful word was given out to halt, and make preparations for winter, a chief labor became the making hay; and with every day dawn brigades of mowers would take up the march to their positions in chosen meadows—a prettier sight than a charge of cavalry—as they laid their swarths, whole companies of scythes abreast. Before this time the manliest, as well as most general daily labor, was the herding of the cattle; the only wealth of the Mormons, and more and more cherished by them, with the increasing pastoral character of their lives. A camp could not be pitched in any spot without soon exhausting the freshness of the pasture around it; and it became an ever recurring task to guide the cattle, in unbroken droves, to the nearest places where it was still fresh and fattening. Sometimes it was necessary to go further, to distant ranges which were known as feeding grounds of the Buffalo. About these there were sure to prowl parties of thievish Indians; and each drove therefore had its escort of mounted men and boys, who learned self-reliance and heroism while on night guard alone, among the silent hills. But generally the cattle were driven from the camp at the dawn of morning, and brought back thousands together in the evening, to be picketed in the great corral or enclosure, where beeves, bulls, cows, and oxen, with the horses, mules, hogs, calves, sheep and human beings, could all look together upon the red watch fires, with the feeling of security, when aroused by the Indian stampede, or the howlings of the prairie wolves at moonrise.

When they set about building their winter houses, too, the Mormons went into quite considerable timbering operations, and performed desperate feats of carpentry. They did not come, ornamental gentlemen or raw apprentices, to extemporise new versions of Ribinson Crusoe. It was a comfort to notice the readiness with which they turned their hands to wood craft; some of them, though I believe these had generally been bred carpenters, wheelrights, or more particularly boat builders, quite outdoing the most notable voyageurs in the use of the axe. One of these would fell a tree, strip off its bark, cut and split up the trunk in piles of plank, scantling, or shingles; make posts, and pins, and pales—everything wanted almost, of the branches; and treat his toil from first to last with more sportive flourish than a school-boy whittling his shingle.

Inside the camp, the chief labors were assigned to the women. From the moment, when after the halt, the lines had been laid, the spring wells dug out, and the ovens and fire-places built, though the men assumed to set the guards and enforce the regulations of Police, the Empire of the Tented Town was with the better sex. They were the chief comforters of the severest sufferers, the kind nurses who gave them in their sickness, those dear attentions, with which pauperism is hardly poor, and which the greatest wealth often fails to buy. And they were a nation of wonderful managers. They could hardly be called house wives in etymological strictness, but it was plain they had once been such, and most distinguished ones. Their art availed them in their changed affairs. With almost their entire culinary material limited to the milk of their cows, some store of meal or flour, and a very few condiments, they brought their thousand and one receipts into play with a success that outdid for their families, the miracle of the Hebrew widow's cruise. They learned to make butter on a march, by the dashing of the wagon, and so nicely to calculate the working of barm in the jolting heats, that as soon after the halt as an oven could be dug in the hill side and heated, their well kneaded loaf was ready for baking, and produced good leavened bread for supper. I have no doubt the appetizing zest, their humble lore succeeded in imparting to diet which was both simple and meagre, availed materially for the health as well as the comfort of the people.*

But the first duty of the Mormon women was, through all change of place and fortune, to keep alive the altar fire of home. Whatever their manifold labors for the day, it was their effort to complete them against the sacred hour of evening fall. For by that time all the out-workers, scouts, ferrymen or bridgemen, road-makers, herdsmen or haymakers, had finished their tasks and come in to their rest. And before the last smoke of the supper fire curled up reddening in the glow of sunset, a hundred chimes of cattle bells announced their looked-for approach across the open hills, and the women went out to meet them at the camp gates, and with their children in their laps sat by them at the cherished Family meal, and talked over the events of the well-spent day.

But every day closed as every day began, with an invocation of the Divine favor; without which, indeed, no Mormon seemed to dare to lay down to rest. With the first shining of the stars, laughter and loud talking hushed, the neighbor went his way, you heard the last hymn sung, and then the thousand-voiced murmur of prayer was heard like babbling water falling down the hills.

There was no austerity, however, about the religion of Mormonism. Their fasting and penance, it is no jest to say, was altogether involuntary. They made no merit of that. They kept the Sabbath with considerable strictness: they were too close copyists of the wanderers of Isrnel in other respects not to have learned, like them, the value of this most admirable of the Egypto-Mosaic institutions. But the rest of the week, their religion was independent of ritural observance. They had the sort of strong stomached faith that is still found embalmed in sheltered spots of Chatholic Italy and Spain, with the spirit of the believing or Dark Ages. It was altogether too strongly felt, to be dependent on intellectual ingenuity or careful caution of the ridiculous. It mixed itself up fearlessly with the common transactions of their every-day life, and only to give them liveliness and color.

If any passages of life bear better than others a double interpretation, they are the adventures of travel, and of the field. What old persons call discomforts and discouraging mishaps, are the very elements to the young and sanguine, of what they are willing to term fun. The Mormons took the young and hopeful side. They could make sport and frolic of their trials, and often turn right sharp suffering into right round laughter against themselves. I certainly heard more jests and Joe Millers while in this Papillon Camp, than I am likely to hear in all the remainder of my days.

This, too, was at a time of serious affliction. Beside the ordinary suffering from insufficient food and shelter, distressing and mortal sickness, exacerbated, if not originated by these causes, was generally prevalent.

In the camp nearest us on the West, which was that of the bridging party near the Corne, the number of its inhabitants being small enough to invite computation, I found, as early as the 31st of July, that 37 per cent. of its inhabitants were down with the Fever and a sort of strange scorbutic disease, frequently fatal, which they named the Black Canker. The camps to the East of us, which were all on the eastern side of the Missouri, were yet worse fated.

The climate of the entire upper "Misery Bottom," as they term it, is, during a considerable part of Summer and Autumn singularly pestiferious. Its rich soil, which is to a depth far beyond the reach of the plough as fat as the earth of a kitchen garden, or compost-heap, is annually the forcebed of a vegetation as rank as that of the Tropics. To render its fatal fertility the greater, it is everywhere freely watered by springs and creeks and larger streams, that flow into it from both sides. In the season of drought, when the Sun enters Virgo, these dry down till they run impure as open sewers, exposing to the day foul broad flats, mere quagmires of black dirt, stretching along for miles, unvaried, except by the limbs of half buried carrion tree trunks, or by occasional yellow pools of what the children call frog spawn; all together steaming up thick vapors redolent of the savor of death.

The same is the habit of the Great River. In the beginning of August, its shores hardly could contain the millions of forest logs, and tens of billions of gallons of turbid water, that came rushing down together from its mountain head-gates. But before the month was out, the freshet had all passed by; the river diminished one half, threaded feebly southward through the centre of the Valley, and the mud of its channel, baked and creased, made a wide tile pavement between the choking crowd of reeds and sedgy grasses and wet stalked weeds, and growths of marsh meadow flowers, the garden flowers, the garden homes at this tainted season of venom-crazy snakes, and the fresher ooze by the water's edge, which stank in the sun like a naked muscle shoal.

Then the plague raged. I have no means of ascertaining the mortality of the Indians who inhabited the Bottom. In 1845, the year previous, which was not more unhealthy, they lost one-ninth of their number in about two months. The Mormons were scourged severely. The exceeding mortality among some of them, was no doubt in the main attributable to the low state to which their systems had been brought by long continued endurance of want and hardship. It is to be remembered also, that they were the first turners up of the prairie sod, and that this of itself made them liable to the sickness of new countries. It was where their agricultural operations had been most considerable, and in situations on the left bank of the river, where the prevalent south-west winds wafted to them the miasmata of its shores, that disease was rife.*

In some of these, the fever prevailed to such an extent that hardly any escaped it. They let their cows go unmilked. They wanted for voices to raise the Psalm of Sundays. The few who were able to keep their feet, went about among the tents and wagons with food and water, like nurses through the wards of an Infirmary. Here at one time the digging got behind hand, burials were slow; and you might see women sit in the open tents keeping the flies off their dead children, sometime after decomposition had set in.

In our own camp for a part of August and September, things wore an unpleasant aspect enough.† Its situation was one much praised for its comparative salubrity; but perhaps on this account the number of cases of Fever among us was increased by the hurrying arrival from other localities, of parties in whom the virus leaven of disease was fermented by forced travel.

But I am excused sufficiently the attempt to get up for your entertainment here any circumstantial picture of horrors, by the fact, that at the most interesting season, I was incapacitated for nice observation by an attack of Fever—mine was what they call the Congestive—that it required the utmost use of my faculties to recover from. I still kept my tent in the camp line; but, for as much as a month, had very small notion of what went on among my neighbors. I recollect overhearing a lamentation over some dear baby, that its mother no doubt thought the destroying angel should have been specially instructed to spare. I wish too for my own sake, I could forget, how imperfectly one day I mourned the decease of a poor Saint, who by clamor rendered his vicinity troublesome. He no doubt endured great pain; for he groaned shockingly till death came to his relief. He interfered with my own hard gained slumbers, and—I was glad when Death did relieve him.

Before my attack, I was fond of conversing with an amiable old man, I think English born, who having then recently buried his only daughter and grandson, used to be seen sitting out before his tent, resting his sorrowful forehead on his hands, joined over a smooth white oak staff. I missed him when I got about again; probably he had been my moaning neighbor.

So, too, having been much exercised in my dreams at this time, by the vision of dismal processions, such as might have been formed by the union in line of all the forlornest and ugliest of the struggling fugitives from Nauvoo, I happen to recall as I write, that I had some knowledge somewhere of one of our new comers, for whom the nightmare revived and repeated without intermission the torment of his trying journey. As he lay, feeding life with long drawn breaths, he muttered: "Where's next water? Team—give out! Hot, hot—God it's hot: Stop the wagon—stop the wagon—stop, stop the wagon!" They woke him;—to his own content—but I believe returning sleep ever renewed his distressing visions, till the sounder slumber came on from which no earthly hard or voice could rouse him; into which I hope he did not carry them.

In a half dreamy way, I remember, or I think I remember, a crowd of phanthoms like these. I recal but one fact, however, going far in proof of a considerable mortality. Earlier in the season, while going westward with the intention of passing the Rocky Mountains that summer, I had opened with the assistance of Mormon spades and shovels, a large mound on a commanding elevation, the tomb of a warrior of the ancient race; and continuing on my way, had left a deep trench excavated entirely through it. Returning fever-struck to the Papillon Camp, I found it planted close by this spot. It was just forming as I arrived; the first wagon, if I mistake not, having but a day or two before halted into place. My first airing upon my convalescence took me to the mound, which, probably to save digging, had been re-adapted to its original purpose. In this brief interval, they had filled the trench with bodies, and furrowed the ground with graves around it, like the ploughing of a field.

The lengthened sojourn of the Mormons in this insalubrious region, was imposed upon them by circumstances which I must now advert to.

Though the season was late, when they first crossed the Missouri, some of them moved forward with great hop fulness, full of the notion of viewing and choosing their new homes that year. But the van had only reached Grand Island and the Pawnee villages, when they were overtaken by more ill news from Nauvoo. Before the summer closed, their enemies set upon the last remnant of those who were left behind in Illinois. They were a few lingerers, who could not be persuaded but there might yet be time for them to gather up their wordly goods before removing, some weakly mothers and their infants, a few delicate young, and many cripples and bereaved and sick people. These had remained under shelter, according to the Mormon statement at least, by virtue of an express covenant in their behalf. If there was such a covenant, it was broken. A vindictive war was waged against them, from which the weakest fled in scattered parties, leaving the rest to make a reluctant and almost lulicrously unavailing defence, till the 17th day of September, when 1,625 troops entered Nauvoo, and drove all forth who had not retreated before that time.

Like the wounded birds of a flock fired into toward nightfall, they came straggling on with faltered steps, many of them without bag or baggage, beast or barrow,* all asking shelter or burial, and forcing a fresh repartition of the already divided rations of their friends. It was plain now, that every energy must be taxed to prevent the entire expedition from perishing. Further emigration for the time was out of the question, and the people prepared themselves for encountering another winter on the prairie.

Happily for the main body, they found themselves at this juncture among Indians, who were amicably disposed. The lands on both sides of the Missouri in particular, were owned by the Pottawatamies and Omahas, two tribes whom unjust treatment by our United States, had the effect of rendering most suspiciously hospitable to strangers whom they regarded as persecuted like themselves.

The Pottawatamies on the eastern side, are a nation from whom the United States bought some years ago a number of hundred thousnad acres of the finest lands they have ever brought into market. Whatever the bargain was, the sellers were not content with it; the people saying, their lenders were cheated, made drunk, bribed, and all manner of naughty things besides. No doubt this was quite as much of a libel on the fair fame of this particular Indian treaty, as such stories generally are; for the land to which the tribe was removed in pursuance of it, was admirably adapted to enforce habits of civilized thrift. It was smooth prairie, wanting in timber, and of course in game; and the humane and philanthropic might rejoice therefore that necessity would soon indoctrinate its inhabitants into the practice of agriculture. An impracticable few, who may have thought these advantages more than compensated by the insalubrity of their allotted resting place, fled to the extreme wilds, where they could find deer and woods, and rocks and running water, and where I believe they are roaming to this day. The remainder, being what the political vocabulary designates on such occasions as Friendly Indians, were driven—marched is the word—galley slaves are marched thus to Barcelona and Toulon—marched from the Mississippi to the Missouri, and planted there. Discontented and unhappy, they had hardly begun to form an attachment for this new soil, when they were persuaded to exchange it for their present Fever Patch upon the Kaw or Kansas River. They were under this second sentence of transportation when the Mormons arrived among them.

They were pleased with the Mormons. They would have been pleased with any whites who would not cheat them, nor sell them whiskey, nor whip them for their poor gipsey habits, nor bear themselves indecently toward their women, many of whom among the Pottawatamies, especially those of nearly unmixed French descent, are singularly comely, and some of them educated. But all Indians have something like a sentiment of reverence for the insane, and admire those who sacrifice, without apparent motive, their worldly welfare to the triumph of an idea. They understand the meaning of what they call a great vow, and think it the duty of the right-minded to lighten the votary's penance under it. To this feeling they united the sympathy of fellow-sufferers for those who could talk to them of their own Illinois, and tell the story how from it they also had been ruthlessly expelled.

Their hospitality was sincere, almost delicate. Fanny Le Clerc, the spoiled child of the great brave, Pied Riche, interpreter of the Nation, would have the pale face Miss Devine learn duetts with her to the guitar; and the daughter of substantial Joseph La Framboise, the interpreter of United States,—she died of the fever that summer,—welcomed all the nicest young Mormon Kitties and Lizzies, and Jennies and Susans, to a coffee feast at her father's house, which was probably the best cabin in the river village. They made the Mormons at home, there and elsewhere. Upon all their lands they formerly gave them leave to tarry just so long as should suit their own good pleasure.

The affair, of course, furnished material for a solemn council. Under the auspices of an officer of the United States, their chiefs were summoned, in the form befitting great occasions, to meet in the dirty yard of one Mr. P. A. Sarpy's log trading house, at their village. They came in grand toilet, moving in their fantastic attire with so aplomb, and genteel measure, that the stranger found it difficult not to believe them high born gentlemen, attending a costumed ball. Their aristocratically thin legs, of which they displayed fully the usual Indian proportion, aided this illusion. There is something too at all times very Mock-Indian in the theatrical French millinery tie of the Pottawatamie turban; while it is next to impossible for a sober white man, at first sight, to believe that the red, green, black, blue and yellow cosmetics, with which he sees such grave personages so variously dotted, diapered, cancelled and arabesqued, are worn by them in any mood but one of the deepest and most desperate quizzing. From the time of their first squat upon the ground, to the final breaking up of the council circle, they sustained their characters with equal self-possession and address.

I will not take it upon myself to describe their order of ceremonies; indeed, I ought not, since I have never been able to view the habits and customs of our aborigines in any other light than that of a reluctant and sorrowful subject of jest. Besides in this instance, the displays of pow wow and eloquence were both probably moderated, by the conduct of the entire transaction on temperance principles. I therefore content myself with observing, generally, that the proceedings were such as every way became the grandeur of the parties interested, and the magnitude of the interests involved. When the Red Men had indulged to satiety in tobacco smoke from their peace pipes, and in what they love still better, their peculiar metaphoric rhodomontade, which, beginning with the celestial bodies, and coursing downwards over the grandest sublunary objects, always managed to alight at last on their Grand Father Polk, and the tenderness for him of his affectionate colored children; all the solemn funny fellows present who played the part of Chiefs, signed formal articles of convention with their unpronounceable names.

The renowned chief, Pied Riche—he was surnamed Le Clere on account of his remarkable scholarship,—then rose, and said:

MY MORMON BRETHREN:—

"The Pottawatamie came sad and tired into this unhealthy Missouri Bottom, not many years back, when he was taken from his beautiful country beyond the Mississippi, which had abundant game and timber and clear water everywhere. Now you are driven away, the same, from your lodges and lands there, and the graves of your people. So we have both suffered. We must help one another, and the Great Spirit will help us both. You are now free to cut and use all the wood you may wish. You can make all your improvement, and live on any part of our actual land not occupied by us. Because one suffers, and does not deserve it, is no reason he shall suffer always. I say We may live to see all right yet. However, if we do not, our children will—Bon Jour."

And thus ended the pageant. I give this speech as a morsel of real Indian. It was recited to me after the Treaty by the Pottawatamie orator in French, which language he spoke with elegance. Bon Jour is the French, Indian and English Hail and Farewell of the Pottawatamies.

To be continued.

*It is certain that there is no sickness among the present inhabitants of this region comparable to that of 1846.

†This camp was moved by the beginning of October to winter quarters on the river, where also, there was considerable sickness before the cold weather. I am furnished with something over 600 as the number of burials in the graveyard there.

*I know of an orphan boy, for instance, who came on by himself at this time a foot, starting with no other provision than his trowser's pocket full of biscuit, given him from a steamboat on the Mississippi.

Facts worth Knowing.

All beams have a greater resistance when firmly fixed than when merely supported at their ends, the portion being as 3 to 2.

Lenz has ascertained by actual experiment that electricity is as capable of producing cold as heat, to the degree of freezing water rapidly.

Frost cannot penetrate through a thick covering of snow, below a sheet of ice, or through a covering of grass on a pasture, all of which act as non-conductors.

Six quarts of charcoal, finely pulverized and put into a cistern of the capacity of fifteen hogsheads, will make the water sweet at any time. It is worth the trial.

When the sun shines bright, take a looking glass, hold it nearly perpendicularly over the well, so that it will reflect on the water, and you may see a straw or a pin, or any small object, at the bottom of any depth.

Vulgarity.

We would guard the young against the use of every word that is not perfectly proper, Use no profane expressions—allude to no sentence that will put to blush the more sensitive. You know not the tendency of habitually using indecent and profane language; it may never be obliterated from your hearts. When you grow up, you will find at your tongue's end some expression which you would not use for any money. It was one you learned when you was quite young. By being careful, you will save yourself a deal of mortification and sorrow. Good men have taken sick, and become delirious. In these moments they have used the most vile and indecent language imaginable. When informed of it after a restoration of health, they had no idea of the pain they had learned and repeated the expressions in childhood, and though years had passed since they had spoken a bad word, the early impressions had been indelibly stamped upon the heart. Think of this, ye who are tempted to use improper language, and never disgrace yourselves.

Cheerfulness.

Foremost among the graces of female character stands cheerfulness. Let us, one and all, cultivate it; for without it we cast away much of the enjoyment designed for us; besides mixing a bitter dreg in the life-cup of our associetes. Many a man has been kept from rising in the world, or has fallen after he had risen, solely because his wife was more familiar with sighs than with smiles.

Instead of comparing your lot with that of those whose circumstances appear preferable to your own, and saying, if things were thus and so, you could be cheerful, determine to be so, be your situation what it may. View it as a christian duty.

Do you say that you cannot be insensible to troubles? True, but you can, if you will, avoid being overcome by them. We do not recommend stupidity, but resignation. The greater your trials, and the more deeply you feel, the greater merit have you in resisting despondency. The world is full of trials, but no one encounters fewer than the person who resolves to meet them without repining. We repeat, cultivate habitual cheerfulness.

Advice to a Young Man.

There is very much of human attainment, says Horace Greely, dependent on circumstances; let us not forget how much also, I will not say vastly more, depends on essential Man. There is a deplorably immense multitude who live but to eat bounteously and daintily—with whom the sum of life is practically to compass the largest amount of rich viands and gaudy trappings with the smallest outlay of effort or perseverance to procure them—this mass will be at Rome Romans, at Moscow Russians, and nothing more. There will be some small varieties or shadings of individual character, calculated to gratify by their study the minute curiosity of an entomologist, and interesting to him only. But let one of these human ephemera be awakened, however casually or blindly, to the higher impulses, the nobler ends of our being, and he is instantly transferred to a different world, or rather the world which surrounds him takes on a different aspect, and what before was bleak waste, or dull expanse of wooded height and low herbage, assumes a deep spiritual significance. To his unfolding, wondering soul, Nature is no more a poet's rhapsody, a Chemist's generalization, but a living presence, a solemn yet cheering companionship. No matter whether he be in social position, a peer or a peasant, by birth Danish or Egyptian, one glance at the world within has pizzed him with those whose countrymen and brethren are all mankind. He has now to change his daily pursuit or outward condition, for he has risen by inevitable force to an atmosphere of serenity, above the influence of merely external influences and petty limitations. He has not toilsomely but naturally attained a condition in which the soul no longer blindly pants for eminence or homage, but realizes intensely that nobly to do for the sake of nobly doing and its intrinsic results; rightly to be for the sake of rightly being, discarding "the lust to shine or rule," is the true end of life.

There is no true valor in an unjust quarrel.

Congress—The Compromise Bill—Territorial Government for Utah, &c.

Congress has now been eight months in session, and expended a great portion of their time in "gassing" about slavery, abolitionism, Wilmot Proviso's and other useless harangues, and not until late have they accomplished much of anything. The Compromise Bill for the settlement of matters between the North and South, and for the establishment of governments for California, New Mexico and Utah failed to pass the Senate, with the exception of Deseret," which passed the Senate, giving her a Territorial Government by a vote of 32 in favor of it, and 18 against it. It passed on the 1st ult, and sent to the Congress. We copy the following extract from the Telegraph reports in regard to this matter:

"Messrs. Berrien, Foote and Dawson made unsuccessful efforts to secure an adjournment. Mr. Benton said that when Homer wrote of a certain woman who every night unravelled what she wove during the day he must have been mistaken. He must have had a vision, and seen the Senate of the United States voting on the compromise bill (Great Laughter.) After various unsuccessful efforts to fix the southern boundary of Utah at 36 deg. 30 min., 35 minutes, it was finally carried at 37.

Mr. Soule moved to amend the bill by adding a provision restricting the territorial legislature from passing any laws prohibiting slavery, but leaving them power to pass laws necessary for the protection of slave property, which was rejected.

Mr. Rusk moved to lay the bill on the table—lost, 23 to 26.

The question being then taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed, it was agreed to, yeas 32, nays 18, as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Benton, Berrien, Bradbury, Dodge, Illinois, Dodge, of Iowa, Douglas, Downs, Foote, Houston, Hunter, Jones, King, Mason, Morton, Norris, Pratt, Sebastian, Shields, Soule, Spruance, Sturgeon, Turney, Underwood, Wales, Yulee.

Nays—Messrs. Baldwin, Chase, Clark, Davis, of Mass, Dayton, Dodge of Wis, Ewing, Green, Hall, Fleming, Hunter, Pearce, Ward, Smith, Upham, Walker, Whitcomb and Winthrop.

The Senate then adjourned.

The Bill has now to go through the House of Representatives, and receive the President's signature, which will no doubt be done. So by the enactment of Congress they will have a government and a governor appointed. The boundary of Deseret defined in the Bill is on the south by 37 degrees north latitude, on the West by the Sierra Nevada Mountains; on the east by the Wasatch mountains, or the head waters of the Colorado, and north by the head waters of the Columbia river. By the division of the Southern boundary it leaves a territory to be made out of the southern portion of that country to be called the Colorado territory, and for this purpose they have an extent of country of 2 degrees in latitude, and 14 degrees in longitude. The object we suppose that Congress had in this move, it intends to make a slave territory of that portion of country lying south of 37 deg. and therefore they compromised upon the above line. Congress should have given Deseret a chance of a harbor on the Pacific Ocean, for her benefit and the interest of the United States. Deseret is a large country, which soon will become very populous; she should have a seaport, for having no navigable rivers, she can have nothing to add to her wealth but the products of the soil, and if they become a wealthy people, it will be by their being very industrious. The ultra feelings which were existing between the North and South, they could do no more than what they have done at the present time, and under existing circumstances. They have given Deseret a territorial government over a tract of country surrounded on its four sides by everlasting snow capped mountains, which we believe will be thankfully received, as the saying goes: "small favors thankfully received and larger ones in proportion," and perhaps if they continue faithful to the nation, in due time Congress will give them a State government, which the people of that secluded place desire. All this, we believe, is accomplished in the economy of Heaven, for a final and lasting benefit to those who love his laws, and keep the commandments which he gives unto his people in these last days. It will all work together for good.

When the compromise bill came up before Congress it was mutilated in all its features; New Mexico was dropped from the bill with her boundaries, as if it was some venemous reptile. California came next in turn, which went over with a groan; then came the Texan claim which was also dropped, and finally the bill contained only one of its original features and that was the bill for the establishment of a territorial government for Utah, which passed the Senate. Thus was the fate of the Compromise bill.

Fears were entertained at Washington that the defeat of the compromise bill would be the result of a civil war; but after the members became cooled off a little, and the excitement allayed with them in a degree, the President sent a message to Congress, in relation to the difficulties existing between Texas and New Mexico on the boundary question. The consequence was that new bills were presented; California was admitted as a State, New Mexico obtained a territorial government, and Texas receives $10,000,000 for her claim to New Mexico. Thus stands matters in regard to the all absorbing questions which have kept Congress for the last eight months, and all without any immediate prospect of civil war. President Fillmore's Message to Congress was one which the present distracted condition of the union demanded at the present time, it was conciliating and manly in all its bearings, and we believe will have a tendency to allay the excitement which has been existing between the ultras of the north and south.

The Appropriation Bill has passed both houses of Congress.

"Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits if they be of God."

At no time ought the saints to be more on their guard than at the present, against the influence of evil or false spirits, when almost every thing in the world, both of a religious and of a political character, are left to toss on the tempestuous billows of public opinion and popular applause or censure. "Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits if they are of God; we are of God," says the Apostle John; "He that is of God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth us not. By this, we know the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error." It is commonly understood that the apostle John wrote his three epistles after his release from the Island of Patmos, and that he had the government of certain churches must be admitted, from the instructions given him on that Island, viz: the Book of Revelations containing the commandments of the Lord to him respecting these churches, over which he presided; and from the tenor of his remarks in his first epistle, we understand it to be general, to most, if not all under his charge.

We are here in Pottawatamie county, under the Presidency and direction of Elder Hyde, President of the Twelve Apostles of the last days, and he, under the first Presidency in the Valley. Unto him is committed the charge of the churches on this side of the mountains—Pottawatamcie lands, and other places also. He chose a council to assist him (the High Council,) in the arduous task he has to perform, and in his absence left them here to preside and direct the affairs of the Church until his return. Well, if an apostle in former days held such a standing before God that he could say: "He that is of God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth us not; by this we know the spirit of truth and the spirit of error." Would there be any impropriety in an apostle of the last days, holding the Presidency of the twelve, and also of the churches under his charge to come out in the same manner? We think not, and more than that, we are assured of the fact, that the doctrine is true. But this is not all we have to say, on this all important subject. We are strongly of the opinion, yea confident that his Council, the High Council, has the same privilege in his absence, for they are his representatives. Jesus said on one occasion to his disciples: "He that receiveth you, receiveth me, and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that sent me;" even so with the High Council in Elder Hyde's absence—whosoever receiveth them, their words, and counsel receiveth him, and not him only, but they also who appointed him. What shall we say to those who slander, and take advantage in Elder Hyde's absence? We would say to them that they had better repent, &c., and walk as becometh saints in the light, and in union of spirit with the council, and help to build up the kingdom, by promoting righteousness, equity, truth, and peace among the brethren, instead of strife and confusion, and God will bless them, but if they still persist—the snare is laid, and they will be caught in it.

We have a word to say to the obedient and faithful Saints; be of good cheer, although you may have and to pass through an ordeal of suffering, sorrow, and woe; greater is he that is for you, than all that can be against you. Storms may arise, tornadoes threaten demolition, plague and pestilence stare you in the face, but amid all these let patience have her perfect work, and the sunshine of prosperity shall yet arise upon you, and your habitation, and wipe away all your sorrow and gloom. What we say to one, we say to all, be up and doing good while the day lasts, and remember the criterion to go by which we have given you in the foregoing, that so your feet may be established, and your path made sure. We close our remarks by saying in the language of the apostle: "dearly beloved, let us love one another, for love is of God. And every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God.

Elections.

IOWA.—We have nothing to say in regard to the election in this State, it being almost passed redemption, the Locos have elected the entire State Ticket by about 1200 majority. Henn the Locofoco candidate for this district has been elected by about 300 majority over Wright the Whig candidate.

MISSOURI.—The Whigs have done nobly in the above State, as far as heard from it announces the election of fifty-one Whig members of the House, and thirteen members of the Senate—sixty-four in all; thirty-six Benton men in the House, and six in the Senate—forty-two in all; and twenty-two anti-Benton members of the House, and five in the Senate—in all, twenty-seven. Of the members of the Senate who hold over, five are Benton men, and two are said to be anti-Benton. And it is probably that a good Whig will be sent to Congress in place of Thomas H. Benton, who has been fattening at the public crib for nearly half a century.

To the Branches of the Church in this County.

Whereas several persons have been of late complaining of the negligence of some of our agents in the branches giving information of the arrival of the paper, we deem it necessary, and due to our subscribers that every such barrier should be removed, and the requisite facility given to the distribution of the Guardian upon its arrival at the place of destination. To obviate this difficulty we would suggest that a meeting be called in each Branch, and a proper person selected to receive the papers, and distribute the same to the subscribers, living at or near each Branch and that said person's name be handed to us for publication in our next number, so that every person may know where to call for their paper and the time also. The Guardian is published every other Wednesday, as heretofore, and by calling at our office, on the morning of the day of publication the paper can be had by the person appointed to receive the same or his delegate, without any trouble. We hope that our brethren and friends will pay particular attention to this notice, and we have not the least doubt but everything will go on smoothly by a little exertion. We have had our eye upon this subject for sometime past, but were unable to attend to it in consequence of other matters crowding us rather heavily. The emigration is over for this season and things are taking their usual level, consequently it is indispensibly necessary, that other good men, should supplant those agents who left for the Valley in the spring, and bear a hand to spread the onward march of intelligence and truth in this section of country.

Watermelons, &c.

Our old friend Martin L. Benson, late from New York, realizing that we could not raise the above delicious vegetable in a printing office, presented us, the other day, with a large water melon weighing 22 lbs.; also several large mushmelons, for which he has our thanks. The "Devil" soon knocked them into "pi," and after several severe attacks upon their right and left they were forced to surrender; which we acknowledge to be a luxury during this hot weather. Our friends Caldwell, Cazier and Fisher have our thanks for similar favors.

Dr. John M. Bernhisel.

We have observed the progress of Congress in all its particulars in regard to their moves towards establishing a government for Deseret. Whenever any complicated matter came before Congress in regard to that far remote and inland country, we have always found Dr. Bernhisel, at his post ready to explain matters and make them clear and plain; and whenever enemies have endeavored to influence Congress against that State, and make them believe that the people of Deseret were not loyal subjects, he has been the first to stand up in behalf of the citizens of Salt Lake, and spurning the calumnies and censure which they unjustly poured upon them. Dr. B. went to washington as agent for the people of Deseret, and we believe him to be fully worthy of all the confidence that has been placed in him at Washington, by members of Congress. We suppose that he will return immediately to Salt Lake upon the adjournment of Congress, and make his report, which we feel confident will be gratefully received at the latter place.

Tithing.

The Bishop is now ready to receive and anxious to obtain the hay tithing. Those concerned will please to bring it in as soon as they possibly can, so that they may have the good will and blessing of him who holds keys in temporal things. If you want the enjoyment of that which you possess, give a tenth of your increase, and we promise you a prosperous winter and spring.

High Council.

We, Lyman Stoddard, George Coulson and Evan M. Greene, Committee, appointed by the High Council of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, to investigate the situation of the brethren on Silver Creek and Nishnabotna, as reported by Elders Lyman Stoddard, Luman A. Shurtliff and David J. Ross, upon examination of said reports, do feel to say, in behalf of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, that we consider that Calvin Beebe, Jacob Myres, Michael Jacobs, Dana Jacobs, Sandford Jacobs, Ruben P. Hartwell, Heman Abels, Lewis S. Dalrimple, and Jehial Hildreth, are disaffected members, and characters that are seeking to affect the character and standing of the church, and saints, and also that they are drawing off after Cutler and Brewster, old disaffected members, that have been disfellowshiped by the church.

We also feel to caution the brethren in all the branches to beware of letting into their midst, as teachers, men who can stand up before a Conference, (as did Elder Rainey last spring,) and declare that he is for the organization, and feels to uphold the present officers, and turns off and goes to lecturing, for and in behalf of Cutler and others who do not walk with the church. We also say in behalf of the High Council that all those whose names are published in this document will be handed over to the High Council at its next sitting, (this day two weeks,) when their cases will be considered, and if they do not make proper retractions they will receive public action.

We would also further say in behalf of the High Council, that all those, who are thus disaffected and drawing off, if they do not, at the Conference, or before that time, make proper retractions, will then be cut off from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Done by order of the Council at Kanesville, Iowa, this 31st day of Aug., A. D., 1850.

E. M. GREENE,

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1, 1850.

DEAR BROTHER: I hasten to inform you that the Compromise or Omnibus bill was defeated in the Senate yesterday evening. This afternoon at about eight minutes before o'clock, the bill for establishing a Territorial Government for Deseret alias Utah, passed the Senate, and I am inclined to think will pass the House, JOHN M. BERNHISEL.

The Ethereal Car.

On our fourth page our readers will find a beautiful "ORIGINAL ROMANCE," written by "Charlie," a friend of ours in this town, it is some of his first production, and we hope that he will favor us again, with something more from his pen. He will prove a favorite if he should continue to write.

We refer our readers to Mr. George W. Johnson's card in one of our columns. Mr. J. has come out as Botanic Physician, and from what we learn he bears the character of a careful, skilful, and attentive man to his line of business; and his unwearied diligence during the prevalence of Cholera at this place, has secured to him the good will of many of the inhabitants of this town and county.

From the Plains.

We received the following from our friend and fellow citizen, Mr. Joseph E. Johnson, one of Elder Hyde's company; and though not of so late a date, as letters which we published in our last issue, still the matter may be interesting to our patrons and friends, therefore we give it a place in our columns:

PLATTE RIVER, 50 MILES ABOVE FORT KEARNEY.

Encamped July 14, 1850, 2 o'clock, P. M.

EDITORS FRONTIER GUARDIAN—Dear Sirs: On Friday, July the 5th, I left Kanesville with W. D. Johnson and F. Hall, (who kindly volunteered to take me forward to overtake the Express company for the Salt Lake Valley.) I crossed at Martin's Ferry and overtook the company, viz: Mr. Orson Hyde, Henry Miller and Joseph Kelley, about five miles from the river encamped. In the morning our escort returned and we pursued our journey over a beautiful country, though with but little timber yet well watered. Passed Hunters company about 25 miles from the river, and generally in good health but getting along rather slow waiting for Brs. Haywood and Wooley's train to come up. Encamped at night on a very pretty stream called Weeping water, passed 12 graves, and 4 in sight of camp.

7th day—Fair, started 8¼ o'clock. Crossed Salt Creek about 10, found part of the Government train, the rest has gone on; part of the country more flat, our horses rather fractious and balky. Encamped on the Platte bottom, with our California wagons. Strong signs of rain at night.

8th day—Morning fair, an axletree broke about 10, and came up with Middleton & Riley's train, and Capt. Markham's company at 12. A few cases of sickness and one death occurred (G. G. Johnston) while we were with them; traveled 25 miles to day and encamped on the bank of the river which is about 3 miles wide on an average; passed 50 graves up to this time; strong signs of rain to night.

July 9th—Some rain last night. Left our company behind, as they conclude they cannot keep up with us; passed brother Snow with a part of his company; health of the camp improving; encamped among the bluffs near the river; traveled 40 miles; health all good.

10th day—Morning pleasant. Had rained some in the night. Passed several small companies through the day and traveled over some bad roads; encamped after traveling some 40 miles on a high sandy knoll on the bottom without any wood; very heavy black clouds with thunder, lightning and rain; after it had ceased an immense swarm of musquitoes rushed upon us in the most severe manner that I ever before experienced; Bros. Miller and Kelley were obliged to take the horses back two miles to another encampment, leaving Bro. Hyde and myself to do the best we could; neither running, fighting, nor wrapping up defended us from their attack and we suffered most severely.

12th day—Horses came up and drove swiftly 6 or 8 miles before stopping to feed. Passed Bro. Grant's train about 11, all well; passed Fort Kearney at 12; encamped on the bank of the river traveled 35 miles; heavy wind and rain.

13th day—Wet, and roads heavy and muddy; flies very bad in the afternoon. Express mail overtook us at night and propose to keep us company; heavy rain, wind thunder and lightning. Have seen some elk and antelope on the way.

14th day—Still raining hard. Br. Kelley has been quite sick since yesterday. Has rained all the forenoon; roads very muddy, wet and bad. 6 o'clock; encamped on a beautiful site on the bank of the river; traveled 25 or 30 miles. Bro. Kelley is better; cooked a good supper with Buffalo chips; heavy black clouds in the South, with wind, thunder and lightning. We are in the midst of a Buffalo country and expect to try and kill one to-morrow.

I am writing up this little sketch on account of expecting the Fort Laramie mail to meet us to-morrow, and we do not know when we shall have a chance to send back again. We have passed as many as 25 graves to day and near as many yesterday; among the number we knew was the wife of Isaac Hill, Edward Wilcox, the wife of Peter Shirts, the widow Browitt, besides a number I do not now recollect. Our healths are all first rate. Our animals are doing well considering the wet weather and bad roads. We hope to get a change at Laramie.

The health of the companies of emigrants are improving, but they are generally getting along slow on account of the wet and bad roads. We have concluded that this is the wrong side of the Platte and shall probably return on the other side. I must close for want of news interesting.

In haste, I am respectfully, &c.,
J. E. JOHNSON.

Several articles prepared for this number have been unavoidably crowded out by the President's Message. They will appear in our next. We received a communication from our Washington correspondent X, which was received too late for insertion in this number.

Daniel F. Miller, Esq.

It is expected that every legal voter will be prepared to give our friend D. F. Miller, his vote at the coming election, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the late act of Congress. Mr. M. was thrown out of his seat, by the Poll Books of this county being stolen; and justice to him and yourselves demand that every person should be ready to cast their vote for him. It will be seen by refering to our advertising columns that Thompson has got opposition. We are glad to see this calumniator of the people of this county opposed, for it will ensure the seat to our friend Miller, who is justly entitled to it. Give the poll book thievs a just rebuke by your vote at the polls, and show them that you do not countenance such acts, in no way or shape.

To Subscribers.

We call the attention of our subscribers, and more especially our agents, to the law concerning Newspapers, which is published regularly in the first column on the outside of the paper. We do this in order that our friends may be aware of the law regulating this matter, and knowing this they may in future be benefited thereby.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.

IN SENATE.—The bill to distribute the public lands among the States in which they are located for the use of actual settlers was taken up.

Mr. Walker supported the bill, which, after some debate, was postponed till Monday.

The California bill was taken up.

Mr. Davis, of Mississippi, opposed its passage, warning the Senate of the serious and fatal consequences likely to follow the consumation of such a measure.

Mr. Clemens, of Alabama, opposed the bill also in an animated speech.

Mr. Houston defended the vote he was about to give in support of the bill. He scouted all idea of disunion in regard to the propriety of admitting California.

After further debate, the bill was passed by yeas 34, nays 16.

The passage of the bill was greeted with demonstrations of applause.

Mr. Berrien signified his desire to enter a protest against the bill, on the part of the minority.

Mr. Bell's resolution to establish a Territorial government for New Mexico was made the special order for Monday.

The Senate then adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.

IN SENATE.—The consideration of Mr. Pearce's bill for the settlement of the Texas boundary line, was taken up. Mr. Winthrop took the floor upon his amendment offered yesterday. His principle object was to open the subject for further discussion. He agreed with every word of the executive message—he thought that the friends of California had a right to expect her admission—he saw no objection to Mr. Pearce's boundary line, and therefore, withdrew the amendment.

Mr. Underwood then offered an amendment, giving substantially the same boundary line as that provided in the Omnibus bill, which was rejected—yeas 24, nays 25.

After some further debate, the question was taken on Mr. Mason's amendment, offering substitution for the whole bill, when it was rejected—yeas 14, nays 27.

The bill was then restored to the Senate with the several amendments.

The first amendment was the substitution of the expression, "her claim to territory," for the words "her territory," on that part of the bill relating to the consideration, for which $10,000,000 is to be paid to Texas; after some discussion the amendment was concurred in.

The question recurring on the Proviso, which was itself an amendment, that only 5 of the 10 millions of stock shall be issued until the creditors of Texas shall have been paid, Mr. Atchison spoke in favor of the rejection; after some further debate the Proviso was agreed to—yeas 12, nays 35. Several other amendments were made and rejected 24 to 26.

After some further amendments the bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read the third time, when it was passed—yeas 30, nays 20.

Monthly Mail to Salt Lake.

On the 1st inst., commenced regular monthly mail service between this point and Salt Lake. The mail is carried in light wagons drawn by mules. Under the management of its enterprizing contractors, James Brown and his associates, men thoroughly acquainted with such business, the undertaking will no doubt be conducted with energy and promptness and result in great public utility. By the regular mail communications from this with Santa Fe and Salt Lake, business intercourse will be greatly facilitated.—[Independence Messenger.

MARRIED.

Near Kanesville, August 27th, by Elder JACOB E. TERRY, Sen., Mr. JOSEPH B. HAWKES, to Mrs. LOUISA BOWEN, both of this county.

DIED,

In this town on the 21st of August, MARY, wife of Elder Thomas McKenzie, aged 34 years, formerly from virginia.

Mary sleep on, and now take your rest,
May your spirit find ease with the rest of the blest,
Your troubles were great and your labors too,
In serving the Lord since you left Nauvoo.

You left us bereaved, dear partner and friend,
But still we take comfort, and cheer up our mind,
With the sweet consolation that you shall arise
In the first resurrection to claim your own prize.

At the residence of Mr. Wm. Goosby, Andrew county, Mo., on Saturday, 12th of July, Mr. CURTIS BLACK, of this county, of some unknown cause.

Mrs. Black is requested to call at our office as soon as convenient, we have a letter for her.

CONGRESS.—In the Senate on Tuesday, after the morning business was disposed of, the following was received:—

MESSAGE.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit to the two Houses of Congress, a letter from His Excellency the Governor of Texas, dated on the 14th day of June last, addressed to the late President of the United States, which, not having been answered by him come to my hands on his death, and I also transmit a copy of the answer which I have felt it to be my duty to cause to be made to that communication. Congress will perceive that the Governor of Texas officially states, that, by authority of the Legislature of that State, he despatched a special commissioner, with full power and instructions to extend the civil jurisdiction of the state over the unorganized counties of El Paso, Worth, Presidio and Santa Fe, situated on its north-western limits; he proceeds to say, that the Commission had reported to him in an official form, that the military officers employed in the service of the United States, stationed at Santa Fe, interposed, adversely, with the inhabitants, to the fulfilment of this object, and in favor of the establishment of a separate state government, east of the Rio Grande, within the rightful limits of the state of Texas. These four counties, which Texas proposes to establish and organize, being within her own jurisdiction, extend over the whole of the territory east of the Rio Grande, which has been heretofore regarded as an essential and integral part of the department of New Mexico, and actually governed and possessed by her people until conquered and severed from the Republic of Mexico by the American arms. The Legislature of Texas has been called together by the Governor for the purpose, as is understood, of maintaining her claim to the territory east of the Rio Grande, and of establishing over it her own jurisdiction, and her own laws, by force.

These proceedings of Texas may well arrest the attention of all branches of the Government of the United States, and I rejoice that they occur while Congress is yet in session. A crisis may be brought on which shall summon the two houses of Congress, and still more directly the Executive Government, to an immediate performance of their respective duties under the Constitution of the United States. The President is constituted commander-in-chief of the army and navy, and of the militia of the several States, when called into the actual service of the United States. The Constitution declares also, that he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed, and that he shall, from time to time, give to Congress information of the state of the Union. Congress has power under the Constitution to provide for calling on the militia to execute the laws of the Union, and suitable and appropriate acts of Congress have been passed, as well for providing for calling forth the militia as for placing other suitable and efficient means in the hands of the President to enable him to discharge the constitutional functions of his office. The second section of the act of the 28th of February, 1795, declares that "whenever the laws of the United States shall be opposed, or their execution be obstructed in any state by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings of the power vested in the marshals, the President may call forth the militia so far as may be necessary to suppress such combinations, and to cause the laws to be duly executed." By the act of March 3d, 1807, it is provided, that in all cases of obstruction to the laws, either of the United States or any individual state or territory, when it is lawful for the President to call forth the military for the purpose of causing the laws to be duly executed, it shall be lawful for him to employ for the same purposes, such part of the land or naval force of the United States as he shall judge necessary." These several enactments are now in full force. It is therefore, the laws of the United States are opposed or obstructed in any state or territory, by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the judicial or civil authorities, and it becomes a case in which it is the duty of the President either to call out the militia, or to employ the military or naval force of the United States, or to do both, if in his judgment the exigency of the occasion shall so require, for the purpose of suppressing such combination, the constitutional duty of the President is plain and peremptory. The authority vested in him by law for the performance of this duty is clear and ample.

Texas, as a state, is authorised to maintain her own laws, so far as they are not repugnant to the constitution, laws and treaties of the United States, to suppress insurrections against her authority, and to punish those who commit treason against the state, according to the forms provided by her own constitution and her own laws. But this power is local, and confined entirely within the limits of Texas herself. She can possibly confer no authority which can be lawfully exercised beyond her own boundary. All this is plain, and hardly needs argument or elucidation. If Texan militia, therefore, march into any one of the other states, or into any territory of the United States, there to execute or enforce any law of Texas, they become at that moment trespassers—they are no longer under the protection of any lawful authority, and are to be regarded merely as intruders; and if within such state or territory they obstruct any law of the United States, either by force of arms, or mere power of numbers, constituting such a combination as is too powerful to be suppressed by the civil authority, the President of the United States has no option left to him, but is bound to obey the solemn injunction of the Constitution, and exercise the high powers vested in him by that instrument and by the acts of Congress. Or, if any civil posse, armed or unarmed, enter into any territory of the United States under the protection of the laws thereof, with the intention to seize individuals to be carried elsewhere for trial, for alleged offences, and this posse be too powerful to be resisted by the local and civil authorities, such seizure, or attempt to seize, is to be prevented or resisted by the authorities of the United States.

The grave and important question now arises, whether there be in the Territory of New Mexico any existing law of the United States, opposition to which, or obstruction to which, would constitute a case calling for the interposition of the authority vested in the President. The Constitution of the United States declares that the Constitution and Laws of the United States, which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all the treaties made, or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land. If, therefore, New Mexico be a territory of United States, and if any treaty stipulation be in force therein, such treaty stipulation is the supreme law of the land, and is to be maintained and upheld, and accordingly, in the letter to the Governor of Texas, my reasons are given for believing that New Mexico is now a territory of the United States, with the same extent and the same boundaries which belonged to it in the actual possession of the Republic of Mexico, and before the late war. In the early part of that war both California and New Mexico were conquered by the arms of the United States, and were in the military possession of the United States at the date of the treaty of peace. By that treaty, the title of conquest was confirmed, and these territories, provinces or departments, separated from Mexico forever; and by the same treaty, certain important rights and securities were solemnly guaranteed to the inhabitants residing therein. By the fifth article of the treaty, it is declared, that the boundary line between the two Republics shall commence in the Gulf of Mexico, three leagues from land opposite the mouth of Rio Grande, otherwise called the Rio Bravo del Norte, or opposite the mouth of its deepest branch, if it should make more than one branch, emptying directly into the sea; from thence up the middle of that river, following the deepest channel where it has more than one, to the point where it strikes the southren boundary of New Mexico; thence westwardly along the whole southern boundary of New Mexico, which runs north of the town called Paso, to its western boundary termination; then westward along the western line of New Mexico, until it intersects the first branch of the river Gila, or if it should not intersect any branch of that river, then to the point on the said line nearest to such branch, and thence in a direct line to the same; thence down the middle of said branch and of the said river until it empties into the Rio Colorado; thence across the Colorado, following the division line between Upper and Lower California, to the Pacific Ocean."

The 8th Article of the Treaty is in the following terms: "The inhabitants of Mexican origin now established in territories previously belonging to Mexico, and who remain for the future within the limits of the United States, shall be free to continue where they now reside, or to remove at any time to the Mexican Republic, retaining the property which they possess in the said territory, or disposing thereof and removing the proceeds wherever they please, without being subjected on this account to any contribution tax, or charge whatever. Those who shall prefer to remain in the said territories may either retain the title and rights of Mexican citizens, or acquire those of the citizens of the United States; but they shall be under obligation to make their election within one year from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this Treaty, and those who shall remain in the said territories after the expiration of that year without having declared their intention to retain the character of Mexicans, shall be considered to have been elected to become citizens of the United States in the said territories. Property of every kind now belonging to Mexicans not established there, shall be inviolate. The present owners, their heirs, if Mexicans who may hereafter acquire said property by contract, shall enjoy, with respect to it, guarantees equally ample, as if the same belonged to citizens of the United States."

The 9th article of the Treaty is in these words:—"The Mexicans who in the territories aforesaid shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic conformable with what is stipulated in the preceding article, shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States, and be admitted at the proper time to be judged of by the Congress of the United States, to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States, according to the principle of the Constitution, and in the meantime shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property, and secured to the free exercise of their religion without restriction. It is plain, therefore, in the face of these treaty stipulations, that all Mexicans established in territories north or east of the line of demarcation already mentioned, came within the protection of the 9th article, and that the treaty being a part of the supreme law of the land, extends over all such Mexicans, and assures to them perfect security in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property, and in the free exercise of their religion, and this supreme law of the land is a actual force over this territory, and is to be maintained until it shall be displaced or superseded by other legal provisions, or obstructed by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the civil authority.

This case is one which comes within the provisions of law, and which obliges the President to enforce these provisions. Neither the constitution nor the laws, nor my duty or my oath of office, leave me any alternative or any choice of my action. The Executive Government of the United States has no power or authority to determine what was the true line of boundary between Mexico and the United States before the treaty of Guadaloupe Hidalgo, nor has it any such power now, since the question has become one between the State of Texas and the United States. So far as this boundary is doubtful, that doubt should be removed by some act of Congress, to which the assent of Texas may be necessary by some appropriate mode of legal adjudication; but in the mean time, its disturbances or collision cease, or should be threatened, it is absolutely incumbent on the Executive Government, however painful the duty, to take care that the laws are faithfully maintained. He can regard only the actual state of things existing at the date of the treaty, and is bound to protect all inhabitants who were then established and now remain north and east of the line of demarcation, in the full enjoyment of their liberties and property, according to the provisions of the 9th article of the treaty. In other words, all must be now regarded as New Mexico which was possessed and occupied as New Mexico by the citizens of New Mexico at the date of the treaty, until a definite line of boundary shall be establish, and by competent authority.

This assertion of duty to protect the people of New Mexico from threatened violence, or from liability to be carried into Texas for trial for alleged offences against Texan laws, does not at all include any claim of power on the part of the Executive to establish any civil or military government within that territory. That power belongs exclusively to the legislative department, and Congress is the sole judge of the time and manner of creating or authorizing any such government. The duty of the Executive only applies to the execution of laws, and the maintenance of treaties actually in force, and the protection of all the people of the United States in the enjoyment of the rights which those treaties and laws guarantee. It is exceedingly desirable that no occasion should arise for the exercise of the powers thus vested in the President by the Constitution and the laws, with whatever mildness those powers might be executed, or however clear the case of necessity, yet consequences might nevertheless follow which no human sagacity can foresee.

I have thus laid before Congress the communication of his Excellency the Governor of Texas, and the answer thereto, and have made such observations as I have thought the occasion called for respecting Constitutional obligations which may arise in the future progress of things, and may devolve on me to discharge. I hope I shall not be regarded as stepping aside from the line of my duty, notwithstanding I am aware that the subject is now before both Houses, if I express my deep and earnest conviction of the importance of an immediate decision, or arrangement, for settlement of the question of the boundary between Texas and the territory of New Mexico. All consideration of justice, general expediency, and domestic tranquility calls for this. It seems to be in its character the first, or one of the first of the questions growing out of the acquisition of California and New Mexico, now requiring decision, if New Mexico can be made either a state or a territory, until it shall be first ascertained what New Mexico is, and what are her limits and boundaries. These cannot be fixed or known till the line of division between her and Texas shall be ascertained and established. Numerous and weighty reasons conspire, in my judgement, to show that this divisional line should be established by Congress, with the assent of the government of Texas, in the first place. This seems by far the most prompt mode of proceeding by which the end can be accomplished. If judicial proceedings were resorted to, such proceedings would necessarily be slow, and years would pass by, in all probability, before the controversy could be ended; so great delay in this case is to be avoided if possible; such delay would be every way inconvenient, and might be the occasion of disturbances and collisions; for the same reason I would, with the utmost deference to the wisdom Congress, express a doubt of the expediency of the appointment of Commissioners and of examination, estimate and award of indemnity to be made by them; this would be but a species of arbitration, which might last as long as a suit at law.

So far as I am able to comprehend, the general facts are now all known, and Congress is as capable of deciding it justly and properly now, as it probably would be after the report of the Commissioners. The claim of title on the part of Texas appears to be well founded in the whole or part. It is in the competency of Congress to offer her an indemnity for the surrender of the claim. In a case like this, surrounded as it is by many cogent considerations, all calling for an amicable adjustment and immediate settlement, the government of the United States would be justified in my opinion, in allowing an indemnity to Texas, not unreasonable or extravagant, but fair, liberal, and awarded in a just spirit of accommodation. I think no event would be hailed with more gratification by the people of the United States than the amicable adjustment of these difficult questions, which have for a long time agitated the country, and occupied, to the exclusion of other subjects, the time and attention of Congress. Having thus freely communicated the result of my own reflections on the most advisable mode of adjusting this boundary question, I shall, nevertheless, cheerfully acquiesce in any other mode which the wisdom of Congress may devise—and in conclusion, I repeat my conviction, that every consideration of the public interest manifests the necessity of a provision by Congress of a settlement of this boundary question before the present session be brought to a close. The settlement of other questions connected with the same subject, within the same period, is greatly to be desired, but the adjustment of this, appears to me to be in the highest degree important. In the train of such an adjustment, we may well hope, there will follow a return of harmony and good will, an increased attachment to the Union, and the general satisfaction of the country.

The Cabinet.

A telegraphic dispatch from Washington, received yesterday, but dated the 9th inst., informs us of the completion of President Fillmore's Cabinet, by the following appointments:

Charles M. Conrad, of Louisiana, to be Secretary of War.

Thomas M. T. McKennon, of Pennsylvania, Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. Conrad is a member of the present Congress from New Orleans, is an able man, and most decided Whig.

Mr. McKennon was distinguished as a member of Congress from one of the western districts of Pennsylvania, a few years ago. His popularity, even in the highest party times, and in a district as often against the Whigs as for them, was always sufficient to ensure his election. He was frequently mentioned, before the last nominations were made, for the office of Vice-President on the Whig ticket. He is a strong tariff man, and has always had the true interest and honor of the country at heart.

James G. Wilson, the pioneer of cheap literature in this country, and for many years publisher of the Brother Jonathan, died near New York, on Wednesday week.

Jenny Lind will embark for this country on the 21st of August, accompanied by Mr. Benedict, the pianist, Herr Deichman, the violinist, and Signor Beliotti.

By a private letter, from Fort Laramie, we learn, that the mail which left that Fort about a year ago, by Picord, who was killed in the vicinity of Ash Hollow, on the south side of the Platte, has been found opposite the Fort. It was brought into the Fort in a very dilapidated condition, and has been forwarded to the Post office in this city, in the hope that the address of many of the letters may be deciphered.—[Republican.

India — A Terrific Explosion — 1,200 Persons Killed.

We have received by express our usual dispatches and papers in anticipation of the Overland Mail. The dates of the intelligence brought by this arrival are—Calcutta 13; Bombay, May 25; and Alexander, June 16:

A terrific explosion, at Benares, by which upwards of 1000 lives were lost, forms the principal topic of the present mail. A fleet of 35 boats, containing government ordinance stores, among which were 3000 bbls. (330,000 lbs.) of gunpowder, arrived at Benares, en route to the upper provinces, on the afternoon of the first of May, and were moored off the Raj Ghaut (the principal landing place of the city,) in the centre of the town. A little after 10 P. M., one of these boats caught fire, and immediately after the whole exploded, sinking all the boats near the landing place, and destroying or injuring every one within a certain range. By the latest accounts, the killed and wounded amounted to 1200, but more continually being disinterred by the 300 men at work in removing the ruins. The Ghout Hotel, the Belgium Palace, and the Mission House, are among the principal buildings destroyed, and missionary's wife and the Begum and her family are among the victims. In addition to the ordinance flotilla 40 other boats containing merchandise, belonging to European or native merchants, were sunk or destroyed: the ordinance flotilla was under charge of a warrant officer, who was absent from the boat at the time of the catastrophe. —London Times.

GOVERNMENT FINACES.—The Register of the Treasury gives the expenditures of the government from April 1st to June 30th, at $12,551,787 21, and the receipts as follows: From customs, $9 342,172 58; lands, $354,743 76; loan of 1847 (Treasury notes funded) $358,950 00; miscellaneous sources $787,513 77—total, $10, 849, 265 11. The treasurer also shows that the amount of funds subject to his draft in the different depositories, &c. on the 22d of July, was $10,198,916 of which there was at Washington, $116,423 60; Boston $2,324,049 31; New York $3 393,943 65; Philadelphia, $871,593 35; Charleston $168,210 73; New Orleans $141,029 66; St. Louis $134, 875 44; Buffalo $16,283 28; Baltimore 76 684 45; Richmond $16,597; Norfolk $4,844 70; Wilmington, N. IS now receiving a splendid lot of SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS, of every description, of the Latest Style and Patterns. And is prepared to offer Great Inducements to all who may favor him with a call. His stock comprises a general assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, and Bonnets. Also, a large and well selected assortment of Iron and nails.

My plan is to sell for CASH ONLY, and at a small advance on cost; the rate charged for goods at my store, will contrast largely with prices paid by those who buy on time. Many place an undue importance on the credit system, unmindful of the fact, that constitutes a nominal profit, yet when compared with the invariable cash system it is a positive loss.

Selling on time is hazardous under the best circumstances. Those who sell on time must buy on time. Therefore, I will say to my old customers and the public generally, that you will save much by calling and examining my Stock of Goods, before purchasing. A. SORLEY.

For the Frontier Guardian.

The Cholera.

BY E. H. R.

It comes, it comes, the dreadful curse,
The charge to angels given,
It comes again, than war 'tis worse,
A dire distressing scourge to earth,
It comes; the rod of heaven

It comes; the news like thunder peels;
Thousands by it are dying,
And man, proud man, frightened feels,
While on, and on the waster steals,
And scatters death's darts by him

'Mid flames that burn our cities out,
'Mid wars and every warning,
It comes, and yet the world will doubt,
Nor will they hear the watchman's shout;
"'Tis near the dawn of morning."

It comes; and man with all his skill
Shuns not the angel's power;
He comes to do his master's will,
And sweeps the earth of its sinful fall,
Ah! 'tis god's judgment hour.

Lines suggested on visiting a beautiful flower dell on the Plains.

Wild flowers of the Plains.

BY AMICUS.

Sweet blooming flowers far on the plains,
You mind me of my home behind,
When oft, I hope to meet my friends again,
Sweet hope, kind soother of a sorrowing mind.

Fair, lovely flowers, ye bloom unseen,
Upon the broad and pathless plains,
Your tints would far outvie, I ween,
Those reared with luxury and pains.

Grow on, sweet flower in thy wild bed,
And let the fresh wind kiss thy form,
Though it bloom when costlier flowers are dead,
Unharmed through many a prairie storm.

Bloom on wild flower in thy fair dell,
The wild bee oft thy sweets do sip;
The butterfly makes his richest meal,
Off from the honey of thy lip.

Smile on bright flower, nor cease to bloom,
Till wintry blasts have laid thee low,
Nor cease to shed thy rich perfume,
On the wild zephyrs as they blow.

Bloom smiling goddess of the plain,
To glad the wanderers weary eye,
The warbler sings to thee his strain,
The stars gaze on thee from the sky.

Fair flower still show thy heavenly light,
Thou type of blissful joys above,
Thou makest the desert fair and bright,
Emblem of pure and perfect love.

MISCELLANY.

Written for the Frontier Guardian.

The Ethereal Car.

BY CHARLIE.

About the beginning of the present century, there arose in that part of Mexico called New Spain, a sect or party known as exemplifiers. A young Spaniard who had formerly held the Catholic priesthood, and had been excommunicated for licentiousness and debauchery, was the spiritual leader of this peculiar people. He pretended to see visions, hold converse with angels and receive revelations from God. His followers reposed implicit confidence in all his sayings, and his pretended visions and revelations; his counsels were cordially obeyed, and his word acknowledged to be the word of the Lord. Romoneo's superior talents and education, gave him an unlimited sway over the minds of his deluded followers. He found little difficulty in persuading them to believe, that he held powers co-equal with the Almighty. They firmly believed that he possessed the keys of Heaven and hell; that he had power to insure eternal felicity to those that obeyed his will, or consign them to perdition for the slightest disobedience. This acknowledged superiority is what the ambitious Romoneo had secretly aspired to; his will was law, and his mandates obeyed with alacrity.

For a number of years the exemplifiers were blessed with prosperity, and the privilege of practising without molestation, the peculiar tenets of their religion; and had it not been for an occurrence which I am about to relate, they might at this day, been a numerous and prosperous people. One evening as Romoneo was returning from one of his accustomed rides in the country, he was startled from the reverie into which he had fallen by the voice of some one singing. He paused and listened. He discovered that it proceeded from an arbor in a garden, attached to a neat little cottage, a short distance from the road side. It was a female voice accompanied by a guitar. She was singing his favorite song, but with a delicious sweetness he was a stranger to. Romoneo listened with breathless silence to this enchanting melody. Such soft notes, such melting strains, he had never heard before; the mellow tones, and varied warblings of the nightingale lost their sweetness, compared with the raptuous music, that now saluted the ears of Romoneo. For a moment he listened with extatic delight, then springing from his carriage, exclaimed: "I must see this fairy songstress, she must be a fairy or an angel for no mortal being can produce such heavenly music." In a moment he had leaped the garden fence and was approaching the arbor. The entrance to the arbor, was on the side opposite to the road, so that Romeno was obliged to go quite round to the back side, before he could see the object of his curiosity. As he approached the door, he saw a female figure, reclining on a rural seat, so busily engaged with her guitar, that she did not see Romoneo, till he had sufficient time to survey her beautiful figure. The position which she occupied, disclosed her form to the best advantage. She was sitting on a rustic seat, her body resting on the elbow of her left arm, her large black eyes were fixed on her guitar; her long dark hair hung in luxuriant curls over her shoulders, partially concealing a neck as fair as alabaster; her olive tinted cheek betrayed her Creole birth; her long taper fingers touched the soft guitar, and beneath the voluptuous folds of her robes were discovered a pair of feet.

"Harmonious swelled by nature's finest hand."

The moment that she concluded her song, Romoneo entered the arbor. She started on seeing her door darkened, and quickly sprung to her feet; she betrayed no symptoms of fear, but the sudden appearance of a stranger in her arbor, surprised her. Romoneo seeing her embarrassment, thus addressed her:

"Unequalled songstress! be not frightened, I am Romoneo; as I was passing by I heard your voice singing my favorite song, and a desire to see the person that could sing so sweetly, is my apology for this intrusion. Don't think I flatter you, when I say I have discovered perfection in singing, and if it is not asking too much indulgence, let me entreat you to repeat that lovely song.

These gentle words from one she had been taught to acknowledge as her spiritual guide, at once secured her confidence. After inviting him to a seat, she again touched the mellow guitar, and ran through the song with the voice of a seraph. Romoneo listened with increased rapture to this song which he had heard a thousand times with indifference, and as he gazed on the voluptuous figure, and angelic features of the fairy songstress.

"He drew such maddening draughts of beauty to his soul,
As for awhile o'erwhelmed his raptured thoughts,
With luxury to daring."

The song was ended. The last mellow notes lingered in the ear of Romoneo as he rose to depart. Taking the hand of the songstress within his: "Tell me," said he, "by whom have I been so sweetly entertained, and promise that you will allow me to repeat the happiness I have enjoyed this evening, and I will leave you."

She replied, "My name is Lovellina, and if I can do aught that will contribute to the happiness of so great and so good a man as Romoneo, I shall take great pleasure in doing so.

"Heaven bless you," said Romoneo, and pressing to his lips the hand which he still retained, he left the arbor.

Lovellina Delano had lost both her parents when quite young; since which time she had resided with her uncle, her fathers brother. This kind uncle had no children, and all his affections were bestowed on his interesting neice, in whom he discovered more than ordinary talent and ability, and every facility for education which the country afforded he brought within her reach. By an unyielding perseverance, and an unremitting attention to study, she early acquired an education inferior to none in the country. She excelled in music, which was her chief delight. One had but to hear her sing to be convinced that she was mistress of her voice, and perfected in the art Added to a refined education, was the simplicity of her manners, and the unequalled beauty of her form and features. These desirable accomplishments, combined with an extraordinary power to please drew around the fair Lovellina a train of admirers.

Eldro En Passo, a youth of obscure birth, but possessing a strong mind and a magnanimous spirit, was the accepted suitor. He had early formed an attachment for Lovellina, which, when he had arrived at manhood had repined into avowed love, which was warmly reciprocated by the fair Lovellina. Eldro had obtained the promise of her hand, the nuptial day was appointed, and a few weeks would complete their happiness.

As soon as Romoneo left the arbor of Lovellina, he hastened home a changed man; he was perfectly enamored by the garden songstress; all his former licentiousness at once returned, and those latent passions which had for years laid dormant rankled anew in his sinful breast. He spent the entire night in devising plans to ensnare his victim. He was determined that if soft words, and artful flattery did not succeed to resort to compulsion. The following evening he early repaired to the neighborhood of the cottage garden. He was delighted to hear Lovellina already singing her evening song; and leaving his carriage with his servants, he was in a moment at the door of the arbor. As Lovellina rose to receive him, Romoneo imagined that she appeared more ravishingly beautiful, than she did the preceeding evening. Lovellina manifested much pleasure in seeing Romoneo; but little did the unsuspecting girl imagine, that while she allowed him to press her hand and lead her to a seat, that she was cherishing an adder in her bosom. After a few formal inquiries in relation to her health, Romoneo proposed that she should sing the song, that had so charmed him the preceeding evening. She cheerfully complied with his request, and ran through the song with a transporting sweetness that would have done honor to a Jenny Lind. With each swelling note the guilty passion of Romoneo, rose higher and higher, till at length, it become uncontrolable. As soon as she had completed her song, he rudely grasped her arm exclaiming:

"I can no longer endure this torture, tell me at once, will you make me the happiest of men by consenting immediately to be mine, or drive one to madness by a refusal."

This unexpected avowal, from one she had been taught to revere as a man of God, and a stranger to guilt, or even evil thoughts, greatly terrified the virtuous Lovellina, and as she turned her eyes on him, and met his licentious gaze, she uttered a cry of horror and attempted to spring from his grasp, and leave the arbor. But Romoneo was not to be so easily defeated; he caught the terrified girl in his arms, and endeavored to stifle her screams by crowding his pocket handkerchief into her mouth. Then by a preconcerted signal his two servants came to his assistance and seizing Lovellina in their brawny arms, they carried her fainting to his carriage.

When Lovellina recovered her senses, she was lying on a bed of damp straw, in a loathsome dungeon. At first she did not realize her situation; she thought it must be a dream, but a moments reflection on what had passed in her arbor at once revealed her hopless condition. She rose on her feet, and was about to see what chance of escape she might discover, when the door of her cell was opened, and Romoneo holding in his hand a burning lamp, stood before her. The glimmering light of the lamp revealed the fiendish malice depicted on his countenance. Lovellina shrunk from his lustful gaze to the opposite side of the cell.

Romoneo approached her, and seizing rudely her extended arm, thus addressed her: "Vain girl, why will you persist in opposing my wishes, you are aware that I am all powerful, and it is worse than folly to resist the purposes of Romoneo, I have you in my power;" continued he, "and in spite of your puny opposition, I might at this moment compel you to submit to my wishes; but consent to be my wedded wife, and you shall retain your virtue and save your life."

"It cannot be," exclaimed Lovellina in despair. "I am affianced to another, and I would suffer a thousand deaths rather than betray the confidence of my lover

This determined declaration of Lovellina, threw Romoneo into an uncontrolable rage: says he, "I am done, I shall importune you no more, three days and nights, you shall have to consider my offer, at the end of which time, if you still remain obstinate, you shall be led to execution, and suffer an ignominious death in presence of all my people." With these words which he uttered in tones indicative of resolution he hurried from the cell.

As soon as Romoneo had turned the key, Lovellina, after calming in a measure her agitated feelings, she arose and once more the thought of escape occurred to her mind. It was total darkness, yet she examined the walls of her cell as well as she could, feeling with her hands to see if she could not discover some opening in the wall or some loose stone that she might remove and make her escape.

After a fruitless search, she sank on her miserable bed, and resigned herself to her cruel fate. Each day preceding that of her execution, Romoneo visited her cell, sometimes trying to console her by soft words and at other times trying to intimidate her by his repeated threats. The morning of the execution, Lovellina rose from her bed of straw; and thought she would again examine the walls of her cell, and see if there was not some possible chance to escape from the prison. She examined carefully the four walls of her narrow cell, taking care to press with her hand each stone in the wall to see if it would not move, and as she was about to abandon the search as fruitless, a huge stone near the floor yielded to her pressure; this gave her new courage, and summoning all her strength to her assistance, she succeeded in removing the stone from its place in the wall, and stooping down and looking into the aperture she saw a faint light in the distance. With some difficulty she crawled through the opening into a narrow passage, so low that she could not stand upright; on her hands and knees she crept through this narrow passage, in direction of the light, and as it came nearer she found it proceeded from above, and on further examination she discovered a flight of stairs leading to the roof of the prison, which she immediately ascended. On arriving at the top of the stone steps, she found that the roof was flat, (according to the custom of the country,) and mounted on each side by a thick stone wall, several feet high, containing several openings, or sort of port holes, which led Lovellina to the opinion that the prison had at some anterior period been used as a defence against the hostility of the Indians. As Lovellina was looking about to discover some way of descending from the the roof on the outside, she was startled by the report of a cannon near the prison. She in a moment recollected that it was the custom of Romoneo, that when there was to be an execution in town, to announce it by a discharge of ordnance. This she understood to be the announcement of her own execution. At this moment she heard the sound of footsteps ascending the stone stairs, and Romoneo accompanied by the execution, appeared on the roof of the prison and was advancing to seize Lovellina, when the executioner caught the arm of Romoneo, and pointing upwards exclaimed:

"For the love of heaven, Romoneo, tell me what this means I see descending from the sky!"

Lovellina looking upwards saw something like a car descending to the roof of the prison. The next moment it was by her side, and she almost doubted her vision, as she saw her uncle, and her own Eldro En Passo steps from the car. They spoke not a word but hastily seizing the motionless Lovellina in their arms, and placing her in the car, her uncle poured a kind of gas or ether from a glass vessel, which he drew from his pocket into a brass tube which communicated with the machine, the car, arose immediately, while Romoneo and the executioner, stupified with amazement gazed motionless on the scene. As the car arose far above the lofty turrets of the prison, the rescued Lovellina waved a white scarf between her delivers, signifying defiance to her defeated persecutor. A strong south-west wind rising the car swiftly moved to the north-east, and was soon lost in the distance.

Lovellina's sudden disappearance from the arbor, much alarmed her kind uncle, who after a night of fruitless search, came to the conclusion that she had been surprised by a band of robers, who had for some time infested the country. He communicated his fears to En Passo, who immediately joined in the search for his lost Lovellina. As they entered the town early in he morning, they learned that Romoneo had confined a beautiful female in the prison, and at the end of three days was to be put to death for incurring the displeasure of Romoneo. After making some further inquiries, they came to the conclusion that this unfortunate female was no other than his lost Lovellina. How to proceed under these circumstances, they knew not, for they well understood that it was useles to try to avoid the executioner by appealing to the relentless Romoneo. They therefore returned home resolving to resort to some other means. Fortunately the idea of constructing a machine to propel through the air occurred to the ingenious mind of Mr. Delano. He well recollected from the acquaintance he had with the prison, during the recent war with the Indians, that there was a secret passage leading from the roof to each cell, and if they could construct a machine in time, to reach the prison roof before the execution, they entertained no fears but what they could effect the escape of Lovellina. By unceasing exertion, both day and night, they accomplished the machine, and Lovellina was snatched from the jaws of death, in the manner I have mentioned. The car came down in the southern part of Arkansas, and a happy man was Eldro En Passo united in matrimonial connection with the fair Lovellina; and when the frosts of age had silvered o'er the head of Uncle Delano, he found a comfortable repose in the family of his grateful neice.

The chagrin and disappointment, which the haughty Romoneo felt in being defeated in his guilty attempt to ruin Lovellina was more than he could bear. He left his devoted people without a leader, determined to seek a home where the ethereal car was an unknown vehicle.

KANESVILLE, Aug. 1, '50.

To my friends scattered up and down this Terrestial, globular, round, chubby face earth:

You are aware that a little town has grown up like Jonah's gourd in this extreme jumping off place called Kanesville; and it being so far removed from the rest of mankind that I deemed it necessary to come here myself for the benefit of my fellow beings. It took me sometime to get in among this cold hearted people, for you know all persons who drink water as a beverage are stingy, while the man who drinks at my fountain is liberal. How I love a liberal soul. Well to resume my history: I got into a small house on a treacherous creek. I stood the talkativeness of my enemies, when lo! the very elements they drank rose in the creek and washed me out. I floated down the stream, and it pained to hear my brother's, tumblers and decanters smash against the logs in the vile stream. No one lent the helping hand, for some time hope kept me up, but the bung of my anticipations flew out and scattered my vitals to the waters of oblivion. My votaries kept quiet for a time, and by and bye the man of gold came along, and under the cover that I would open for a short time I got me a small stand, and quietly ensconced myself; the emigrant poured in; presently some of my enemies came in and drank; then! then! then! I say, I arose in the majesty of my potent strength and laughed. I gave the knock down arguments in my favor, and they insensible to my favors which I poured upon them so freely; I put my polite foot in contact with their persons and sent them out to keep company with the ——. I wont say it, it is too indelicate for my polite ears.

Well to continue, for I hate to quit the subject. I was afraid while that little fat man was here, I should be obliged to shut up, but I held council with my son, and that ghost of a groggery on ——, and we determined to stick it out. I sit every day on my own bottom, and determined that every tub shall stand on its own. Laughing to see the poor dupes come into my embrace at night, and sing:

"Shades of evening come close o'er us,
Leave us here to drink awhile,
What care I for friends or home,
I've no wife or little child," &c.

I generally managed to be pretty discreet about my movements. I received great patronage at the election, and therefore hope I shall be able to stand to meet the calls of my drunken patrons. You have no idea of the trouble I feel from the watery weakness in my bowels at this time, and the length of time I last, notwithstanding I am tapped. The people do abuse me that do retail me, they pour all kinds of things into me for these cholera times. I will not rebel because of the power and place I have got. Do advise me if you can as to my future course, and tell me how you get on in all the world. I will write you again more fully. I will drink your health. Success to the trade, may her stream never run dry. I must stop, the stuff has given me the gripes. There is w——r, l——d, and such stuff; I must vomit. Your's most lovingly,

For the Curious.

As a matter of curiosity, we copy the following dream from a pamphlet entitled the "Victimizer," or life of Dr. Richard Jennings, published at Cincinnati, Ohio, last year,

The singularity of the dream, in connection with the character of the dreamer, and the peculiar characters and circumstances portrayed therein, throws a charm over it, that we are unable to fathom, and therefore leave the public to judge; perhaps they are better interpreters in such matters than we are. The narrative is said to be founded on fact.

"While I was in Washington, I was favored with a dream, or vision, I know not which; but, as there may be interpreters among those who believe in such things, I will relate it, that they may ascertain whether it is worthy of notice, and also its signification.

I saw a large tract of land floating in the air, filled with men—in the midst thereof, was built a platform, on which stood a beast with a head like unto an Owl, the arms like unto an Ape's, the body like unto an Eel, and the legs like unto a Bull Frog's. Now, from this platform were many wires, which were fastened to the joints of the men, and so constructed, that whenever they were pulled, they excited a movement among the men.

Now, I looked, and behold I saw the beast pull one of these wires, when imediately there was a running to and fro, by many of the men, who passed among the multitude, whispering in the ears of those who stood still, at the same time placing a piece of gold into their hands, which had the magical effect of producing the same movement among those who retained it. I looked again, and lo, the beast grinned an exceeding grin, after which, he pulled another wire, and immediately the people shouted three times. The beast now looked around him, to the north, and to the south, to the east and to the west—then lying flat upon his face, he again pulled another wire, and all the people dropped before him many millions of pieces of gold, upon seeing which, the beast grinned exceedingly, jumped up and down, and danced, and seemed very glad. Now, I looked again, and saw on the west, a building, which was supported upon the shoulders of many men; to these, also, wires were attached, which the beast pulled, but with no effect.

Again, I saw men dressed in white, and in red, going to and fro, trying to put each other under foot, which, the beast perceiving, he turned pale, and trembled, and like to have fainted. Now, those dressed in red conquered those dressed in white, which so reanimated the beast, that he pulled a wire, fastened to the building on the west, and shook it terribly.

And as I looked, behold this tract of land suddenly disappeared from before me, and in its place I saw another of the same size, likewise filled with men who were sitting in chairs, and who were having their heads shaved bald, and the razors wherewith they were shaved, were curiously constructed, the handles being each shaped like unto a star, and the blades each like unto a cross; and while they were being shaved, I saw others, who slily picked their pockets, and at the same time, fastened heavy chains to their feet. As soon as the people were shaved, the beast, being also in the center of this tract of land, sat down, and hiding his face in his hands, he laughed very much; after which, I saw him put a crown on his head, in the center of which was a sword, and at each corner a representation of five toes, and with which he was mightily pleased, taking it from off his head very often, to look at it, and likewise to show it to the people, who could do nothing because of the chains which were fastened to their feet.

Moreover, I looked in the west, and I saw the building was in ruins, and those who had supported it were all in commotion, on account of the barbers trying to shave them also; but they would not submit. Again I looked, and lo! there was war—the beast concealed himself in a corner, and those dressed in white attacked those who were dressed in red, and slew them to the number of fifty thousand—the beast was drawn from his hiding place, his crown was cast into a deep pit, and he was tickled under the ribs, so that he died of excessive laughing.

Now when the men in white had finished slaying, I heard a great shout, and looking thereupon, I saw descending from the heavens a building like unto the temple of Liberty, and after sailing through the air, it rested upon the platform, and destroyed it and the wires forever. I looked again and behold the whole place was filled with trees which were loaded with singing birds of all descriptions, and the music far surpassed any which I had ever heard before or after—when this was finished, the vision left me, and I saw no more.

From the cradle to the grave we are the victims of taxation. The rich man has his property tax, the sailor his ship tacks, the wig-wearer his poll tax, and even the boy, "trudging like a snail unwillingly to school," has his syntax.

When we hear a man say he cannot afford to take a paper, we are inclined to tell him that he cannot afford to do without it. A man who is really too poor to take a paper, is like a person so emaciated by famine as to be too weak to eat bread.

SELF ENERGY.—Self-energy is the true life of a man. To think by other men's thoughts, is no true living thinking; to believe by other men's belief, is no true living faith.

BY ORSON HYDE. KANESVILLE, IOWA, SATURDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 14, 1850. VOLUME II.----NUMBER 17.

Arrival of the U. S. Mail with Highly Important News from Deseret.

IMPORTANT NEWS,

ARRIVAL OF THE

MAIL FROM SALT LAKE.

Dates to August 3d, 1850.

The mail arrived from the Valley of the Great Salt Lake on Thursday evening, (Sept 12th,) under the supervision of Mr, John Greene. Matters and things in the Valley are prospering and progressing just as they should be, and as we expected all the time. The true spirit predominates and the people in that far off region are led to rejoice and give glory to the God of Israel, who led and guided them to their distant place of retreat and refuge, and they are not unmindful of his commandments.

Mr. Green had several mules stolen from him by the Indians just before he reached Laramie, leaving him with only one horse and a very heavy mail; and he could not procure any team at Laramie, for the troops stationed at that place are making preparations to leave shortly for the States, and his horse being worn down when he got to Fort Kearney, he was obliged to hire himself and the mail brought through to the Missouri river at a heavy expense. He did not come on the regular road and therefore did not meet President Hyde, or any of the companies, with the exception of Bishop Hunt's company, which he met at Laramie, getting along very well. He was accompanied through by Mr. Hollyday, of Weston, who is engaged in the mercantile business at Salt Lake City, also two servants in the service of Mr. H. Most of the letters and papers were from emigrants.

Our readers will observe by the following letter to Elder Hyde, what is lacking, help! help! is their continual cry, and our response is willing! willing! just as soon as wisdom and means opens the way. The public works are languishing for lack of the requisite assistance, and strength. They want men, faithful, energetic men, who are not afraid to live and work, and bear a hand in the rolling forth, and building up of the kingdom of God, and establishing righteousness on the earth. Hear what they say!

Great Salt Lake City, Deseret,
July 28, 1850.

DEAR BRO. ORSON HYDE,—

As the mail is expected to start to-morrow, although much crowded with business, we take this opportunity of answering your communication to us, by Thomas Williams, who arrived here in safety, June 7th; and, although our city has been crowded with swarms of hungry emigrants since the 20th of May, we had received no direct intelligence, or even a paper from the States, until the mail arrived.

The emigration poured in here in such numbers that they raised provisions to a very high price. Flour sold for one dollar per pound, which was sufficient to induce some of our speculators to sell their last morsel, and go without. Harvest commenced with the 4th of July and has continued until the present. Some of the earliest pieces of wheat were injured by a frost which occurred when it was in the blow. Since harvest flour has been selling for twenty-five dollars per hundred. The amount of grain sowed last fall and spring was immense. The great majority of the fall grain has produced an excellent crop, and the spring crop looks remarkably well. In consequence of the great amount of snow on the mountains, many of our rivers overflowed their banks, causing considerable damage to crops &c. The Jordan was several feet higher than it has been known before, and destroyed a great portion of the crops below the bridge. The crops in Weber, Utah, and Toule counties are reported to be excellent. Brother Morley who has lately visited us from San Pete, gives us flattering accounts of the prospects for an abundant harvest. Our celebration of the 24th was well attended and very interesting, the minutes of which you will find in the Deseret News. It is a general time of health with the saints, and peace and plenty and hard work, as every one has been so busy that they can hardly get time to eat or sleep. You speak about hurry and bustle at Kanesville; but if you were here, to see, feel, and realize the burdens, labors and responsibilities, which are daily, hourly, momentarily, rolling, piling, tumbling, and thundering upon us, you would at least conclude that there was no danger of our getting the gout from idleness, or too much jollity. * * *

We are in the hands of our heavenly father, the God of Abraham, and Joseph who guided us to this land; who fed the poor saints on the plain with quails; who gave his people strength to labor without bread; who sent the Gulls of the deep as saviors to preserve, (by devouring the crickets); the golden wheat for bread for his people; and who has preserved his saints from the wrath of their enemies. He is our Father and our protector; we live in his light, are guided by his wisdom, protected by his shadow and upheld by his strength. * * * *

Our public works appear to drag for want of means, and workmen; our council house is not yet enclosed. We have erected a large shop on the Temple Square for doing the blacksmithing for the public works; when completed it will put in our reach a place where we can execute all jobs necessary for the building of the Temple. We have had to make some alterations, and improvements upon the Bowery, and have been unable as yet to get our storehouse done for the public grain, provisions &c. * * * * We meet every Saturday in company with Brothers P. P. Pratt, E. T. Benson, George A. Smith and Thomas Bullock, in a room for the purpose, and lift our hearts to the Most High in prayer, for the prosperity of Israel, in which you are always, with the saints in Pottawattamie, remembered. Our earnest desire is for your welfare, and the welfare of the people that are with you.

We remain your brethren,
In the gospel of patience,
BRIGHAM YOUNG,
HEBER C. KIMBALL,
WILLARD RICHARDS.

EMIGRANTS.—Look out for stolen horses! an Indian stole a horse and a gun from our city, sold them to an emigrant. The stolen property has since been overhauled and restored, and the Indian punished, but who pays the emigrant?—[Deseret News, July 1.

Indian Fight.

July 1st. we received a long letter from John W. Jones, Capt. of the Oquaka, Ill., Company of emigrants, giving the particulars of an Indian fight at yellow creek, about eleven miles west of Bear River, on the morning of the 27th of June. We have not room for the particulars, but the principal facts have since been corroborated by Mr. A. Williams of Utah, who says that the Utah Chief, Walker, told him that he had burned six lodges of the Snakes, eleven miles west of Bear River; killed seven men and four squaws; and taken five prisoners and forty horses, in revenge for the Snakes having previously killed some of his Indians. While the captors were contending about the division, they killed all the horses. The prisoners were for sale. Walker's statements is doubtless correct, and agrees with Capt. Jones, except in length and particulars. The supposed Fight, near Weber, the following day, we think a mistake, for the above.—[Deseret News, July 1.

From the Deseret News.

G. S. L. City, July 1, 1850.

MR. EDITOR: I ask a small space in your paper, to correct an error, which, to my surprise, I have been informed, exists on the eastern side of the mountains, with regard to the reception here of the party under my command. An impression, I find, has gone abroad, not only that we were received with coldness and suspicion, but that the survey of the Great Salt Lake, which was the object of the expedition, had been forcibly opposed by the inhabitants of the Valley. How this rumor became prevalent, I am ignorant, as my official reports to the War Department, gave ground for no such impression. Let that be as it may, I take pleasure in declaring that nothing can be further from the truth. We were received by the President and Public Authorities with the greatest courtesy, both officially and personally; and will remember with gratitude the many tokens of kindness and regard we have received from them, and the citizens of the place.

Every facility has been studiously afforded us for the prosecution of our duties; instruments of science frankly and gratuitously loaned, and the able and faithful assistance obtained, from their commencement here, of a gentleman, well known as a fearless advocate of your doctrines, and a prominent and influential member of your community.

I have deemed it not improper to say thus much, to counteract an erroneous impression against a people, already burthened with too much undeserved reproach.

Very Respectfully,
Your ob't servant,
HOWARD STANSBURY,
Captain Corps Topographical Engineers, in charge of Survey of the Great Salt Lake.

From the Deseret News published June 22d, 1850.

The public works are progressing well, considering the circumstances which surround us. If the brethren would be more prompt with their labor tithing, and the farmers in the country, would bring forward their butter, cheese, eggs, vegetables, &c., as fast as they receive, it would be a great blessing to themselves and the workmen, and expedite business.

The walls of the blacksmith shop, on Temple Block, are completed; the store-house, on State House Lot, designed for the occupancy of Messrs. Livingston & Kinkade, are ready for the timbers; and the brick are now being laid for the Church store-house and store, east of the Bowery. The floors are being placed in the State House; and the best of slate is now quarrying at Utah, for the roof. The aqueduct to the Bath House is nearly completed.

Weather.

The Valley weather has been very warm the past week. Mercury at noon, in shade, on Wednesday, 100 deg. At 1 P. M. a pleasant thunder storm passed over the southern portion of the valley, a few drops falling on the city. Mercury fell to 88 deg., but immediately rose again. [July 6th.]—Deseret News.

Ordinance concerning Revenue.

A Bill concerning Revenue was read three times and passed, by the General Assembly, July 4, 1850, as follows:

Sec. 1. Be it ordained by the General Assembly of the State of Deseret, that all spirituous liquors which are offered for sale, or disposal in any way, within this State, the same shall be assessed and taxed at the rate of fifty per ct upon the selling price thereof.

Sec. 2. It is hereby made the duty of the Assessor and Collector, to assess and collect the above tax, from and after the publication of this Ordinance, in the same manner, and under the same regulations and provisions as required in the Ordinance concerning Revenue, passed Jan. 10, 1850.

Sec. 3. All Iron, Steel, Castings, Glass, Nails, Hardware, Hallowware, Glass and Queensware, Paints, Oils, Dye-Stuffs, Tea, Coffee, Sugar, Rice, Molasses, Dried Fruit, and all other Greceries, together with Medicines, Boots, Shoes, and all kinds of Leather, are hereby exempted from all and any assessment, or tax whatever.

Sec. 4. Any law or ordinance, incompatible with this, so far as relates to the articles mentioned in this Ordinance are concerned, the same is hereby repealed.

Approved, July 4, 1850.

On motion, the General Assembly adjourned to the last Saturday in August, to meet in the Legislative hall at 10 A. M.

THOMAS BULLOCK,
Clerk of Senate.

SAN PETE.—Several brethren arrived from San Pete on Tuesday bringing 34 M. Shingles, and report all well; crops late but prosperous.—[Deseret News, July 1.

The emigrants to California commenced arrriving in the Valley on the 20th of May, and there has been a continual rush. We observe that Mr. Craw's company, was among the first. Thos. S. Williams who left here on the 6th of May with the mail and a company of California emigrants, arrived at Salt Lake in 32 days, their horses and mules in good condition.

We find several communications in the Deseret News from emigrants which we shall publish as soon as convenient.

The proceedings of the 24th of July in Salt Lake we shall publish in the next number of the Guardian.

We learn that Capt Stansbury has closed the survey of Great Salt Lake.

It is feared says the Deseret News: that the Slate quarry lately discovered at Utah, is not as extensive as was at first anticipated.

The News says: a gentleman seeing the frame of a building near the State House, enquired if the house would be to let when finished, was politely informed that it was only the frame work of a carriage, now building by the Nauvoo Brass Band.

The Deseret News is a quarto sheet published weekly, and edited by Willard Richards. Price, $5 00 per year.

DAMAGES.—Two gardens were destroyed on Tuesday night by emigrants cattle, which cost them $74. Our Marshall suggests that it would be wisdom for the emigrants to camp further from the city, thereby saving their money and leaving the vegetables to grow.—[Deseret News, July 1.

Our friends at the Salt Lake complain because they do not get any papers, we would suggest to the friends to send them papers, as often as they can possibly get an opportunity.

VEGETABLES, &c. Potatoes were dug in Salt Lake City, July 4th, measuring six inches in circumference. We also observe that carrots had been pulled measuring sixteen inches in length. On the 17th of June a heavy frost was experienced in the valley, which destroyed many tender vegetables. On the night of the 14th of June considerable rain fell in the valley.

COUNTERFEITS. Many of the emigrants have attempted to pass counterfeit coin in the valley, which the people there neither wish to buy or sell and advise them to keep their bogus out of sight. Also bogus gold dust has been offered consisting only of copper.

EMIGRATION. The main California emigration passed through the valley about the middle of July.

INDEPENDENT COMPANY.—A man leading a milch cow with a small pack, passed our office yesterday, face west.—[Deseret News, July 1.

Gold is the God of this world; only whisper the word, and its worshippers fall down on their knees. Breathe it in the valley, and it is heard on the mountain top. Tell where it can be found, and millions rush to the spot faster than they would go to heaven.—[Ib.

Harvest has commenced: many small pieces of wheat have been cut this week. [July 6th.]—Deseret News.

From the Deseret News July 29, 1850.

The Bowery was crowded last Sabbath; many stranger present. The assembly were addressed in the morning, by the Rev. G. B. Day, of Shermon, St. Joseph Co., Michigan, on his way to the mines. We were not present till near the close, but understood he spoke well, Mr. Day is in good health and spirits. Elder P. P. Pratt followed with an interesting lecture—P. M. The Sacrament administered by the Bishops, interpersed with remarks by Elder George A. Smith.

Afterwards, President Young made some remarks to those who never heard a testimony from a Latter-day Saint; a synopsis of which we hear present:—

"Were it not for the veil of darkness that is over the face of the earth, and that man is fallen form the glory which he once enjoyed, all would be living in the sunshine of revelation: it is on account of sin entering into the world, that causes all this darkness, and which makes it necessary for the Lord to speak from the heavens, send his angels to converse with men, and cause his servants to testify of the things of God.

"The sound of the gospel always carried terror with it, to the man-made preacher in his pulpit, the lawyer at his desk, the farmer at his plough, and the mechanic at his trade.

"Can you make the distinction between truth and evil? Is the power of the Holy Ghost upon you? If so, you need not fear all the delusion that all the earth or hell can produce.

"If any one should ask the sectarian preachers of the day, where God lives, how he looks, or what is the appearance of his palace, could they answer the question correctly? No, they could not! Has God an eye? Their reply would be, he is all eye, all ear, all mouth, all hand, all feet. This is a mass of nonsense to me. Shall I tell you where God lives? The place of his habitation is in the centre of his kingdoms. This world is but a speck in his kingdom; but a mighty black one. There is but one God to us, who is the father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and he is our elder brother, and is the heir of this kingdom, when purified and celestialized. Tell them, we are the children of the father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Do not the Scriptures tell us, that Jesus said, he is the God and father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the father of our spirits? There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth it understanding! Our Father lives in the midst of his kingdoms, and Jesus tells us to call no man on earth, father, for we have one in heaven. You know he said to Mary, 'he is my father and your father, my God and your God!' The Lord made us just as we should be, and prepared all things to bring us back into his presence.

"Ten years ago, it was called heresy for Joseph Smith to be a money digger, and receive revelations; it actually became treason; and the people killed him for it: and now I see hundreds of reverend gentlemen going to dig money. I despise a man who wont dig for gold; he is a lazy man, and intends to sponge on others. Do not think that I blame you; all I have to say is, that you have to follow in the wake of 'Old Joe Smith,' and paddle away to dig gold; it is a comic, novel thing to me.

"We have been driven here, we have made two crops, and there are hundreds of emigrants now coming here, destitute: I say to you Latter-day Saints, let no man go hungry from your doors; divide with them and trust in God for more; and those who have a manly spirit, will give us their blessings. I say treat every man kindly, and especially if there is any prospect of helping them on their journey. Emigrants, don't let your spirits be worn down; and shame be to the door where a man has to go hungry away. Gentlemen, we cannot give you much for your work until after harvest; after that time we can supply your wants. Friends, help us to gather our harvest, and then you shall have what you want, and you can then go and gather riches. There is one class of people who know our past ill treatment, and they go trembling to the doors of my brethren, who feel as though they would give any thing for a cup of warm drink. I say, walk up strangers! and if any are hungry, feed them a meal, and let them go to those who have to sell; and may the Lord bless you brethren: Amen."

From the Deseret News.

On Sunday, July 14, the Bowery was completely crowded with the Saints and emigrants, who listened to a faithful discourse by Elder Samuel D. Richards on the first principles of the gospel.

President H. C. Kimball then rose and bore testimony to the truth of the remarks by Bro. Samuel; he then said, this people is an industrious, honest and virtuous people, and desire to keep the commandments of God, we all work here, priests and people; we are happy and are glad to see our friends from the United States. If it had not been for the priests of the day, you would all have been Mormons at this very moment, and I do not want you to blame me for telling you.

President Brigham Young rose and said:—I have but a few minutes to occupy, and I wish to preach several discourses in abstract sentences. All men are inclined to be religious, whether they know it or not: all are inclined to reverence and adore something, although many profess to be irreverent and irreligious. We try to practice religion, but we are not perfect, and yet we may say, many are as perfect as they can be in all sects, not only in the Protestant and Catholic, but in the Pagan and Heathen nations also; they do the very best they know how, and that makes them as perfect in their sphere as God is in His.

If the law had not come to Saul of Tharshish, sin would not have revived in him; so when light comes, heresy, false principles, and every thing else, are made manifest;—when a man forsakes his evil, and then does right the rest of his life, he will be blest, and owned of the Lord.

I want to say to every man, the Constitution of the United States, as formed by our fathers, was dictated, was revealed, was put into their hearts by the Almighty who sits enthroned in the midst of the heavens; although unknown to them, it was dictated by the revelations of Jesus Christ, and I tell you in the name of Jesus Christ, it is as good as I could ever ask for.

The next thing is, I dare raise my voice against wickedness in high places; and if the President, the Senate, the House of Representatives will do wickedly, I will tell them of their sins, as I would the poorest gold digger who goes with his pack on his back; for rest assured, in the latter days that offences must come but woe unto them by whom they come.

I say unto you, magnify the laws! the is no law in the United States, or in the Constitution, but I am ready to make honorable; and I declare in the Presence of God, and all holy angels, and all good men and even the devils in hell, that I never have transgressed any of them. If Governor Boggs had not ordered out the troops, we should have whipped all the mob that came against us, yet if poor old Boggs himself was to come here, I would feed him, lodge him for the night, and help him on his way.

I see a large community here, and now declare that we will show that we will have the best schools, and the best literature on the earth; and even then we will make improvements.

I say unto you, farmers, keep your wheat, for I forsee if you are not careful, starvation will be on our heels; preserve your grain, lest you suffer; preserve every kernel, and if we are prudent, we will have enough. If a man wants to enable him to go on his journey, let him work; and that will be mutualy benefiting each other. If any man will take in emigrants horses into the Big Field for fifty cents a day, he will rue it; for I say that the grain SHALL be preserved, and you millers, you have no right to sell your flour to the emigrants, to feed horses and miles, and rob this people of their bread: What! sell bread to the man who is going to earn his one hundred and fifty dollars a day, at the same price as you do to the poor laborer, who works hard here for one dollar a day? I say, you men who are going to get gold to make golden images, have your golden gods fixed up in your pulpits, pay for your flour.

You who have lived here, you know better! have you forgotten that two of our brethren died from eating poisonous greens, when they could not get a particle of bread to eat! We have always told the emigrants, that we are not able to supply them; don't depend on this settlement for your supplies; we cannot make this a garden of Eden in one or two years: I say unto every man, when you write to your friends, tell them to bring their supplies, and do not depend on this place for your bread. We are informed by many of the emigrants, that A. W. Babbitt told them, they could get their supplies here, which is palpably not true; for Almon W. Babbitt was told positively that we could not supply the emigrants with food; but we had to divide the bread which we had for our own families, last year, with them, to keep them alive; and we shall have to do the same this year; and we publish to all travellers, that when we are able to supply them, and they can depend upon this place for their supplies, that we will notify them, and then they may rely on obtaining their food, and not be disappointed as many are, this season.

When a stranger comes here, tell him where his teams may recruit, and if you will not give the strangers good counsel, you are not fit for good society.

I add no more—may the blessing of God rest upon you all: amen.

Self Reliance.

BY RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

"Man is his own star; and the soul that can
Render an honest and a perfect man,
Commands all light, all influence, all fate;
Nothing to him falls early or too late.
Our acts our angels, or good, or ill,
Our fatal shadows that walk by us still."

To believe your own thought, to believe that what is true for you in your private heart, is true for all men—that is genius. Speak your talent conviction, and it shall be universal sense; for the inmost is due time becomes the outmost—and our first thought is rendered back to us by the trumpets of the Last Judgment. Familiar as the voice of the mind is to each, the highest merit we ascribe to Moses, Plato, and Milton is, that that they set at naught books and traditions, and spoke not what men but what they thought. A man should learn to detect and watch that gleam of light which flashes across his mind from within, more than the lustre of the firmament of bards and sages. Yet he dismisses without notice his thought, because it is his. In every work of genius we recognize our own rejected thoughts: they come back to us with a certain alienated majesty. Great works of art have no more affecting lesson for us than this. They teach us to abide by our spontaneous impression with good humored inflexibility the most when the whole cry of voices is on the other side. Else, to-morrow a stranger will say with masterly good sense precisely what we have thought and felt all the time, and we shall be forced to take with shame our own opinion from another.
